On this resolution I wish to offer a few remarks. We have been engaged about two weeks in the discussion of the proper basis of representation and apportionment among the several counties of the commonwealth. I am emboldened to offer this resolution from the fact, that if it is adopted, to the exclusion of the basis of free white inhabitants, it injures my immediate constituency as much, if not more, than that of any other delegate on this floor. I have been figuring pretty extensively to see what peculiar benefits would accrue to my region of country by the adoption of the basis contained in the resolution of the gentleman from Simpson; and I find the mountain counties, except two, will be entitled to a separate representative in the lower branch of the next legislature. At the first blush, I was inclined to the opinion that it was right and proper that that basis should be adopted. And I now must be permitted to say I am not convinced its adoption would be improper, or that the basis is not the true basis in all free and well organized governments. I know we have the precedents of many state governments for its adoption. But, as the people are not familiarized with it, and as I would do nothing calculated to be the slightest drawback to the constitution we shall make, I should be unwilling to see this new basis adopted; for I care not whatever benefits might accrue to my own region of country, I trust I shall not overlook the interests of the whole state. Whilst I know it would benefit my own section of country, I am sure it would injure the largest and most wealthy portion of the state; and I feel assured if we were to adopt this basis, that in the large or blue grass counties, it would sink any constitution we might frame, so that it would never be resurrected again.

I have examined the report of the committee on the legislative department, and I find that the old basis of representation is departed from, to some extent, and a new basis, or rather a different basis from that which has obtained heretofore in Kentucky, has been adopted. According to the new rules of apportionment adopted in the report of the committee, the smallest counties, or the counties next to the smallest class in this state, I admit, are to be benefitted to some extent. But I wish the convention to bear in mind the benefits which are to accrue to the smaller counties. There are thirteen large counties having twenty nine representatives, and they are to have one representative for every 1,198 voters within those counties. They gain, on the present mode of representation, two hundred and eighteen voters for each representative, and four hundred and eighty six for each county, included in the large class. If the report of the committee was adopted, what would be the effect on the large counties? The thirteen large counties have two members each, and upwards. Instead of twenty nine members they will have twenty two, and instead of gaining two hundred and eighteen voters for each member, and four hundred and eighty six for each county and a representative for 1,198 voters, they will lose one hundred and sixty four voters to each member, three hundred and one in each county, and will still have a member for every 1,580 voters each county may contain. This looks to me more like justice, and it is certainly more in accordance with the rights of numbers. Now the apportionment according to the number of qualified voters in the state, as set forth in the auditor's report for 1848, will be fourteen hundred and sixteen for one representative. The larger counties will still have a representative for 1,580 voters.

I think there is a little injustice in the matter; but for the purpose of compromising the whole matter, and closing this protracted and unprofitable discussion, let us adopt the report of the committee, which has been well matured. It gives general satisfaction and does equal justice to every portion of the commonwealth. I have offered the resolution as a test question, and I ask the convention to manifest its feeling in reference to the principle contained in the report of the committee. We can do it at once, and settle the matter.

If the convention adopt the resolution, it is evidence that they will adopt the report of the committee, and thus put an end to this exciting debate.

Mr. MACHEN. It seems to me that if we should adopt the resolution of the gentleman from Knox, (Mr. Woodson,) this body would be presented to the country in rather a farcical attitude. Two or three days since we adopted a resolution, that population should be the basis of representation. Notice has been given, under the rules of this house, that a reconsideration of the vote by which that resolution was adopted, would be moved. The gentleman now comes in with a resolution, and asks this house to adopt it, asserting an entirely different basis for representation, leaving the other resolution upon our journal, sustained by an overwhelming majority. Now, sir, which of the two shall prevail? If his resolution is adopted, I suppose the squabble will then come up as to which one of the two antagonistic resolutions expresses the sense of the house. The gentleman's views upon the proper basis of representation seem to have undergone a change, and his more mature judgment brings him back to that under which we have lived for fifty years past.

I wish, sir, to submit to this house a few of the reasons which governed me in casting my vote, when the resolution now sought to be rendered void was adopted, and which will still govern me in my course in this house. And, as the best argument that can be presented is that based upon facts, demonstrated by figures, I will ask the particular attention of members to the following table, taken from the census of 1840. This is certainly the best source from which we can draw information upon this subject.

In this table I have divided the population into three classes. The first column contains all those under twenty years of age; the second, all the males twenty years old and upwards; the third, all the females twenty years old and upwards; and the fourth the aggregate, made up of the three classes. I have placed the population of the city of Louisville at the head of the table, and have made up the table by grouping adjacent counties of similar character in soil and production, and have, by these groups or blocks, succeeded, as I believe, in fairly representing the population of every portion of the state.

TABLE

OF

Comparative population in different sections of the State, as shown by Census of 1840.

Counties, Cities, &c.	Children under 20 years old	Males 20 years old and upward	Females 20 years old and upward	Total free white population.
Louisville City, -	7,940	5,341	3,880	17,161
Adair, - -	4,060	1,358	1,351	6,770
Allen, - -	3,957	1,248	1,170	6,375
Barren, - -	7,816	2,704	2,627	13,147
	15,834	5,310	5,148	26,292

Bracken, - -	3,655	1,271	1,167	6,093
Pendleton, - -	2,335	938	742	4,015
Harrison, - -	4,976	1,784	1,692	8,452
Nicholas, - -	4,256	1,531	1,523	7,310
	15,222	5,524	5,124	25,870
Bourbon, - -	4,188	1,093	1,671	7,852
Clark, - -	3,862	1,450	1,443	6,755
Jessamine, - -	3,282	1,311	1,217	5,810
Woodford, - -	3,198	1,380	1,238	5,816
	14,530	6,134	5,569	26,233
Nelson, - -	5,030	1,944	1,894	8,868
Shelby, - -	6,224	2,650	2,352	11,266
Spencer, - -	2,043	1,037	970	4,650
	13,937	5,631	5,216	24,784
Caldwell, - -	4,857	1,678	1,557	8,091
Hopkins, - -	4,611	1,496	1,330	7,437
Livingston, - -	4,265	1,742	1,351	7,358
Trigg, - -	3,338	1,173	1,103	5,614
	17,070	6,089	5,341	28,500
Wayne, - -	4,269	1,271	1,214	6,754
Clinton, - -	2,247	714	713	3,674
Cumberland, - -	2,798	902	868	4,568
Pulaski, - -	5,290	1,680	1,612	8,582
Russell, - -	2,350	742	735	3,827
	16,954	5,309	5,142	27,405
Henderson, - -	3,571	1,466	1,144	6,181
Daviess, - -	3,735	1,402	1,195	6,332
Ohio, - -	3,529	1,143	1,076	5,748
Union, - -	2,956	1,265	892	5,113
	13,791	5,276	4,307	23,374
Washington, - -	4,756	1,596	1,548	7,900
Marion, - -	5,031	1,672	1,637	8,340
Franklin, (town excluded,) - -	2,958	1,210	1,031	5,199
Anderson, - -	2,605	924	843	4,371
	15,350	5,402	5,059	25,812
Calloway, - -	5,569	1,679	1,592	8,840
Graves, - -	4,157	1,284	1,203	6,644
Hickman, - -	4,462	1,571	1,312	7,345
McCracken, - -	2,427	892	745	4,064
	16,615	5,426	4,852	26,893
Christian, - -	5,596	2,059	1,836	9,491
Todd, - -	3,509	1,330	1,231	6,070
Logan, - -	4,802	1,877	1,800	8,479
	13,907	5,266	4,867	24,040
Madison, - -	6,242	2,537	2,161	11,040
Garrard, - -	4,105	1,527	1,476	7,108
Lincoln, - -	3,757	1,423	1,400	6,582
	14,204	5,489	5,037	24,730
41 counties, Total, each class,	167,414	60,856	55,662	283,932

To have increased the population of males twenty years old, and over, in the above counties, to the same proportion of Louisville, with the whole population would, instead of 60,856, have given 88,309—near 50 per cent. The above counties were entitled to 45 or 49 members. If males, over twenty years old, had governed, they would have been reduced in proportion to Louisville, to 34 members.

In 1840, Louisville had a small fraction over one twenty fourth part of the male population of the state of twenty years old and over. She had one forty fourth part of the children under twenty years old, and one twenty ninth part of the female population. She had one thirty fifth part of the free white population.

The population was then divided as follows:
Males, 20 years old, and over, - - - 127,990
Females, 20 years old, and over, - - - 114,994
Children, under 20 years old, - - - 347,279

Total, - - - - - 590,263

By her commissioner's return in 1848, Jefferson county was entitled to one twenty eighth part of the representation. By the clerk's return for the same year, to one twenty first part; and by commissioner's return for 1849, to one sixteenth part.

The above table may not, in all particulars, be exactly correct, but approximates so near to it, that for all practical purposes it may be relied on with confidence.

Mr. President: The above table speaks for itself and needs but little comment. The blue grass region of the state has nothing, as I conceive, to fear from this change. There is no basis of apportionment that can be adopted (unless property be made that basis,) by which she can retain the full amount of representation which she now has. The mountain region, and southern portion of the state, are rapidly increasing in population and must draw a part of the representation from the centre. This plan will give to the country the full force of population, and, to some extent, keep up the equilibrium between it and the cities on the border.

Mr. APPERSON. The subject of the apportionment of representation, including the basis of representation in the legislature, was passed over by consent, some days ago, and it was not expected that the attention of the convention would have been called to them again until the sixth section of the report on the legislative department should be considered; but suddenly this morning, my friend from Knox sprung the subject into the convention, by way of resolution. This was wholly unlooked for, and out of the order in which every one had supposed the business would have been conducted. But, Mr. President, as the resolution has brought the subject up, I must be permitted to say, that no sufficient reason has been presented to my mind for changing the basis of representation from "duly qualified voters" to "white population." No such question was ever made, so far as I know or have ever heard. No complaints have ever been heard, as being made by the people, that they desire so fundamental a change in the constitution; and indeed, I am fully persuaded that were we to consult the people, we should hear, from one extremity of the commonwealth to the other, that the basis of representation upon the number of duly qualified voters, is the true basis, and the only one that they desire. Why propose a change, when no such change has been asked for by the people? I hope that the basis of representation will continue the same in the constitution which we are about to form as it is in the old one. I hope no radical innovations will be made, except such as public sentiment has pointed out—that the material alterations which the country has required will be made, and other material points will be left untouched. Let us not launch forth upon the ocean of experiment, but speedily reform the obnoxious portions of the old constitution, and submit the result of our labors to the people, for their ratification or rejection.

I desire now to call the attention of the convention to the resolution which I heretofore submitted, and which has been printed and now lies on the desks of delegates. I announced heretofore, that at the appropriate time I would offer the proposition embodied in that resolution as a substitute for the sixth section of the legislative report. My proposition is, to lay off the state into four representative districts. The first district will be entitled to twenty-six members in the house of representatives, the second to twenty-five, the third to twenty-five, and the fourth to twenty-four. If gentlemen desire it, the county of Whitley can be taken from the first and put into the third, and the county of Grayson taken from the third and put into the fourth. Should this be done, then each district will be entitled to the same number of representatives. In this state of case, as no residuums are to be taken from any county in one district to any county in another, the first district will have voters enough for the twenty-five representatives, and just one voter more to each representative. The second district will lack only five voters for each representative, to reach the ratio. The third district will have eleven votes over the ratio, to each representative, and the fourth will have twenty-one votes more than the ratio, to each representative. Exact equality is not to be expected, and I think it would be difficult to approximate nearer to it than has been done by my mode of apportionment. I lay down a positive rule by which the apportionment of representation is to be made, but do not confine residuums to counties immediately adjacent, but take them through the district and give the member to that county having the greatest number of voters under the ratio, and which is so situated as not to be united to another county in opposition to another principle. To illustrate my principle, I will take the counties of Lawrence and Carter, one of which will, most probably, get a separate representative. Lawrence has 956 voters, and Carter only 908; yet the latter would get the representative, because Greenup, Lewis, and Morgan will all have a separate representative, and there is no small county to which to attach Carter; whereas, Lawrence joins the small county of Johnson, and they can be united for representation. It might, however, turn out that Floyd would get the separate representative, and in that event Carter and Lawrence would continue together. This would depend upon the number of voters, and also the fact whether Pike and Johnson lie so as to be united in a district. Estill and Morgan would each have a separate representative, although the adjacent counties have but small residuums; but the counties of Bath, Harrison, Bourbon, and so forth, would be taken to those weaker counties.

By another principle in my proposition the small county of Hancock will obtain a separate representation. This however, occurs, because all the counties which are adjacent to her have the full ratio and some of them large residuums. It is not doing justice to a county which has the full ratio, to attach a small county to her without giving them, united, any greater representative strength than the one had. The county of Ohio has nearly one hundred votes more than the ratio, and yet if Hancock should not be represented alone, she would have to be united with Ohio, she being the weakest of all the counties adjacent to Hancock. The ratio of representation which I have assumed is 1416, as I adopt the auditor's last report of the number of voters in the state. With Whitley retained, there are 36,351 voters in the first district; if she should be taken to the third, there are 35,430 voters. In the second district there are 35,278. In the third including Whitley and excluding Grayson, there are 35,683 voters; and in the fourth district, including Grayson, there are 35,947 voters.

The residuums should be represented some where, and to avoid all difficulties, a principle is laid down in my proposition to govern future legislation. My figures may not be exactly correct, but if there be any errors they are very inconsiderable.

Mr. IRWIN. I had not intended to have made a single remark on this subject of representation, or of the basis of representation, because I saw that in any event Logan must lose a member, but on this question of the "free white population" being the basis of representation, I have made some tables which may be, perhaps, useful to the convention, in coming to a correct conclusion as to what basis shall be adopted. I do this for another consideration. I am clearly of the opinion, that the report of the committee is unjust, and unequal, and that the house should not adopt it; it is especially unjust to Logan, to Nelson, and counties of that size. My first object is to prove (which I think I can do,) that by adopting the free white basis, you will throw the weight of representation on the Tennessee border. I have taken the entire line of counties on the Ohio border, and I find that the increase of children over the voting population is not so large as the middle line; and that the middle tier of counties do not increase so rapidly, as the line of counties on the Tennessee border. I will read the tables which I have prepared.

OHIO BORDER—1847.

	Voters.	Children.
McCracken, - -	603	919
Livingston, - -	822	909
Union, - - -	1,300	573
Henderson, - -	1,476	1,860
Daviess, - - -	1,751	2,031
Hancock, - - -	523	740
Breckinridge, -	1,689	1,969
Meade, - - -	1,096	1,412
Bullitt, - - -	1,130	1,406
Jefferson, - -	6,737	7,406
Oldham, - - -	1,038	1,240
Carroll, - - -	846	1,113
Gallatin, - - -	786	829
Campbell, - - -	1,282	1,927
Kenton, - - -	2,089	2,722
Boone, - - -	1,863	1,872
Pendleton, - -	1,214	1,049
Bracken, - - -	1,510	1,755
Mason, - - -	2,729	2,838
Lewis, - - -	1,232	1,653
Greenup, - - -	1,582	1,665
	33,098	37,888

The increase is about  $14\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

MIDDLE COUNTIES—1847.

	Voters.	Children.
Hopkins, - - -	1,751	2,582
Muhlenburg, - -	1,477	1,873
Ohio, - - -	1,463	1,969
Grayson, - - -	1,075	1,617
Nelson, - - -	1,967	2,017
Washington, - -	1,672	2,403
Anderson, - - -	998	1,474
Woodford, - - -	1,244	1,222
Fayette, - - -	2,603	2,119
Bourbon, - - -	1,819	1,510
Nicholas, - - -	1,587	2,100
Fleming, - - -	2,321	2,720
	19,977	23,606

Here the increase is about 20 per cent.

TENNESSEE BORDER—1847.

	Voters.	Children.
Pike, - - -	781	1,301
Perry, - - -	457	706
Whitley, - - -	985	1,451
Wayne, - - -	1,436	2,545
Clinton, - - -	769	1,234
Cumberland, - -	985	1,398
Monroe, - - -	1,152	1,719
Allen, - - -	1,228	2,103
Simpson, - - -	952	1,312
Logan, - - -	2,047	2,537
Todd, - - -	1,322	1,954
Christian, - - -	2,086	2,321
Trigg, - - -	1,337	1,865
Calloway, - - -	1,269	1,902
Graves, - - -	1,525	2,529
Fulton, - - -	602	775
Hickman, - - -	633	893
Floyd, - - -	920	1,631
Lawrence, - - -	877	1,514
	21,363	30,696

The increase is about 45 per cent.

The largest increase of children is in

	Voters.	Children.
Rockcastle, - -	790	1,120
Laurel, - - -	715	1,122
Knox, - - -	1,036	1,614
Harlan, - - -	631	1,009
Clay, - - -	697	1,214
	3,869	6,069

Now sir, the committee on the legislative department have made an arrangement by which the state is to have one hundred members in the lower house, and have adopted the principle that when a small county shall have a fraction over two thirds of the ratio, the county shall have a member; but when they come to carry out the principle, and apply it to the larger class of counties, they provide that the county shall have the ratio and a fraction over two thirds, or she shall have but one member. Now let us suppose that the ratio by the committee's report will be 1,500. If a county, according to the committee's bill, have 1,001, she will be entitled to one member. Now, take a large county and if it has 2,499 voters, it can have but one member, according to the committee's plan.

Now sir, this is manifestly unjust. If 1,001 voters in a small county are to have a member, surely a large county, with 2,002 voters ought to have an equal right. Now if the committee have adopted the principle for large counties, that they should have a ratio and three eighths of a ratio, it would have placed the large counties upon a footing of equality with the small counties. Equality, justice, and a fair consideration of the position of the largest class of counties is all that I want.

The committee have divided the state into four classes of counties; and you will see that there is manifest injustice in the application of the principle of the committee's bill.

The first class of counties, thirty two in number, representing 39,626 voters, get 32 representatives, and they are as follows:

Allen,	Jessamine,	Monroe,
Anderson,	Knox,	Morgan,
Boyle,	Larue,	Oldham,
Bullitt,	Lewis,	Pendleton,
Carter,	Lincoln,	Simpson,
Crittenden,	Montgomery,	Spencer,
Calloway,	Union,	Todd,
Grant,	Woodford,	Taylor,
Grayson,	Wayne,	Trigg,
Green,	Whitley,	Trimble,
Hart,	Meade,

The above counties have 39,626 voters, and have 32 representatives.

The second class of counties are

Adair,	Franklin,	Mercer,
Bracken,	Graves,	Marion,
Breckinridge,	Greenup,	Nicholas,
Boone,	Garrard,	Nelson,
Bath,	Hopkins,	Henderson,
Campbell,	Henry,	Muhlenburg,
Caldwell,	Harrison,	Scott,
Clarke,	Bourbon,	Washington,
Daviess,	Logan,	Owen,

The above 27 counties represent 50,543 voters, and they get 27 members.

The third class of counties are

Louisville city,	Madison,	Henry,
Barren,	Mason,	Christian,
Fayette,	Jefferson,	Warren,
Hardin,	Pulaski,
Kenton,	Shelby,

Now the above 12 counties have only 37,885 voters, and yet they get 27 representatives. I would ask is this just? Is it right that 37,885 voters shall have the same power as 50,543 voters? Surely not. There is a difference of nearly 13,000 voters, and the same difference should exist in the representation.

In the application of principles, when all the circumstances are equal, I hope the house will not give an advantage to the small counties that cannot be participated in by the large counties. It will operate against the adoption of this new constitution we are about making, and which I hope will be made satisfactory to the country.

I shall vote for the free population basis; but I am induced to favor its principles, because the committee's bill I consider manifestly unjust. If the committee would strike out "two thirds," and insert "three eighths," as it would be an equivalent basis, I shall be better satisfied with the report.

Mr. GARRARD. The gentleman from Logan, if I understand, wishes to alter the basis of representation so that a ratio and three-eighths shall entitle a county to two members. If I recollect the gentleman's position, this would include Logan, and would injure that class of counties of which he has complained. He does not complain of the present apportionment under which this house is constituted. By that apportionment there are twenty seven counties having an aggregate vote of 46,307, which have one member each, making the average vote to each member, 1,733. There are thirteen other counties and the city of Louisville, having an aggregate of 34,328 voters and twenty nine members of the legislature. This agrees with the report of the committee, except that, by the gentleman's table, Logan will be entitled to two members.

With regard to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Knox, in relation to altering representation, I am in the condition of many of my friends, disposed to take back my vote on that subject. I think the country will be better satisfied to have representation based upon the number of qualified voters. I would suggest to my friend from Knox, therefore, to withdraw his resolution and let the question of reconsideration be taken.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I do not wish to prevent the gentleman from Knox having a vote taken on his resolution; but if he will allow me, I will move to lay it on the table for the present, with a view to take up the sixth section of the legislative report.

Mr. WOODSON. I have no particular desire to press my resolution. My object was to bring the convention to a direct vote, supposing they were prepared to do so. If the object can be attained more expeditiously by adopting the suggestion of the gentleman, I have no objection.

The resolution was accordingly laid on the table.

Mr. DESHA offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the house of representatives shall consist of one hundred members, and to secure uniformity and equality of representation, the state is hereby laid off into ten districts.

District No. 1, shall consist of the counties of:

Ballard, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	728
Calloway, -	-	1,206
Caldwell, -	-	1,860
Crittenden, -	-	947
Graves, -	-	1,576
Hickman, -	-	656
Hopkins, -	-	1,813
Livingston, -	-	808
Marshall, -	-	824
McCracken, -	-	742
Trigg, -	-	1,381
Union, -	-	1,264
Fulton, -	-	631
		<hr/> 14,436 <hr/>

District No. 2, shall consist of the counties of:

Breckinridge, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,745
Butler, -	-	875
Christian, -	-	2,138
Daviess, -	-	1,933
Edmonson, -	-	647
Grayson, -	-	1,127
Hancock, -	-	560
Meade, -	-	1,022
Henderson, -	-	1,467
Muhlenburg, -	-	1,539
Ohio, -	-	1,510
		<hr/> 14,563 <hr/>

District No. 3, shall consist of the counties of:

Allen, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,413
Barren, -	-	2,939
Hart, -	-	1,345
Logan, -	-	2,016
Monroe, -	-	1,230
Simpson, -	-	924
Todd, -	-	1,383
Warren, -	-	2,131

13,381

District No. 4, shall consist of the counties of:

Adair, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,507
Boyle, -	-	1,136
Casey, -	-	938
Clinton, -	-	807
Gumberland, -	-	971
Green, -	-	1,340
Lincoln, -	-	1,436
Pulaski, -	-	2,305
Russell, -	-	919
Taylor, -	-	1,025
Wayne, -	-	1,426

13,810

District No. 5, shall consist of the counties of:

Anderson, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,086
Bullitt, -	-	1,165
Hardin, -	-	2,384
Larue, -	-	981
Marion, -	-	1,768
Mercer, -	-	2,125
Nelson, -	-	2,007
Spencer, -	-	1,007
Washington, -	-	1,770

14,293

District No. 6, shall consist of the counties of:

Clay, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	750
Estill, -	-	1,011
Floyd, -	-	961
Garrard, -	-	1,563
Harlan, -	-	661
Knox, -	-	1,091
Laurel, -	-	777
Letcher, -	-	365
Madison, -	-	2,566
Owsley, -	-	566
Perry, -	-	463
Pike, -	-	807
Rockcastle, -	-	802
Whitley, -	-	1,021
Breathitt, -	-	590

13,994

District No. 7, shall consist of the counties of:

Carroll, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	923
Gallatin, -	-	813
Henry, -	-	1,849
Jefferson and Louisville, -	-	6,774
Oldham, -	-	1,073
Trimble, -	-	994
Shelby, -	-	2,317

14,743

District No. 8, shall consist of the counties of:

Bourbon, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,773
Fayette, -	-	2,584
Franklin, -	-	1,723
Jessamine, -	-	1,325
Owen, -	-	1,674
Scott, -	-	1,839
Woodford, -	-	1,255

12,172

District No. 9, shall consist of the counties of:

Bath, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,823
Carter, -	-	908
Clarke, -	-	1,719
Fleming, -	-	2,311
Greenup, -	-	1,597
Lawrence, -	-	956
Lewis, -	-	1,336
Morgan, -	-	1,225
Montgomery, -	-	1,398
Johnson, -	-	570

13,843

District No. 10, shall consist of the counties of:

Boone, -	(Legal voters for 1848.)	1,865
Bracken, -	-	1,586
Campbell, -	-	1,447
Grant, -	-	1,098
Harrison, -	-	2,060
Kenton, -	-	2,560
Mason, -	-	2,845
Nicholas, -	-	1,713
Pendleton, -	-	1,210

16,384

RECAPITULATION OF DISTRICTS.

First District, 14,436, ten members, and a fraction of 276.

Second District, 14,303, ten members, and a fraction of 143.

Third District, 13,381, nine members, and a fraction of 637.

Fourth District, 13,810, nine members, and a fraction of 1,066.

Fifth District, 14,293, ten members, and a fraction of 133.

Sixth District, 13,995, nine members, and a fraction of 1,251.

Seventh District, 14,743, ten members, and a fraction of 583.

Eighth District, 12,173, eight members, and a fraction of 845.

Ninth District, 13,844, nine members, and a fraction of 1,100.

Tenth District, 16,384, eleven members and a fraction of 808.

The number of representatives shall, in the several years of making these enumerations, be apportioned among the ten several districts, proportioned to each according to their respective representative population. And the legislature, in apportioning the representatives to each district, shall be governed by the following rules:

[ Rules to be supplied. ]

When a new county shall be formed of territory belonging to more than one district, that county shall be added to, and form a part of, that district having the least number of representative population.

Mr. DESHA. In submitting that proposition, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am not governed by any selfish or political motives. I believe, as I said the other day, that the method of laying off the state into a certain number of districts is best, and the greater the number of districts the better, in order to provide that the different localities of the state may be fairly represented according to the respective numbers embraced in each district. I have laid off these districts into the ten congressional districts, with two exceptions. The reasons for these exceptions I think will be obvious to this house. The first exception is that of the county of Gallatin, which belongs to the tenth district, but which I have added to the seventh, for this reason, that the counties of Gallatin and Carroll are both small counties, neither of them being entitled to a separate representative. They are so situated, with respect to surrounding counties, that neither could be attached to any other so as to entitle it to a representative. Hence I have thrown them together. The other change is in the north-eastern part of the state. Johnson is added to the ninth congressional district, whereas Breathitt is taken from the ninth and added to the 6th. This is done for the same purpose. So far as the politics of the counties are concerned, both now have a majority on the same side of the question. I do not think that politics should govern any member here, and I am satisfied it will not, so as to prevent the adoption of some safe and just method of representation. We have no assurance that the disparity will remain as it now is, and consequently it could have little influence, if members were so disposed. If I thought I could be governed by selfish or political motives, I should consider myself unworthy of a seat in this body. My object is to prevent rolling residuums beyond the district, and I wish to take away discretionary power from the legislature, if it can be done, and to insure a just apportionment to the different parts of the state. I therefore move that the resolution be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the legislative department.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. I rise to give notice, under the rule, that I shall, at the proper time, move a reconsideration of the vote by which the thirty-fifth section of the report on the legislative department was adopted yesterday.

The object of the provision was to require that the whole law on any given subject should be contained in one statute only, that it all might be seen at a single view. But as the section now reads, it will in my opinion be burdensome to the legislature, expensive to the treasury, and will utterly fail of accomplishing its purposes.

While I am up, I will ask the indulgence of the convention to make a correction. The gentleman from Logan, (Mr. Irwin,) a day or two since, took occasion to distinguish between what he termed the rich and the poor counties of the state; and I see he has placed Anderson in the latter class. In his remarks he seemed to think the people must be poor wherever children were numerous, and as Anderson has a fine crop of them, he has placed her among the poor counties.

Now I beg leave to give the gentleman a small item of information. It is this: That though Anderson is a small county, and has but few voters compared with some others, she yet pays more nett revenue into the treasury, than any one of forty eight other counties in the state. I speak advisedly. And sir, it is true, that we have abundant crops of children. We are proud of it. And we intend to teach them, at least this much of politeness—that whenever any of them may by accident or otherwise get rich, they are not, in the next company into which they may happen to fall, to say to this one or that: "Sir, I am rich and you are poor."

Mr. BOYD. As there seems to be considerable anxiety, on the part of delegates to get on with the business of the legislative report, I rise to withdraw the amendment I offered yesterday, with a view of offering it again when the report of the committee on miscellaneous provisions shall come up.

Mr. GRAY offered the following amendment, as an addition to the section which he offered yesterday:

"All property, except franchises and corporate privileges, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided for by law."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I am much in favor of the principle of the proposed amendment. I will however, suggest that it would be more appropriate under the head of miscellaneous provisions. The term property, may be interpreted variously. It may be interpreted so as to exclude the right of taxation on the principle of what is called the equalization law. I am in favor of the principle, that all property shall be taxed according to its intrinsic value, equally; yet there are many subjects of taxation, which perhaps would not fall under the exception which the gentleman proposes. I therefore will ask him to withdraw it for the present, that it may be matured with reference to the system of taxation, which may be done by the gentleman, I think, in such a way as will entirely meet my approbation, and that of the house.

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection. My object is to have some regulation, so that taxes may be equal and uniform, and that the legislature may not have the right to discriminate between different kinds of property. I think the words franchises and incorporated privileges would embrace every species of property that ought to be specifically taxed. But I will withdraw it, as it may be better to come up under the general provisions.

Mr. HAMILTON offered the following as an additional section.

"Within five years after the adoption of this constitution, the legislature shall appoint not less than three, nor more than five persons, learned in the law, who shall revise, digest, and arrange the statute laws, civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any one subject, to be in plain english, in such manner as the legislature may direct—and a like revision shall be had as often as shall be found necessary."

Mr. HAMILTON. This is a section which I think ought to be added to the constitution, and it will be a benefit to the people, by making the laws clear to all. It is plain that we have now too large a quantity of statute laws. I believe there are more than 3,000 pages of them. We have laws on every subject, and among them, old british laws, which were made in the fourteenth century. The reason is, that when Virginia sprang into existence, she was without a code of laws, and had to adopt these old laws; and if I mistake not, she did not revise her laws till after Kentucky became a distinct commonwealth. We, under the same necessity, adopted the Virginia code. We have statutes made 400 or 500 years ago, and some of them made by old women.

Why this subject has been permitted to remain so long in Kentucky, while we have had so many great statesmen, has been a wonder to me. Our laws have been multiplied to such a degree that no man except a regular lawyer can keep up with them. If a man learned in the law cannot do it, what must be the situation of the common justices of the country? It is as clear as A, B, C, that they cannot do it. Frequent appeals are taken from the decisions of the circuit court judges, because they have pursued a kind of guessing principle in many cases. I wish to call attention to an act passed in 1838, entitled, "an act to regulate equitable proceedings under five pounds before justices of the peace." In 1839 that act was amended, and then again in 1840 it was so amended as to increase the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to all sums under fifty dollars and over five pounds. I happened to be a kind of jack-leg magistrate and was applied to for an injunction, which was granted. It is plain I had no jurisdiction over five pounds. It was not strange that a common magistrate like me should be mistaken. I recollect my friend from Bourbon told me he once had a case of the same kind, in which it was difficult for him to persuade the learned judge of the mistake that had been made. This shows the necessity of having the laws plain. And it is necessary they should be plain English too. There are many technical terms that I cannot see the use of to any body under the heavens but a lawyer. In Hardin county a case of mine came before the county court in which the lawyer put a technical term into the plea, which I knew no more of than of the sound of a bull frog in a pond. (Laughter.) I found out when it was too late, that the plea could not be sustained, for it was not applicable to the case. If the plea had been in plain English, I would not have suffered it to be put in. I think the necessity of this is plain to every body, and I am in hopes the convention will adopt this section.

The PRESIDENT. I understand that this amendment is the first section of a report of a select committee. That report has been referred to the committee of the whole, and I think it is now out of order to offer it as an amendment to this article; but I will submit the question to the convention whether it shall be taken up.

Mr. HAMILTON. That committee have taken two or three of the resolutions which I sometime since offered, and I want them all to go together.

Mr. TRIPLETT. I was on that select committee and drafted that amendment, and I have something to say about it, but I am not prepared to say it now. I wish it to be laid over for the present.

Mr. HAMILTON. I will consent to lay it over.

It was laid over accordingly.

Mr. MACHEN offered the following as an additional section:

"The legislature shall have no power to pass laws sanctioning, in any manner, directly or indirectly, the suspension of specie payments by any person or corporation, issuing bank notes of any description."

Mr. HARDIN moved to pass over the further consideration of this report till Monday next, which was agreed to.

COURT OF APPEALS.

The report of the joint committee on the court of appeals, circuit, and county courts, was then taken up for consideration.

The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd sections of the 1st article of the report were read and adopted, without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 1. The judicial power of this commonwealth, both as to matters of law and equity, shall be vested in one supreme court, (which shall be styled the court of appeals,) the courts established by this constitution, and in such inferior courts as the general assembly may, from time to time, erect and establish."

"SEC. 2. The court of appeals shall have appellate jurisdiction only, which shall be co-extensive with the state, under such restrictions and regulations, not repugnant to this constitution, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law."

"SEC. 3. The judges of the court of appeals shall hold their offices for the term of eight years, from and after their election, and until their successors shall be duly qualified, subject to the conditions hereinafter prescribed; but for any reasonable cause, the governor shall remove any of them on the address of two-thirds of each house of the general assembly: Provided, however, That the cause or causes for which such removal may be required, shall be stated at length in such address, and on the journal of each house. They shall, at stated times, receive for their services an adequate compensation, to be fixed by law, which shall not be diminished during the time for which they shall have been elected."

The 4th section was then read as follows:

"SEC. 4. The court of appeals shall consist of four judges, any three of whom may constitute a court for the transaction of business: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in said court, from any cause, the general assembly shall have the power to reduce the number of judges and districts; but in no event shall there be less than three judges and districts. In case a change in the number of the judges of the court of appeals shall be made, the term of office and number of districts shall be so changed as to preserve the principle of electing one judge every two years. The judges shall, by virtue of their offices, be conservators of the peace throughout the state. The style of all process shall be, "The commonwealth of Kentucky." All prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the commonwealth of Kentucky, and conclude "against the peace and dignity of the same."

Mr. HARDIN. I will merely mention that this section is the one that was so much controverted, and its present state is the result of a compromise by the committee.

Mr. CLARKE. Whilst the propriety of having four judges was under consideration, I understood the gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) to say, that he had been informed by one of the judges of the court of appeals, that a fourth judge was unnecessary; that three judges could transact all the business devolving on that branch of the judiciary. I was originally in favor of the appointment of a fourth judge, on the ground that if the court of appeals should be branched, the labors of the court might be somewhat increased; and I was in favor of it also on the ground, that I was informed, and believed the information to be correct, that three judges could not transact the business well.

According to this bill, however, the court of appeals is not to be branched; and for one, I am unwilling to increase the expense by adding another judge. I shall act upon the statement made by the elder gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) who has always been opposed, I believe, to branching the court. I shall act on the statement made by him, upon the authority of one of the judges of the present court of appeals. If, as he states, three judges are sufficient, I shall be inclined to move, and do now move, to strike out "four" and insert "three."

Mr. HARDIN. I did not talk with chief justice Marshall myself on the subject, but Mr. Jas. Harlan told me he had. I will mention again that I have been in favor of having only three judges; but we had to make a compromise on the subject, and I am willing to stand by that compromise.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I took occasion not only to talk with chief justice Marshall, but also with ex-chief justice Robertson, on the subject. And in the conversation that I had with judge Robertson, he expressed a preference for four judges instead of three. I asked him why, and enquired particularly whether it was because the labors of the court of appeals had so increased as to render four judges necessary. He said no; that so far from a fourth judge expediting the business of the court, it would rather retard the business. He gave rather a different explanation of the course pursued by the court of appeals from that which has been given by some gentlemen on this floor. He stated that it was the habit of the court of appeals to consult the opinion of each judge, and of course the more judges there were to be consulted, the more time would be consumed in the consideration of each case. But he stated as a reason why he preferred four, that he thought there would be more dignity attached to the opinions of the court if it were composed of four judges. I do not exactly agree with this view of the case. It occurs to me, that unless we place men in office whose character and standing can give dignity to their proceedings, we might multiply the number ad infinitum without giving additional dignity to the court. In respect to some things, two heads are said to be better than one, but I do not think it is applicable in this particular instance. In the conversation that I had with judge Marshall, he expressed no preference for three or four, but stated emphatically that three were amply sufficient to transact the business of the court; and he coincided with the opinion of judge Robertson, that four judges would rather retard than expedite the business, and that it would be no disadvantage, as far as the transaction of the business of the country was concerned, that the court should consist of but three judges.

I for one shall go against the addition of a fourth judge. I cannot conceive on what possible ground we are to advocate the creation of an additional officer, when those who now hold the office, and who are best qualified to form an opinion on the subject, tell us that an additional judge is unnecessary. What excuse can we make, either to ourselves or to our constituents, for adding another? If the business of the court requires four judges, I shall be in favor of having four; but I must be satisfied that the fourth judge is necessary, before I can vote for adding a fourth. While those gentlemen, who certainly have no interest in the matter, and who are best qualified to know whether or not the interests of the country require it, tell us, one and all of them, that so far from there being a necessity for it, there are strong reasons why an additional officer should not be created, I cannot very well understand how we can apologize, either to ourselves or to the state, for increasing the number of officers, and thereby increasing the expenses of the state.

I am told there are about fifteen or twenty candidates for the judgeship upon this floor. I am not one of them. If I were, in all human probability I should be in favor of creating an additional judgeship. If that be the motive by which gentlemen are actuated in seeking to create an additional judge, it may be a good reason with them, but it does not suit me. I shall be compelled, therefore, to go against it. We have had three judges on the bench of the appellate court for some time, and the business of the court, I believe, has been pretty well attended to. I have heard very little complaint on the subject, on the part of the people. The judges themselves say, that three are enough to transact all the business that comes before them, and that if you place another judge upon the bench you will, instead of expediting the business, retard the action of the court. There are some forty or fifty lawyers in this house, and as this office is confined entirely to the legal profession; and as one of the most eminent lawyers upon this floor has told me there will be twenty candidates at least, among the delegates here assembled, for the office of judge, I have almost been induced to suppose that this is intended as a provision for supplying the wants of the legal profession, by providing an office for one of them. For myself, I could offer no sufficient apology to my constituents for adding another judge to the bench of the appellate court.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will be remembered that I voted at the outset to strike out from the bill four judges and insert three. I have been in favor of branching the court of appeals, but it appeared to me that it could be branched with three judges; that was my calculation, but afterwards I was made to believe that it would require four. It was for this reason that I moved a reconsideration of the vote striking out the fourth judge. My desire was, that the court of appeals should be branched; if that is not to be done, or if it is to be left to future legislation, I should fall back to three judges, as the number which shall constitute the court.

Mr. WOODSON. I voted originally for striking out the fourth judge, believing that three were competent to discharge the duties devolving on the court of appeals, but the whole matter has been referred to a committee of thirty intelligent gentlemen. They gave it a thorough investigation, and I think their report ought to be sufficient evidence to us of the propriety of adding a fourth judge. Consequently, as it comes endorsed by this high authority—confessing that I do not perceive the necessity for it myself—I feel inclined to vote for the report of the committee.

In regard to the remark of the gentleman from Jessamine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall,) that the legal profession are endeavoring to create sinecures for themselves—

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I did not say that there was any effort of that kind made here. I stated emphatically, that if my constituents called on me for the reason for creating an additional judgeship, I did not know any other that I could give.

Mr. WOODSON. I understood the gentleman distinctly. He said that was the only reason he could assign for the creation of this additional office; and I understood from the gentleman's remarks that he thought, from the number of the members of that profession in this house, some such provision was necessary. I have no doubt there are a great many lawyers in the country who are sufficiently needy, but they are not more numerous nor more needy than those of the profession to which the gentleman belongs; nor are they a greater blessing to the country, nor a greater curse, than those of his profession. I cannot conceive, sir, that there is any lawyer upon this floor—I care not how aspiring he may be—who is influenced by such considerations as those the gentleman has intimated. I do not know that there is a single aspirant for office upon this floor. I have heard nothing of the sort; but I know that there are prejudices existing in the country against the legal profession, and I am sorry to see that there are a great many men who are endeavoring to pander to this popular prejudice. It is not necessary that I should endeavor to exculpate the profession, from the calumnies that are so frequently cast upon it. The lawyers, sir, in this country, need no defence at my hands. I care not at what period of the history of this government you look. The lawyers of 1776 need no vindication of their patriotism, or devotion to their country. Sir, when the first fires of liberty were kindled in New England, and answered back by the equal lights that were reared in the Old Dominion, I ask where the bright particular stars of that period were to be found, if not among the legal profession of the Old Dominion and of New England? The names of Adams, of Quincy, and of Henry, will be remembered as long as liberty finds a votary on earth. Go back to the revolution in England. Who was it contributed most in delivering the people from the shackles of despotism? Lawyers were particularly conspicuous. I care not to what period, or to what epoch you refer, whenever the question of popular rights has been involved, the legal profession has always stood up for the rights of the people. The members of the legal profession, sir, are behind none—notwithstanding the intimation of the gentleman that lawyers come here endeavoring to create offices for themselves—they are second to none, sir, in patriotism, talent, and devotion to the rights of the people.

Mr. GHOLSON. I sir, am no lawyer, and the report of the committee, unfortunately for me, has appropriated the office of judge, for the benefit only of the lawyers. This of course cuts me off from any chance of ever being a candidate for a judgeship. Although I have no chance of being a judge, yet I am for having four judges of the court of appeals, and I am extremely sorry that my talented friend from Simpson, (Mr. Clarke,) has flown off, just at the time of our greatest want of his aid. Now sir, I was for four judges, for four districts, and for putting the machinery into operation at once, because I knew that such was the will, and wish of those who sent me here. But I could not have the thing all my own way, and must take what I can get. My talented friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) voted with many others, to limit the number to three, and I was overruled. The compromise agreed upon by the committee, however, gives to those who are in favor of branching the court, a very decided advantage. Being unable to procure the branching of the court at once, as I desired, I am willing to take the report of the committee, which gives us four districts, and four judges, believing that with these we shall certainly have much less difficulty in consummating our wishes through the legislature, than with three districts and three judges. Besides this sir, no man here should expect to have all things to suit his own particular views, regardless of the wishes or opinions of others. We should all concede something, in order that we may come to an amicable agreement. I neither have, nor will I bluster and threaten. No sir, I have not seen, and do not expect to see, anything done that will make me oppose this constitution.

I appreciate the patriotism and the talent of the legal profession, as highly as any gentleman on this floor, and I concur fully in all that was said of their patriotism &c. by the gentleman from Knox. Yet, were I to speak my sober opinion, I must be permitted to say, that in my own humble judgment, Kentucky is most wofully lawyer-ridden. I am not for assisting the lawyers; far from it sir. But I am for helping the people to have justice within their reach.

It was contended by many who opposed the branching of the court, and by others who were willing it should be done, that the question was entirely new, that they did not know the wishes of their constituents; that the question was not heard of in many sections of the country. This being the case, is not something due to those gentlemen who are willing that the court should be branched, but not willing to make it unconditional in the constitution, lest it might not please their constituents. Mr. President, I think much, very much, is due those magnanimous gentlemen from the central portions of the state, who thus nobly offer to meet us with so liberal a compromise as that reported by the committee. Now if the people want it branched, they will certainly have it done; if not, the legislature will provide that there shall not be a fourth judge, after the first term of two years shall have expired. The report of the committee puts it entirely within the power of the people, and for one, I say their will be done. The paying a two years salary for one judge, cannot, will not be of very great consequence. But sir, the opinion of this body will no doubt have great weight with the people, and I want the advantage of that opinion as indicated in the report of the committee, when the subject is presented to the people.

As to the opinion of my talented friend from Jessamine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall,) that this is designed to furnish an office for lawyers, I beg leave again to assure him, nothing is further from my wishes. How many candidates there are upon this floor, I do not know. But in my portion of the state, I think sir, there are many gentlemen, not now on this floor, who in talents, attainments, integrity, and in all that adorns the head and heart of man, have few superiors here or elsewhere, that might perchance be found very formidable competitors of any aspirant in this body (if any such there be.) I sir, am not attempting to create an office for lawyers. I am for the good, the convenience of the people. I am for procuring a cheaper, more equal, and more perfect administration of justice to all.

There is another feature in this matter, that I had greatly at heart, sir; it was overruled however, but I am strongly tempted to try it again. It is, that the concurrence of three judges shall be required to reverse the decision of the inferior tribunal. This I think sir, is due to the circuit judge, who, if equally capable and honest, all I think will agree, must in the very nature of things, be a better judge of the real merits of a case, than any set of judges here, who act from a mere brief of the case.

It was the overruling of what I believed a correct opinion (one judge dissenting,) that first suggested to my mind the addition of a fourth judge. It is wrong sir, to let the opinion of two men overrule that of two others, when one of those overruled must best understand the case.

I beseech those who favor four judges and four branches, to stand by the report of the committee. Do this and I doubt not our wishes will be consummated by the people. To them I am willing to leave the matter, and I again say, their will be done.

Mr. BOYD. I am one of those who voted to strike out the fourth judge. I was also on the judiciary committee, but unlike a good many of the members of that committee, I never gave in my adhesion to all that was done there. My friend from Ballard (Mr. Gholson,) says, that those in favor of four judges and the district system, have the vantage ground. It is my opinion that he is correct in that. As a matter of compromise, then, I am willing to go for four judges, if the court is branched, and made to sit in each of the districts; and I am inclined to think that I am not alone in this. If the convention is disposed to pass over this section for the present, and take up the ninth section and act upon it, and if they decide that the court shall be branched, I shall then be prepared to give my vote for the four judges; if they do not, I am still in favor of three.

Mr. APPERSON. I was in favor of four judges, and I gave my reasons for it. And I was in favor, also, of branching the court. I believe with the gentleman from Ballard, (Mr. Gholson,) that the probability is that the legislature will branch the court, if the convention determine that there shall be four judges. This, however, is left entirely at the option of the legislature; and if it be decided by the legislature that the court shall not be branched, there will only be the additional expense of a judge's salary for two years.

Something has been said about creating offices for lawyers. So far as my district is concerned, like that of my friend from Ballard, (Mr. Gholson,) there are within its limits individuals who not only have talent enough to fill such an office, but who would only have to signify their willingness to accept the office, and it would be tendered to them. I allude to Judge Simpson, particularly, as belonging to that class of individuals. I presume every gentleman is disposed to cast his vote in the manner which he conceives will most redound to the general benefit; and I see no mode which I think is better calculated to harmonise the conflicting views of delegates, than the one here proposed.

Mr. OHRISMAN. When this question was first up, the younger gentleman from Nelson (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) moved to strike out "four" and insert "three." When that vote was taken I chanced to be absent. I desire to state here, that I am in favor of four judges, in the event of the court being branched; but if this body refuses to branch the court, I am determined to fall back on the old number—three.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. It is known to all that I have been opposed to having four judges of the court of appeals. I voted against four, and one of the many objections that operated with me was, that I believed the appointment of a fourth judge would necessarily result in branching the court of appeals. And according to the convictions of my mind, branching the court would be one of the greatest calamities that could be inflicted upon the state. I have never changed that opinion. And I believe that the proposition for the appointment of an additional judge to the bench of the court of appeals, could not prevail if separated from the idea of branching the court. I did not expect there would be perfect harmony—I did not expect, in coming here, that I could obtain all that I desired. I came prepared to yield somewhat, in order to secure unanimity. And if every gentleman would act with that view, we might come together upon one common platform; and by mutual concession and compromise, agree upon a constitution that would be satisfactory to all. I gave my voice for the committee of thirty, in the hope that a compromise would be agreed upon by them, that would meet the views of all, and in the belief that more good would grow out of their deliberations in committee, than we would be able to secure by means of discussion in the convention; because, in committee it is not as here, where speeches are made that are to go to the country—speeches which gentlemen make with a view to being well spoken of in the newspapers. I was sorry to hear from the gentleman from Trigg, (Mr. Boyd,) that he is so tenacious of his opinion. I suggested to the gentleman that I was willing to make concession, and that if the people of the country desired the branching of the court, I was willing they should have it. But I was not willing to make it a constitutional provision, for it would be putting into the hands of those who are opposed to the reforms you are about to make, a power which they can wield against you. My venerable friend who sits near me (Mr. Hardin,) occupies the same position that I do upon this subject; he agreed with me, and we both went in favor of the additional judge. It was carried through the committee with something like unanimity of feeling; and although the gentleman from Trigg feels disinclined to go for it here, yet as the committee have agreed upon four judges, by way of compromise, I think we should all go in favor of it. Suppose you strike out "four," and insert "three," what is to be gained by it? Many gentlemen believe that three judges are not sufficient to do the business. But if you allow the section to stand as it is, there will be four judges, until the question comes up before the people, whether they want the court branched. It will be discussed in every county. If they want the four judges they will retain them—if they require the four judges without branching, the four will remain—if they require but three, they will have but three. If the court is to be branched, four judges will be requisite. But I am against the branching of the court—I believe it is wrong. I believe that the court should be held at the seat of government, where the judges will have the use of a good library. It is the only security we can have for the stability of the decisions of the court; for the correctness of the rules and precedents that will be established by the court, and which are to govern and control the rights and interests of the people of the country. I hope my friend from Simpson will withdraw his proposition, and allow the report to remain as it is. I think this is the course we ought to take, and I trust he will withdraw it, when he comes to review the matter.

Mr. LISLE. When the proposition was first up in the house, to strike out "four" and insert "three," I was in favor of it. Afterwards, when the three committees were united, forming a committee of thirty, I was a member of that committee, and voted in committee against four judges, and shall continue to do so. As has been said by some gentlemen who have addressed the house, it has been urged throughout, as the strongest reason why we should add another judge, that the branching of the court would necessarily result from the increased number of judges. That, sir, is not proposed to be done. I ask gentlemen, if this proposition for adding a fourth judge to the court of appeals had come up upon its own merits, disconnected with the question of branching the court, how large a support would it have received? I imagine from the arguments we have heard, that its supporters would have been few.

We are told by various gentlemen who profess to be well informed on the subject, and who give us the information as coming from the present judges of the court of appeals, that an additional judge will not facilitate the dispatch of business. For what purpose, then, are we to add another judge? It has been said, that the object is, that it may ultimately lead to the branching of the court of appeals. If it be necessary to branch the court, let us do it at once.

I will give the reason which shall influence me in the vote I am about to give; but it is a reason that may not perhaps influence others. As far as I am concerned, until I came into this body, I did not hear of a politician, I did not know of a newspaper, or in fact of a single man in the country, who advocated the addition of a judge to the court of appeals. It was perfectly new to me when proposed here, and delegates will recollect, that it was proposed and argued in connection with branching the court; and in that connection only, is it entitled to any force. Now this is the ground I occupy; I am willing to let the number of the judges of the court of appeals stand just where it is, because I do not believe that an increase is demanded, as far as the public is concerned—at least this is the case so far as I am informed upon the subject—and to authorize the legislature whenever the public good requires it, to add to the number of the judges; and if the branching of the court be demanded by public sentiment, to authorize the legislature to do so. Why should we act in anticipation of public sentiment? And whenever the court of appeals shall be branched, if the legislature, in its wisdom, deem it necessary that there shall be an additional judge, let the power be confided to the legislature to authorize the election of such judge. I therefore, shall vote against retaining the fourth judge, because I have heard no demand for an addition being made to the number of the judges of the court of appeals.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. Mr. President, I did not anticipate the motion from the delegate from Simpson. I am content, sir—individually—to abide by the judgment of the house, in whatever form that judgment may be pronounced.

I am one of those who believe that the public sentiment of Kentucky—yes sir, I repeat it in the hearing of the members of the legal profession, and they will sustain me—demanded that in the reorganization of the judicial department of the government, there should be infused into it something of new element by which to insure public confidence in the decisions of that tribunal. Having formed the opinion from some practical knowledge of that tribunal, that a fourth judge was necessary to increase that confidence, I should have been in favor of constituting the court with the number of four judges, with or without the districting the court in its sessions. My duty as chairman of the committee, necessarily required me to advocate the report of the committee as originally made, and I shall vote for, and sustain it as agreed upon in a spirit of harmony.

The remark of the gentleman from Jessemine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall), that he was informed by the ablest lawyer in this house, there are at least twenty lawyers, members of this convention, who were, or would be candidates for the office of judge; that he (Mr. Marshall) had heard no reason assigned for the addition of a fourth judge to the appellate court, and when he returned to his constituents he could give them no other reason than that the office was created by the legal profession, that some of them might fill it—with what justice and with what parliamentary propriety the remark has been made, I will leave others to decide for themselves. I have never yet, sir, aspired to the judicial ermine—though tendered to me—and I never shall. I would be unworthy of the position I occupy here, if I could be influenced by a motive so unworthy as the remarks of the gentleman would seem to imply. I know, sir, that in deliberative bodies, constituted as this is, of different professions, it is sometimes unfortunately the case, that men seek to excite prejudices against the legal profession. I shall leave them who attempt it, in this house, to the enjoyment of all the pleasure and power which such a course may give. I shall not attempt to enter into any vindication of the profession. It is enough for me to know, that so far as the gentleman's implication of motive was designed or calculated to have effect upon the action of this house, or upon the country at large, I certainly claim the privilege of saying, I should not fall within the denunciation. And on this subject, I will let those who sent me here decide.

I do not know to what distinguished member of this house the delegate from Jessamine referred, as furnishing the fact, that there were twenty lawyers in the convention who would be candidates for this office, if it should be created by the convention.

Mr. President, most of the states of this Union—three fourths of them, at least, I think—have their appellate courts constituted of at least four judges—some of them as many as eight. I gave the reason when this subject was up on a former day, why I thought a fourth judge on the appellate bench was necessary. I think that we should, in organizing the court, fix the number of judges in the constitution, beyond which legislative discretion should not be permitted to increase them, to prevent, if a crisis should arise, the temptation in times of high excitement, such as we have passed through, the legislature from adding to the number of appellate judges. This thing has been done in some of the states, to secure decisions in conformity to a misdirected and misguided public opinion. Hence I was for fixing and limiting the number in the constitution. It is the court of last resort. Its decisions become the law of the land. The legislature should not have power, at discretion, to add to or diminish the number of its judges. No doubt there are members upon this floor, whose opinions, as to the necessity for four judges are based on the propriety of districting the court, and requiring it to hold its sessions in the different districts. I confess sir, that I am in favor of districting the court, and if I had the power, I would at once prescribe in the constitution, that they should hold their sittings in each district, at times and places to be fixed by the legislature. But I will not disturb the compromise made by the three committees. I will take the whole as it is. There are two or three modes by which it is proposed this court shall be organized. One is an election, by the people at large, by what is termed general ticket. Another mode—and I believe the gentleman from Jessamine submitted the proposition—is to elect the chief justice by general ticket, and to elect two associates, by districts; and there is the present mode, to elect one judge in each district, and one every two years. These, I believe, are the only conflicting propositions before the house which looks to the election of the appellate judges. I prefer the article as it now stands for the election of four judges. I prefer it because the people in each district will have a better opportunity of electing a man, known to them to be qualified to fill that high and responsible station, than they would by general ticket. Nor do I see the reason why we should dignify the presiding officer of the court—the chief justice—by an election by general ticket.

I see no reason why we should make an exception in the mode of selecting the one judge or the other; their salary is the same; their power is the same; their duties are the same; and I presume that their talent will not be increased by general ticket election. By this distribution of the power of appointment to the different sections of the state, you bring the court more immediately under the proper influence of the people, who will have a just appreciation of their talent, worth and responsibility. As you enlarge the district, if you make the election by general ticket for the whole court, or if you have three districts and divide your state into three divisions, and elect but three judges, one object we have, that is to infuse into the tribunal something more of public confidence, will be defeated. In proportion as you remove the personal knowledge, or opportunities of knowing an individual, you defeat one of the objects which I have in view in voting for an elective judiciary.

When this subject was under the consideration of the convention, some weeks since, I remember very distinctly that the very able member from Franklin, (Mr. Lindsey,) who is a resident and practising lawyer in this city, and who is opposed to districting the court, so far as its sessions are concerned, distinctly stated it, as his opinion, that four judges were necessary in the appellate court, whether you district the court or not; and he so voted. Upon what facts he based that opinion, I do not now remember. We are told, however, that the present distinguished chief justice is of opinion that three judges can do the business better than four, and that three are sufficient. Yes sir, and one could do it perhaps quicker than three. It is not always that business is best done, when it is done most speedily, especially in reference to adjudications in courts of justice of the last resort. I stated on a former occasion, that in conversation with gentlemen who have filled that bench with as much distinction as the present incumbents fill it, they told me before this convention met, that the number should be increased to four; and, sir, for the last six or seven years, during the sitting of this court, I have heard but one opinion expressed upon this subject, and that was that the number of judges on that bench ought to be increased. I never have heard a different opinion in Frankfort until the conflict arose upon the question of district sittings of the court. With the present incumbents on the bench of that court, I have not had the honor of holding any conversation on the subject. I felt that I could not, with propriety, converse with them, being a member of the committee which had charge of the subject, or I should have done so. The number of four judges seemed to have been disapproved of by gentlemen who thought that four judges, connected with branching, was wrong. The argument was, do not put this principle of branching your court in the constitution, because it was not expected by the people. It will endanger the constitution; public sentiment does not require it. But the offer was made in this house to constitute the court of four judges, and leave the question of district sessions to be decided by the legislature, and by the people hereafter. In that state of the case, the article, at the suggestion of gentlemen who were not members of the committee, which originally reported the project, together with the other articles of the judiciary department of the government, was referred to a joint session of three committees, having the three articles under their immediate consideration, that the conflict of opinion might be compromised and the convention induced to harmonize on the question. I should have done justice, when I reported the article from the joint committee, to the motives, principles—and if the word is not too much hackneyed—the patriotism of the members of this committee. They manifested a disposition to harmonize; to yield up opinions once entertained; to meet on some safe ground that would consolidate the two portions of this house; those who opposed the four judges because they were opposed to the branching; and those in favor of the four judges because they desired the branching of the court. And, sir, my colleague who led the opposition to branching in this house, and whose powers were great and were felt in the contest, submitted the proposition which we have now under consideration, as the terms of a compromise between the extremes in this house.

Some believe that four judges are necessary, whether the court is branched or not; others think three are enough, whether branched or not. Some believe that the court ought to be branched by provision in the constitution; others think that it ought to be left to legislative discretion, after an expression of public sentiment on the subject; and therefore it was proposed to leave the subject, whether the court should be required to hold its sessions in more places than one, to legislative action. It was agreed to in the large committee, and you have now under consideration the result of their harmonious action.

For myself sir, I would prefer to put the provision in the constitution; but I have not the vanity to suppose that what I most desire is best for the country, especially on this subject. I yielded my assent to the proposition of the gentleman from Franklin, and others on this floor, in lieu of the section districting the court, and requiring its sessions to be held in each district. I am willing to leave the subject where the opponents of districting said it ought to be left, to the people through their agents—the legislative department—properly advised and instructed on the subject. If they believed, two years after the first election, that three judges are sufficient to transact the business of the court, and best calculated to create that increased confidence which the convention think necessary they should possess, I am content. I have no cause Mr. President, of complaint against a member of that committee; they have treated me always with the utmost respect, still sir, when I am called on to form a constitution, and to re-organize and re-construct the judiciary department upon a different principle than that upon which it is now constructed. I will not consent, so far as I am concerned, to construct it in such a mode or manner, as would look exclusively to the re-appointment, by general ticket, of the same gentlemen who now fill the offices.

What would be the effect of the two sections of the bill, which are so intimately connected in this discussion, if the legislature shall believe that it is necessary, for the prompt and cheap administration of justice, in any of the districts of this commonwealth, remote from the seat of government, that the judges should be required to hold terms in that district, they can do it, leaving the court to transact the business of the balance of the state at the seat of government. This would be more convenient, perhaps, than if the balance of the state were at once districted by constitutional provision. It is due perhaps, that I should give my opinion as to what may be the probable operation of it. In all probability, there may never be more than two places for holding this court under the operation of this constitution, besides the seat of government. I think this highly probable; and I judge not so much from what I see manifested here, as from my knowledge of the composition of the state legislature, in times past.

I think it very probable that the legislature will, in the course of time; answer the demands of the southern extreme of the state to meet the wants of that portion of the state, and direct the court to hold one or more terms there, while the balance of the state will perhaps be content to have their business done at the seat of government, as now. And hence it was that I the more willingly acquiesced in the proposition contained in the 9th section, and the proposition which is now under consideration. If, however, experience should point out, during the two first years of the existence of the court under this constitution, that four judges are not necessary for the transaction of the business, the legislature will declare so by law. I do not mean the mere manual labor of writing out opinions alone—I do not mean the drudgery of mind in searching up authorities alone; but I mean the union of mind and talent—the concentration of thought and intellect, in the discharge of the important duties of that tribunal. If the general assembly believe that a fourth judge is not necessary, they will have power to direct the court to be held by three judges, and to make the districts conform to that number, and to make the term of office conform to that number, electing the judges every two years. This is the effect of the compromise, and I am unwilling sir to insert in this constitution, what a large portion of this house, probably a majority, are opposed to. I do not know, if the question were now presented by an amendment to this bill, to retain the four judges, and reinstate the provision to require the court to hold sessions in four districts, how that question would be decided; but I know there is a powerful array of numbers, as well as talent, against it, and to that I defer. I am willing to accept the proposition of these gentlemen, to leave the whole subject of branching to the legislature. And with this explanation of the objects of the two sections, and of the principles upon which the committee compromised, and as I thought, harmonised, I am willing to leave the decision of the question to the house. I do not know that I should have arisen at all, had it not been for the gentleman's remark, in supposing that the advocates for the fourth judge, must have designed it to have an improper influence on the country, or that it was calculated at least to provide a place for lawyers. I rose to say to him, and to the country, that whether you district the court or not, whether you have four judges or not, the humble individual who addresses you has never thought of filling the office, and if the power to give, should ask me to fill it, I would not do it. Thank God, He has blessed me in his kindness with something to live on in old age, and although I cannot boast of much, I do not belong to that class of the profession to which the gentleman so unkindly alluded.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. When I remarked a few moments since that I had understood that there are some twenty lawyers in this house who are candidates for the judgeship, I had supposed that the tone, and spirit, and manner in which the remark was made, would have redeemed it from being considered by any body in the least degree offensive. When, however, the gentleman from Knox (Mr. Woodson,)—seemingly not at all in the spirit of anger—alluded to the remark, I deemed it necessary to disavow to him, and to the house publicly, the slightest disposition, or intention on my part, to make a remark that might be regarded as offensive. I do not often apologise once; I never do twice, to any body. Having publicly disavowed that I intended to make the remark applicable to any one on this floor, individually, I think it should have been sufficient to have prevented any gentleman here from having commented so very extensively upon it; and especially if the remark did not apply to him. I have only to say that if any gentleman feels it to be applicable to himself, "Let the galled jade wince, my withers are unwrung."

Mr. HARDIN. When I met this convention I looked around to see what kind of men it was composed of; and I have since repeatedly remarked, that although I have been in many deliberative bodies—ten years in congress, and ten years in the legislature of this state—yet I think that in the whole course of my public life I have never been associated with an hundred men of more talent—men with whom I am more proud to be associated—than the hundred men that compose this convention. I did intend at some time in the course of the session, to draw a portrait of the whole house collectively, and of some of the distinguished men separately; that posterity might know of what kind of men this convention was composed; because it has been a great desideratum with me in reading the debates of the Virginia convention, and the debates of the convention that made the constitution of the United States, to know the particular history and description of the men who figured in those conventions; and if I ever worried a gentleman in my life it was Mr. Madison, when I first went to congress, to get from him the personal anecdotes, and the reminiscences of the incidents of the time of the formation of the federal constitution, with which his mind was well stored.

I have procured a statement showing the occupation and ages of the delegates here, which I will read:

Lawyers,	-	-	-	-	-	42
Doctors,	-	-	-	-	-	9
Farmers,	-	-	-	-	-	39
Minister,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Salt-maker,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Trader,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Sheriff,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Merchant,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Miller,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Clerk,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Inn-keeper,	-	-	-	-	-	1
Mechanics,	-	-	-	-	-	2
Delegates,						100

AGES.
Between 20 and 30,	-	-	-	-	-	4
Between 30 and 40,	-	-	-	-	-	24
Between 40 and 50,	-	-	-	-	-	41
Between 50 and 60,	-	-	-	-	-	24
Between 60 and 70,	-	-	-	-	-	6
Between 70 and 80,	-	-	-	-	-	1
						100

JAMES DUDLEY, oldest delegate, 72.

SELUCIUS GARFIELDE, youngest delegate, 26.

I had this paper prepared preparatory to the work I had proposed to myself, of drawing the portrait of this convention; and it was probably something that I may have said in connection with this that was referred to by the gentleman from Jessamine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall,) a few moments since. When the subject of the court of appeals was under consideration some weeks ago, I remarked, I believe, in a jocular manner to my worthy friend—for I am proud to call every one of the name my friend—a name that comes from old Fauquier county—that I thought this house could furnish candidates enough for the judgeships we were about to create; that as I was going on to sixty six years of age, I was too old, and that my colleague, commonly called "the young gentleman" from Nelson, was going on to sixty two, and he was too old; but that there were as many as fifteen or twenty who were not too old. It was all a piece of fun from beginning to end. I have been personally acquainted with every distinguished man, I believe, who has figured in public life in the United States, from the year 1815 up to this time, and I have served year after year in deliberative bodies, and I do not think that I flatter this convention when I say that I have never seen a more talented body of men, of the same number, any where.

Mr. TURNER. I have been uniformly against branching the court of appeals, and am so still. I have been, and am still, in favor of having four judges, because I think I have seen the necessity for it; and I will say this, that in no conversation that I have had with lawyers of this city, and members of the court, have I heard a different opinion expressed by any one of them until it seemed to enter a little into the matter of branching the court; and I care not what any judge, or what any lawyer has intimated, since the subject has been talked of here. I do not believe judge Marshall has given an opinion; he is one of the most cautious, prudent, discreet men, that I am acquainted with. I do not think that any gentleman, occupying the station that he does, could or would give such an opinion. I know that in the matter of consultation it does take a little additional time, but there is an opportunity of arriving at a more correct result; and when you come to writing out opinions you gain, in point of time, five times as much as you lose in consultation; because it is the writing out finally, in which the great labor consists, in order that the opinions of the court may be presented in such a manner as to settle the law definitely, correctly, and concisely. There is the difficulty. Many a man can arrive at a correct conclusion, in much less time than it would take him to write out his opinion. And it is exceedingly improper that any opinions should be written and published as authority, for governing future decisions, that are not correct in every particular. It is a matter of infinite importance to the country, because incorrect decisions must tend to increase litigation, and consequently to increase the profits of the profession.

It is scarcely necessary for me to say, that I do not expect a judgeship under any circumstances. There is no office that I wish or desire. I have never asked for one, and I never shall.

There is another reason why I desire that there shall be four judges. If any thing of a party nature enter into the composition of the bench, I say in all candor that I do believe that the court will be better constituted, if there be four divisions and one judge be taken from one section of the country, and one from another section. I believe it will keep down all political contention, so far as the judges are concerned, and that they will be more circumspect in regard to having any thing to do with the party politics of the country, and more devoted to the duties of their station.

There is another reason that influences me. If you have but three judges, the term of office will be but six years. I do not think that even eight is long enough to give the proper stability to the decisions of the court, and I appeal to gentlemen on all sides, if we would avoid having a partizan court, whether it is not better that there should be four districts, and four judges, and a term of service of eight years. I hope this section will be permitted to stand; for I think the recommendation of the committee is entitled to some weight and consideration.

Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON. The county which I represent in part, in this body, has no interest in branching the court of appeals, that will influence me to vote for it. The people of my county have suffered no inconvenience—they have nothing to complain of in this respect; and in the canvass during the last summer in Shelby county, there was nothing said on the subject. I came here uninstructed and without knowing the opinions of those I represent in relation to this matter. I know, however, that the people of Shelby will not expect me to withhold any benefit or privilege from any part of the State of Kentucky, which they enjoy, on account of their peculiar location. I came here, sir, without having reflected on this subject. I listened, however, to the arguments of gentlemen, and became satisfied that a large number of the people of Kentucky suffer much inconvenience, because of the distance at which they live from the seat of government, rendering it difficult for them to be represented in that court, by the counsel who have been in the first instance engaged in their causes; and I determined, therefore, to extend, as far as possible, to those who live in remote sections of the state, the benefits that we enjoy, in regard to the administration of justice. I could only do this by voting to branch the court of appeals. I have voted for it. I have served on the committee to which the matter was referred. I voted for it there, and united with the other members of the committee in the compromise that was made in relation to the whole matter.

Now, sir, although I was willing and did vote for incorporating in the constitution a provision for branching the court of appeals and for the appointment of four judges, yet we have not done that, as delegates will perceive, but we have left the whole matter for the people to determine hereafter, through their representatives in the legislature. And, in doing this, we have risked nothing; we have imposed no burden on the treasury, save the salary of one judge for two years. If the court should be branched by the legislature, it is admitted on all hands that four judges would be necessary. If it be not branched, then, at the expiration of two years, the fourth judge may be discharged by action of the legislature.

Mr. RUDD. This subject has been discussed for two weeks, and then referred and acted upon by a committee of thirty, and it seems to me that every gentleman in the convention, that has paid any attention to the debate, must be prepared at this time to vote. Believing that the opinion of ninety out of the hundred members is fully formed, and that not a word that may be offered will change the mind of a single man, I will now move the previous question.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, as I desire to submit a few remarks on this question, important as I view it, to my constituents. We certainly have not as yet consumed much time on this report, having already, although it was first taken up this morning, adopted three sections of it.

Mr. RUDD. I do not desire to interfere with the expression of opinion on the part of any gentleman, and I will therefore withdraw the call for the previous question, and move an adjournment.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GRAY. I feel that I ought to return my thanks and the thanks of the people of my section of the country to my friend from Shelby

(Mr. G. W. Johnston) for the magnanimous manner in which he has expressed himself on this occasion, and his desire to carry out the true principle that should actuate every gentleman in the formation of a government. I conceive every government to be formed for the benefit of the whole people, and that its blessings ought to be extended to them as far as it can be. If this court of appeals confers any blessing or benefit on the people of this state, why should it not be brought down, as far as practicable, within the reach of all? That is all we, in my section of the country, ask. Gentlemen have said that this question was not agitated before the people in any of the counties in this state, but I will say to them that it was made directly before the people of my county. I argued the question there on the stump, and I never heard the first man oppose the branching of the court; on the contrary, all of them desired that one of its sessions, at least, should be held in their neighborhood, or somewhere nearer to them than Frankfort. The principle objection urged against it here is, that these judges will not have so fair an opportunity of arriving at correct conclusions and decisions under such a system. When the question was up before, my friend from Kenton (Mr. Stevenson) seemed to think that if the judges were required to go down into the Green river country, so far off from the seat of government, and travel around over the dirt roads to which we are forced to submit, there was something in the atmosphere there that would cloud their minds so that their decisions would not be as clear and as enlightened as if delivered in the capitol. I can assure my friend that there is no such corrupting influence in the atmosphere of that region; and I can tell gentlemen that although we are so far away from Frankfort, there are a few books there out of which the great judges of the court of appeals might enlighten even their well stored minds. And if they would decide from the lights they can procure from the libraries now in that country, I think no apprehension need be entertained of the correctness and justice of their decisions.

This question has been fully discussed, and I do not intend to repeat the arguments on the subject; but I think the branching of the court is a measure the people call for, which they have a just right to, and which this convention should not deny to them. The people have repeatedly demanded it at the hands of the legislature, and have been put off by the pretext—whether right or not—that the constitution denied them the power to do it. We are now forming a constitution, and this act of justice may, therefore, now be done without injury to any one. For myself, I shall go with my friend from Trigg, (Mr. Boyd,) in requiring the constitution to declare that this court shall be branched; but, if we cannot get that, then I am willing to take the report as it is. I believe it is a duty which I owe to my people, to secure, so far as I can, the holding of one of the sessions, at least, of this court somewhere in our section of the state. Now, I have no objection, if it is the sense of the convention, at once to take up the ninth section, as suggested by my friend from Trigg, and settle the question whether we shall, or shall not, require this measure to be inserted in the constitution, and then to return to the section now under consideration. Or I am willing at once to vote for this section as it now stands. Whether there is a necessity for four judges instead of three, I am not as able to judge as others who are more experienced on this subject. I am willing to go for four, and as remarked by the gentleman from Shelby, if the people should think proper to diminish the number, they would have the power to do so at the end of two years, and the only expense incurred would be that of two years' salary to one judge. I hope my friend from Simpson, therefore, will withdraw his opposition to the four judges.

Mr. CLARKE. The report provides for four judges, and leaves the question of branching to the legislature. I have declared myself in favor of branching, which this report does not do. I have also declared myself in favor of four judges, if the court should be branched. If it is necessary that the one question should be left to the legislature, is it not quite as necessary that the other should? I will go for that, but I will not provide for the four judges by constitutional provision, and then leave it to the discretion of the legislature, as to whether the court shall be branched or not. That is the position I occupy.

Mr. GRAY. I agree with the gentleman as to the branching, but I believe we shall be more apt to get it if we have four judges, than if we have but three, and that is one of the strongest arguments which induces me to go for four judges. Another reason is, that experienced practitioners in the appellate court—such as the gentleman from Madison and the President—have told us that four judges were necessary for the better discharge of the business there. And I believe that if the section is adopted as it is, that a sense of justice in the legislature will provide that the people of all sections of the country, in accordance with the desire of that people, shall have this court brought nearer to them. This belief is a strong inducement to my support of this proposition as it comes from the committee. I hope, also, that my friend from Simpson will adopt the same views. If you reduce the number of judges to three, you reduce our chances of having this court branched. This is a compromise reported by the committee, and although I am not bound by it, yet it seems to be the plan that comes nearest to justice in this matter, and I am for taking it as it is, unless we can do better.

Mr. HARDIN. Every body knows, if they have not forgotten, that I was against four judges, and against branching; and upon that question we fought a hard battle for two or three weeks. I gave up part of my own views to get a compromise, and that was, to leave it to the people, whether they would branch or not, and to place it in a situation so that they might do so if they chose. In this I yielded a great deal, but the gentleman last up, and the gentleman from Trigg, say they do not feel bound by that, and that they will try to break up the present compromise. I have only to say, that if they do that, I shall vote for retaining the four judges, and then move for a reconsideration, if they persist in this branching business. I do not mean to yield all, when they take back what they give to me.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not intend to enter upon an argument of this question now. I delivered very briefly my views, when this subject was under consideration before, in which I avowed myself strongly opposed to branching. The gentleman from Christian (Mr. Gray) wholly mistakes me, if he supposes I intended to cast any reflection on any portion of the state. If he will read my speech, I think he will find that the whole character and tenor of it was against any thing like sectional feeling. I never was in the Green river country, but there is no portion of the state which more sincerely commands my respect.

Mr. GRAY. I did not understand the gentleman as casting any reflection, and it was only the arguments he used in opposition to the branching of the court to that section, that I was replying to.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thought the whole tenor of his remarks were to show that I had supposed there was something in the atmosphere of the Green river country that would render a judge unfit to the discharge of his duties, and that certainly would have been an unjust and unwarranted remark on my part. I referred to no particular section of the county, and my argument was, that by establishing the court at one point, the building up a large library, and considerations of that nature, it would give character to the court itself, and I cited the supreme court of the United States, to show that the same arguments which would apply in favor of branching the court of appeals, would apply to branching the supreme court of the United States. I have the highest respect for the Green river country, and for the people who inhabit it; and if I had ever doubted their intellectual ability or purity, those doubts would have been agreeably removed by the specimens which they have sent here. I agree with the gentleman from Christian, that government is for the benefit of the whole people, and I think I am disposed to give a stronger evidence of my faith in that great principle than he is. He says his people want the branching of the court of appeals, and therefore he is for it. Yet if a majority of the people in other sections of the state was opposed to it, my friend ought to give it up, if he is disposed to subscribe to the principle that the interests of a small portion ought to yield to the demands of the balance of the state. Now I stated in my speech before, that although I believed this court ought not to be branched, yet I was ready to bow to the popular will, and was willing to leave the question to the legislature, in order that if the people desired the branching, no matter what my feelings or those of my constituents might be, their will might prevail. Is not that a practical carrying out of the doctrine? I think it is.

I am opposed to four judges, and I think if we desire that the popular will should be expressed on the subject of branching, it should also be expressed as to whether they require four judges. Let us have three judges, giving the legislature the power to increase it to four and to branch if they desire. I think when questions are presented to the people for their decision they ought to come up fairly, and my friend from Christian frankly avowed that the reason he desired four judges was in order to get the advantage in the submission of the question of branching to the people. I can very clearly see that is the object of my friend, because if you have provided in the constitution for four judges and four districts, why in the legislature you will have the advantage at once, by concentrating the very feelings my friend avowed—a desire of local benefit to his constituents. If there are four districts, why you will have the delegates from each district in favor of branching. I think if we desire the public opinion on both of these questions we should submit them both to the people.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. Believing that the time would be better applied in mutual consultation with a view of compromise on this question, than in the making of speeches here, I move that the convention adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the convention adjourned.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. NORTON.

COURT OF APPEALS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the joint committees on the court of appeals.

The pending question was the motion to strike out of the fourth section the word "four," and insert "three," as the number of which the judges of the court of appeals shall consist.

Mr. KAVANAUGH called for the yeas and nays, and being taken, they were—yeas 35, nays 37.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Cope, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, John Wheeler—35.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, George W. Johnston, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, Charles

A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh sections were adopted as follows, without amendment:

"Sec. 5. The general assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this constitution, shall divide the state, by counties, into four districts, as nearly equal in voting population, and with as convenient limits as may be, in each of which the qualified voters shall elect one judge of the court of appeals."

"Sec. 6. The judges first elected shall serve as follows, to-wit: one shall serve two, one four, one six, and one eight years. The judges, at the first term of the court succeeding their election, shall determine, by lot, the length of time which each one shall serve; and at the expiration of the service of each, an election in the proper district shall take place to fill the vacancy. The judge having the shortest time to serve shall be styled the Chief Justice of Kentucky."

"Sec. 7. If a vacancy shall occur in said court, the governor shall issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy for the residue of the term, and another judge shall be elected by that district, to serve until the expiration of the time for which the judge was elected, whose death, resignation, removal, or other cause, produced such vacancy."

The eighth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 8. No person shall be eligible as judge of the court of appeals, who is not a citizen of the United States, a resident of the district for which he may be a candidate two years next preceding his election, at least thirty years of age, and who has not been a practicing lawyer eight years, or whose service upon the bench of any court of record, when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall be equal to eight years."

On the motion of Mr. MITCHELL, a correction was made by inserting the word "not," before the words "be equal to eight years," at the close of the section.

Mr. WM. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section.

Mr. BOYD thought there was a portion of the section which should be preserved, and therefore he moved to strike out the words "and who has not been a practicing lawyer eight years, or whose service upon the bench of any court of record, when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall not be equal to eight years."

The yeas and nays were called for on the motion to strike out, and they were—yeas 26, nays 45.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Thomas James, William Johnson, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, William R. Thompson, John Wheeler—26.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Thomas D. Brown,

Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—45.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

Mr. W. JOHNSON withdrew his call for the yeas and nays, and the section was adopted.

The ninth section was read and adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 9. The court of appeals shall hold its sessions at the seat of government, unless otherwise directed by law; but the general assembly may, from time to time, direct that said court shall hold its sessions in any one or more of said districts."

The tenth section was read, as follows:

"Sec. 10. The first election of judges of the court of appeals shall take place on the second Monday in May, 1851, and every two years thereafter, in the district in which a vacancy may occur, by expiration of the term of office; and the judges of the said court shall be commissioned by the governor."

Mr. GHOLSON said that an August election was a time-honored custom in Kentucky, and he disliked to change it. He, therefore, moved to strike out the words, "and every two years thereafter, in the district in which a vacancy may occur, by expiration of the term of office." This would leave the first election under the new constitution to be held in May, and afterwards in August, as heretofore.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE explained. The reason why the month of May was fixed, was, that it was desired to separate the judicial from the political elections, and thus prevent the one having an influence on the other; and the year 1851 was fixed because that was the earliest period at which an election could be held. As it was intended to submit the new constitution to the people, and as the legislature must necessarily make laws to carry the new constitution into effect, an earlier period was not practicable.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL approved of the object of the committee, to separate the political from the judicial elections, but he believed this could be accomplished without changing the election from the month of August. As it was intended to elect the legislature biennially, he suggested that the members of congress, members of the general assembly, governor, lieutenant governor, &c., could be elected one year in the month of August, and the judicial officers in the same month of the alternate years.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE replied, that it was impossible that these judicial elections could take place in the year 1850, and in August, 1851, the congressional elections would take place. The members of the legislature would be elected in the same month of the year, 1852.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL still thought a provision could be made to avoid the contemplated change from the usual period. The convention had certainly the power to change the period of holding the legislative elections.

Mr. GHOLSON urged that the month of May was unfavorable for the farming population, as it was with them a busy season of the year, and if that month was retained they would not be able to participate in the election.

Mr. TRIPLETT called the attention of the convention to the fact that it was impossible to hold the election in May, 1850, and hence it was better to let the section stand as it is.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the previous question, under the operation of which the amendment was rejected, and the section was adopted.

The eleventh section was read and adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 11. There shall be elected, by the qualified voters of this state, a clerk of the court of appeals, who shall hold his office for the term of eight years from and after his election, and who may be removed by the court of appeals for good cause, upon information by the attorney general; and in case the general assembly shall provide for holding the court of appeals in any one or more of said districts, they shall also provide for the election of a clerk by the qualified voters of such district, who shall hold his office for eight years, possess the same qualifications, and be subject to removal in the same manner as the clerk of the court of appeals."

The twelfth section was next read:

"Sec. 12. No person shall be eligible to the office of clerk of the court of appeals, unless he be a citizen of the United States, a resident of the state two years next preceding his election, of the age of twenty-one years, and have a certificate from a judge of the court of appeals, or a judge of the circuit court, that he has been examined by their clerk, under the supervision of the court giving said certificate, and that he is qualified for the office for which he may be a candidate."

On the motion of Mr. McHENRY, the word "judge" was substituted for "court," in the passage which provides that the examination of candidates for the clerkship has been made "under the supervision of the judge giving such certificate."

Mr. THOMPSON moved to strike out the words, "and have a certificate from the judge of the court of appeals, or a judge of the circuit court, that he has been examined by their clerk, under the supervision of the judge giving said certificate, and that he is qualified for the office for which he may be a candidate."

The yeas and nays were called for and taken on the amendment, and resulted thus—yeas 29, nays 42.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Thomas James, James M. Lackey, Willis B.

Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, Thomas Rockhold, Michael L. Stoner, William R. Thompson, John Wheeler—29.

NAYS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Edward Curd, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, William D. Mitchell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—42.

So the convention refused to strike out.

Mr. MOORE, when his name was called, said he should vote in the affirmative in obedience to instructions, but it was decidedly against his own judgment.

The section was then adopted.

The thirteenth and fourteenth sections were also adopted without amendment, as follows:

"Sec. 13. In case of a vacancy in the office of clerk of the court of appeals, the governor shall issue a writ of election, and the qualified voters of the state, or of the district in which the vacancy may occur, shall elect a clerk of the court of appeals, to serve until the end of the term for which such clerk was elected: Provided, That when a vacancy may occur from any cause, or the clerk shall be under charges upon information, the judges of the court of appeals shall have power to appoint a clerk pro tem., to perform the duties of clerk until such vacancy shall be filled, or the clerk acquitted."

"Sec. 14. The general assembly shall direct, by law, the mode and manner of conducting and making the returns to the secretary of state, of all elections for judges and clerk or clerks of the court of appeals, and determining contested elections of any of the officers."

Mr. TURNER. I offer the following additional sections:

"Sec. 15. Writs of error shall be allowed on questions of law, to the accused, in penal and criminal cases."

"Sec. 16. The court of appeals shall have such other officers as may be prescribed by law."

There is now no provision for the appointment of tipstaff and other minor officers, which the court will need, and I offer this, to allow the legislature to permit their appointment.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I hope the gentleman from Madison will not press this amendment in this part of the constitution. Indeed, I should be unwilling to engraft the first section in the constitution. It is perfectly within the power of the legislature, unless we inhibit it, to authorize the prosecution of writs of error in criminal cases, as to matters of law or fact either. I was once honored with a seat in the legislature, when I undertook to prepare such a law in obedience to my own judgment, and what I thought the public sentiment at that time, but I found it did not meet with favor in the lower house. Pardon me for using that term, for when I first served in the legislature, the popular branch occupied the lower floor, and the senate occupied a room just above. We always called it the upper house from its locality.

There is a great diversity of sentiment on the propriety of such a law as the gentleman proposes, and indeed the popular opinion is, that the means of escape of those who deserve punishment are sufficiently numerous. The argument is, that no man who is convicted would rest short of an appeal to the higher court. The difficulty and expense of such an arrangement would be great. I would not therefore make it imperative to pass such a law, but would leave it for the people to direct whether the legislature shall do it. As a member of the legislature, I would vote for it, but as a member of this convention I cannot do it.

With reference to the other section, the gentleman has charge of the very subject matter, in the bill providing for the appointment of ministerial officers, in which he can more appropriately introduce it. Another gentleman has charge of a bill for the appointment of officers generally, to which it may be attached, but I believe it is unnecessary to give this power, for if we do not take it away the legislature will have it as a matter of course.

Mr. HARDIN. If this amendment comes in at all, it would be more appropriate in the bill relating to circuit courts. The writ of error would be from that court. But I protest against its coming in any where. I know the desideratum which the gentleman wishes to secure; to produce uniformity of decisions in relation to criminal cases. That is what we all desire. But if you shall take a writ of error for all cases what would be the result? It would be that in case of conviction a writ of error would be prosecuted almost invariably. Where a man is sent to the penitentiary or condemned to be hung he will take a writ of error and trust to the chapter of accidents to have something turn up in his favor. I would put the case to my friend from Madison, who has as warm a heart as any man I ever knew, suppose he or I have a son who is a hot-spur of a man, and he should kill a man and be sent to the penitentiary, all that we were worth would be turned into a golden key to turn the lock of that prison. If I were worth millions of dollars, and a son of mine was condemned to the penitentiary or to be hung, every dollar should go if necessary to unlock that door. During the time the writ of error was pending in the court of appeals it would take a strong guard to keep him, because all I had and nearly every friend I had would aid in getting him out. If the guard should succeed in keeping him it would be at an enormous expense.

During the time that the unfortunate Mr. Baker was confined in Clay county, after the governor had respited him, there was some alarm lest he would break out, or be rescued, and the guard in that case cost between five and six thousand dollars. I will take occasion to remark that if the governor in that case was blameable for any thing it was for granting the respite. He and I, after consulting over and over, heartily concurred that a pardon ought not to be granted. I never said that before, but in that case we agreed on every principle, and we investigated it nearly two weeks, the whole of the record, and the arguments of every gentleman. The governor did right in refusing to pardon, because I never would pardon where the jury has not done wrong, unless there were circumstances which could not come out on trial. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. TURNER. The remarks of the gentleman from Nelson may make it necessary that I should say something on the other side, that both sides of the question may go out together. I had two cases, one in Garrard and the other in Madison county, in the same year. The punishment in Garrard county was thirty nine lashes, and in Madison it was hanging, for the same identical offence. Cases like this occur every year, and I think, a uniformity of decisions should be had where the penalty is life or liberty. I have known cases where the popular current was against an individual, and he was condemned, while others have been acquitted when they ought not to be. The great men of this country and their sons are acquitted, but the poor men are convicted, and sometimes contrary to law, merely to gratify popular prejudice at the time, and when they would not have been convicted if there had been a settled, uniform code throughout this commonwealth. I have seen this, and I do know that the penal laws are not sufficiently explicit, and that life is not sufficiently secure. The hotspurs of the country are going at large, and too often public sympathy is in favor of the criminal. It is a mistaken sympathy in their favor. I think, we ought also to do away with the practice of carrying concealed weapons. We ought to do every thing we can to secure life and property, and punish the great of the land when they are guilty, and on the other hand secure the poor and the weak against the improper current of public opinion, and get the best talents of the country to sustain and protect them. This right of appeal is allowed under the federal government. If a man is convicted in California, he can appeal to the seat of government. This is allowed in Great Britain, where they hang a man with as little compunction as if he were a dog; still they give the right of a decision by the highest court. But as some who are friendly to the proposition, think it will be better to bring it in in another place, I will withdraw the first section for the present, but I shall ask for a vote on the second.

Mr. HARDIN. I will go heart and hand with the gentleman against this practice of carrying concealed weapons, and I will go further to put something into the constitution against duelling, to prevent these barbarous murders. I drew the duelling law of 1811. Such were the sentiments I then had and I have them still. Hanging a man is not to reform him, but to deter others. When you put a man in the penitentiary, he may reform, but if he is sent there when condemned to be hung, in the pendency of the appeal, attempts to get him out will be made, and a guard will have to attend around the prison.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section proposed by Mr. Turner, and it was rejected.

CIRCUIT COURTS.

The convention continued the consideration of the report of the joint committee of thirty, proceeding with the article concerning circuit courts which was next in order.

The first, second, and third sections were adopted, without amendment as follows:

"Sec. 1. There shall be established in each county now, or which may hereafter be erected in this commonwealth, a circuit court."

"Sec. 2. The jurisdiction of said courts shall be, and remain as now established, hereby giving to the general assembly the power to change or alter it."

"Sec. 3. The right to take an appeal or sue out a writ of error to the court of appeals, is hereby given, in the same manner and to the same extent, as it now exists, giving to the general assembly the power to change, alter, or modify, said right."

The fourth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 4. At the first session of the general assembly after this constitution shall go into effect, they shall divide the state into twelve judicial districts, having due regard to business, territory, and population: Provided, That no county shall be divided."

Mr. HARDIN. It may be necessary that some explanation should be given of that section. The convention will perceive that seven parts out of nineteen of the business will be added to the labors of the judges.

We have nineteen judges now and we propose to have but twelve, which will increase the business seven parts out of nineteen. It was believed by the committee that we had more judges than were necessary, and I am satisfied that two or three districts were created to get some troublesome men out of the legislature. It would be ill-natured to mention names, but I believe this was the fact. I have made the best estimate I could, and I have had opportunities to judge. My practice during forty three years, has been principally in the circuit courts. I come to the court of appeals occasionally by way of self-defence, but I come with as few cases as possible. I reckon there is not a man more intimate with the operations of the circuit courts of Kentucky than I am, and there will not be for fifty years to come. When I am dead and gone, there will be no other as well acquainted with them.

The business of the circuit courts now occupies from seventy five to ninety juridical days. It will not, perhaps, go over ninety, nor fall below seventy five or eighty. We know very well that the salary of the circuit judge, which is $1200, will scarcely command the second rate talents at the bar, and our system has run down on that account, and got into disrepute. The object of the committee was to get the best talents which the bar could furnish and to give them employment equal to 140 or 150 days in a year. Here is my friend from Madison, (Mr. Turner) and myself, and I could name many others who are on the down hill of life, and yet take the labor in our offices and in riding from court to court in which we are employed nearly 300 days in the year. I think, therefore, the circuit judge can labor 140 or 150 days and do his work well; and I believe that the best lawyers in Kentucky will accept the office.

I will explain the plan of the circuit court bill. It is that there shall be a minimum salary of $1600 in order to command the best talents. On that subject we voted in the committee, beginning at $2,000 and finally settling on this as a minimum salary, and the whole plan of the bill will fail, and be brought into disrepute, unless we carry the whole plan of the committee into effect. We intend that there shall be twelve districts, and to add seven parts out of twelve more to the judge. We intend to give $1,600 salary, and unless you will say to the legislature that they shall not come lower than $1,600 you had better strike out twelve and put in nineteen.

Why do I say it? Because we want the best talents, and there are many lawyers of high private character, who would rather take an office worth $1,600 from their fellow citizens than to take one worth $16,000 under the government. It is a matter of feeling, and of pride, because he stands high in the opinion of his neighbors. I believe $1,600 will bring this talent. I know it will not do to leave this to the legislature, for the members will hunt popularity at home, by reducing salaries.

In the memorable controversy between the old and new courts, we among the old court party saw that the new court party were endeavoring to court popularity, by reducing the salaries, and we determined to out Herod them. We reduced them and cut them down in a most scandalous manner. We had to do it because we were determined not to be beat by them.

I hope the salaries will be fixed at a minimum of $1,600, and if there are twelve judges, this will save to the state $5,700. The circuit court system now costs $28,000 and over. The plan we propose will reduce the judges seven parts out of nineteen, and will add to the salaries only one fourth. There will also be seven attorneyships to be cut down. Just take it then as it is and restore the minimum and I think it will be acceptable to the people every where.

I will remark once more, give us a good judiciary, and if we can make it cheaper than the old system, it will win its way with the body of the people at large. This constitution has to go through a trial. There will be thousands and tens of thousands of objections to every thing. Let us make it good, and at the same time invite the favor of the people, by making it as economical as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. I supposed the subject of the circuit courts was a subject of compromise as well as that of the court of appeals, and I was astonished to hear the chairman of the committee on the circuit court urges this minimum. I am disposed to adopt the section as it stands. As it has been left out of the provisions in the report on the court of appeals, I think it should be left out here. It may be a clog to the constitution. I am willing to leave it to the legislature, for I believe they will give ample salaries.

Mr. HARDIN. If that was understood to be a compromise in the committee, I will stand to it till I die. But I think it was not.

Mr. BALLINGER. I do not believe that the committee have chosen a sufficient number of circuit judges to transact the business of the commonwealth. And I think it will be found, that there is a great disproportion between the labor they are required to perform, and the compensation to be allowed them. I am willing to give them a salary that will compensate them for their labor, time, and the talents requisite to the efficient discharge of the onerous duties of their responsible office. This matter was much discussed in the county I have the honor to represent, during the last summer, and whilst the canvass was going on, for a delegate to this convention. The opinion of the people, as there manifested, was, that they should have the election of all the judges, and all the other officers that heretofore have been appointed. But, whilst they entertained this opinion, they were, so far as respects the judges, for selecting men of the highest talents to discharge the duties imposed upon them, and paying them liberally. Now, wherever it is a mere matter of expediency, and I know what my constituents ask, I will endeavor to carry out their wishes; but when I do not know what their opinions are on particular subjects, I shall do what I consider to be right, and not suffer my action to be controlled or influenced by what I believe personal consequences to myself. We have here appointed four judges of the court of appeals, and what is the amount of the labor they are to perform during the year? In 1848, there were 575 cases: divide that among four, and it gives 143 $\frac{3}{4}$  cases to each judge.

The judges of the circuit courts will have to decide 17,212 cases, excluding from the calculation the Louisville chancery court. So that twelve judges will have over 1440 cases each; and besides, they have a large district to travel over, and their physical labor and expenses are greater than those of the judges of the court of appeals. The judge who presides in the district where I live, although an old man, is of an iron constitution, and performs all of his duties with despatch. He remains in the court house from eight o'clock in the morning till sundown, and that, too, frequently without disposing of all the business before the court. It will be found difficult for twelve judges to discharge the duties imposed upon them, therefore I would move to strike out "twelve" and insert fourteen. That will be few enough to dispose of the business that will come before them. Heretofore the judges have been unable to dispose of all the cases that came before them, and citizens have petitioned the legislature, year after year, and from time to time, for the erection of judicial districts. According to the report before the convention, it allows the legislature the power every fourth year to create additional judges and another judicial district, but I do not believe that twelve circuit court judges are sufficient at this time, and therefore I have made the motion that fourteen be the number.

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. I had the honor to be appointed a member of the circuit court committee, and of course that appointment continued over to the committee of thirty. This question of limiting the number of circuit judges was considered with uncommon attention on the part of the committee. As much information as could be obtained from lawyers—for I am not a practicing lawyer—we had before us.

One of the great faults of the present system was considered to be the number of circuit court judges, amounting to nineteen. Our inquiries led us to the conclusion that many of the nineteen judges did not occupy more than half the juridical days allowed them. We considered this matter with much deliberation, and concluded that by reducing the number of judges we would really increase the efficiency of the circuit corps; and after getting all the information we could, we concluded that twelve could do the business of the commonwealth, as the population and business now stands, and if twelve could do it, the treasury would be able to pay them easier than an increased number. With a view of increasing their efficiency and giving them an increased salary we reduced the number to twelve, still giving power to the legislature to increase the number to sixteen. We fixed the salary at a minimum of $1600. We came to that result from making the calculation that we could well afford to pay the increased salary, when we decreased the number of judges, and we concluded that by paying $1600, we could command the best talent. Some of us considered the fact that we were making an experiment; that we were making an elective judiciary; and, in order to have a fair trial, we should command the best abilities of the state to carry it out before the people. As an inducement to get this talent, we put it in the power of the treasury of the country to pay them well for their services.

These reasons resulted in the report of the circuit court committee. We threw that report before the house, and the reports of the appellate and county courts both. They created much debate with various opinions, and the wisdom of this house appointed a committee of thirty and enjoined on them to make a report. We went into that committee to express the meaning of this house and compromise our own cherished feelings and present a report which should be acceptable to the house.

For one, I will say, it does not present all my favorite views upon the subject of a judicial structure. But the favorite views which I had, I saw were not the views of this house, and it was my duty, if I would compromise, to give up those views which I still consider correct, in order to produce peace and harmony. And at the altar of peace I did agree to sacrifice my views to a very great extent, and now this report is made with the proposition for twelve judges in it, which meets my hearty approval. This, with the minimum proposed, embraced two of my favorite views, and if you had added intelligibility, these would have constituted the whole of the relics of my view of the circuit court tribunal.

It must be conceded, so far as I can gather the opinions of practical lawyers, that twelve circuit judges can now do the business. By reducing the number to twelve and increasing the salary, you increase the talent and efficiency. For depend upon it, talent is to be bought. It is to be called from the bar not only by money, but by honor. When you diffuse this honor, it is weakened to a great extent, and when you diffuse the pay, the motive for labor is weakened. The two ideas are both met by reducing the number of judges. Give them such a salary that they may have full command of their time, and you increase their efficiency, which efficiency you cannot have without talent. If I had my way, I should insist on the increase of the salary to $1600. My knowledge is limited on the subject, but my observation induces me to believe that in a great majority of the circuit courts, one half of the juridical days are not employed. Just increase the salary and make them fill out the term of juridical employment, and you gain for the people that which they sent us to confer upon them, good judges, laborious, industrious, well paid, and, if it is not offensive to this house, dignified.

Mr. APPERSON. I did not originally belong to the circuit court committee, but as a member of the court of appeals committee I became one of the committee of thirty. Before the large committee met, I had not made any calculation as to what the necessary labors of the circuit judges would be. However, inasmuch as that report was laid before the committee, of which I was a member, I thought it my duty to make a calculation to ascertain what amount of labor would be required of each judge that the business of the state might be well done. I acknowledge I am one of those who are in favor of paying the judges liberal salaries, but at the same time I would give them plenty of employment, and their salaries should much depend upon the amount of their labors. I became satisfied, as I went on with the investigation, that twelve circuit judges could do, and conveniently too, all the business that legitimately comes before these courts. The gentleman from Lincoln remarked that the judges of the court of appeals have only five hundred and seventy-five cases to determine annually, which he has been pleased to divide by four, because there are to be four judges, as though each judge had not to be consulted as to the determination of each case and to agree as to the proper judgment to be rendered. Although but one judge writes the opinion, still they have all to understand the merits of the case, and the whole five hundred and seventy-five cases have to be understood by the whole four judges. But he says there were upwards of seventeen thousand cases instituted in the circuit courts during the past year. This is true, and according to my calculation, one thousand four hundred and forty cases will be the average for each judge, assuming there will be twelve judges—but does not the gentleman know that something like one third, or perhaps one half, are generally undefended, such as actions upon plain notes, and small presentments, as for Sabbath breaking, swearing, &c.? Does he not know further, that generally speaking, it is our most important cases which are taken from the circuit court to the court of appeals—and of course they are the most difficult and require the most investigation? We see there are about one thousand four hundred and forty cases, including the common law, chancery, and penal, or criminal prosecutions, to be disposed of by twelve judges. Now, let us see if twelve cannot do that business. I had some hesitation about it, because an old and experienced lawyer, with whom I conversed, and who has done a great deal of business, was of opinion it would not do. Let us examine this matter. I have divided the state into twelve districts, not that I design to offer any proposition so to divide the state in the constitution, but simply as a matter of experiment, that gentlemen may reflect whether the work of each district cannot be conveniently done by one judge. The 1st district embraces fourteen counties, and the 9th embraces thirteen. These are the heaviest districts because of the territory, but there is less business in each than any other of the nine.

The 1st district embraces the counties of Whitley, Laurel, Knox, Harlan, Rockcastle, Owsley, Clay, Breathitt, Perry, Letcher, Pike, Floyd, Johnson, and Morgan. The appearances in these counties amounted last year to only about one thousand one hundred and forty, which number is about three hundred under the average for each circuit.

Permit me, Mr. President, again to remark that in naming the counties to compose the district, it is not by any means designed to be incorporated into the constitution, but to satisfy gentlemen that twelve judges can do the business.

The 2d district would include Lawrence, Carter, Greenup, Lewis, Fleming, Bath, Montgomery, and Clarke, which had one thousand four hundred and three appearances, being thirty seven less than the average. I know one judge can do all the business in this district.

Well, the next district had one thousand four hundred and ninety five appearances, and embraces Mason, Nicholas, Bourbon, Harrison, Bracken, Pendleton, and Campbell, and is a very compact district, and not too much for one judge.

The 4th district is composed of Fayette, Scott, Franklin, Anderson, Woodford, and Jessamine, with one thousand four hundred and eighty two appearances.

If we allow three weeks to Fayette, two to Scott, two to Franklin, two to Anderson, two to Woodford, and two to Jessamine, there will be but thirteen weeks at each term, making twenty six in the year.

The 5th district embraces Madison, Estill, Garrard, Lincoln, Pulaski, Boyle, and Mercer, with one thousand four hundred and eleven appearances; and if two weeks be given to each county at each term, there will be only twenty eight weeks labor in the year.

The 6th district embraces Kenton, Boone, Gallatin, Carroll, Trimble, Henry, Owen, and Grant, which has one thousand four hundred and six appearances, and is but little more labor than judge Pryor now has. The business of this district would not require more than twenty six weeks of labor in the year.

The 7th district embraces Shelby, Spencer, Jefferson, and Oldham, with one thousand four hundred and seventeen appearances. Allow Jefferson ten weeks at each term, and yet the business for the whole circuit would not occupy more than twenty eight weeks in the year.

The 8th district is Nelson, Washington, Marion, Meade, Bullitt, Larue, Hardin, and Breckinridge, with one thousand four hundred and ninety one appearances. This district might require twenty eight or thirty weeks annually, but not more.

The 9th district is composed of Wayne, Russell, Adair, Cumberland, Casey, Clinton, Taylor, Green, Barren, Hart, Edmonson, Monroe, and Allen, with one thousand three hundred and sixty nine appearances. This, like the first district, has under one thousand four hundred appearances, but has a large territory.

It will appear that except the first and the ninth districts, all the others have over one thousand four hundred appearances, and under one thousand five hundred except the twelfth, which has one thousand five hundred and seventy four, and embraces Caldwell, Livingston, McCracken, Marshall, Calloway, Graves, Ballard, Hickman and Fulton.

The tenth district embraces Hancock, Grayson, Butler, Muhlenburg, Ohio, Daviess, Henderson, Union, Hopkins, and Crittenden, which had one thousand four hundred and seventy seven appearances, and is a district requiring as much labor as any other; but, yet lawyers from that district say the business can be well done, at the most, in thirty two weeks.

The eleventh district embraces Warren, Simpson, Logan, Todd, Christian, and Trigg, with one thousand four hundred and forty four appearances, and the business in this district can be well done in twenty eight weeks.

As at present laid off, the districts are very unequal—for instance, in the eighth district there were only three hundred and seventy five appearances; a few more than there were in the county of Harrison, fewer than in the county of Fayette, and fewer than in the county of Mason, or the county of Christian.

The eighteenth circuit was taken from the eighth, and it was said, for the purpose of providing a place for one who was in the way of others. The eighteenth district had but six hundred and sixty eight appearances, and to unite it and the eighth together as they formerly were, they had but one thousand and forty three. This shows that the districts should be greatly reduced in number.

The twelfth district is the largest, but it must necessarily have all the counties southwest of the Tennessee river in it, and also Caldwell county. With these counties it had less business than the tenth district which adjoins it; and, of course the county of Livingston has to be united with the twelfth, and thus constituted, it is the heaviest district in the number of appearances, though, perhaps, will not require more labor than the tenth. I have been assured that the business of this district can be conveniently done by one judge. It will be seen that the nineteenth district, which was the last one made, has as much business nearly, as both the eighth and eighteenth together.

In my judgment, as far as I have been able to learn of the business done, and likely to be done, twelve judges will be amply sufficient. I know that this is giving a great deal more labor to the judges than they now have, and some gentlemen think it is too much. They, however, should remember that the judges now are not occupied half their time in judicial capacity, and they cannot practice at the bar whilst in the receipt of a salary. I would say to a judge, I will give you more salary, but I intend to give you more work to do. In the very largest district you can lay off, you cannot have more than thirty or thirty five judicial weeks. Many would like to see a minimum salary inserted in the constitution. I think, however, that when the legislature is satisfied of there being more labor to be performed, they will be disposed to pay for it. I believe that by getting good judges, and giving them much to do, they will do their work well. They will feel there is more obligation resting upon them, as they receive their appointments direct from the hands of the people. I suppose that every judge will feel some pride in having been selected by the people to administer justice among them. They can do all the work well, and easily, and comfortably.

The following are the tables which were used by Mr. Apperson during his speech.

TWELVE CIRCUIT COURT DISTRICTS.

FIRST DISTRICT.		No. Cases.
Whitley,	- - - - -	72
Laurel,	- - - - -	51
Knox,	- - - - -	76
Harlan,	- - - - -	56
Rockcastle,	- - - - -	102
Owsley,	- - - - -	73
Clay,	- - - - -	89
Breathitt,	- - - - -	75
Perry,	- - - - -	66
Letcher,	- - - - -	66
Pike,	- - - - -	129
Floyd,	- - - - -	140
Johnson,	- - - - -	74
Morgan,	- - - - -	70

1140

SECOND DISTRICT.		No. Cases.
Lawrence,	- - - - -	108
Carter,	- - - - -	70
Greenup,	- - - - -	162
Lewis,	- - - - -	94
Fleming,	- - - - -	197
Bath,	- - - - -	288
Montgomery,	- - - - -	234
Clarke,	- - - - -	250

1403

THIRD DISTRICT.		No. Cases.
Mason,	- - - - -	378
Nicholas,	- - - - -	247
Harrison,	- - - - -	331
Bracken,	- - - - -	116
Bourbon,	- - - - -	266
Pendleton,	- - - - -	89
Campbell,	- - - - -	68

1495

FOURTH DISTRICT.		No. Cases.
Fayette,	- - - - -	432
Scott,	- - - - -	200
Franklin,	- - - - -	283
Anderson,	- - - - -	139
Woodford,	- - - - -	290
Jessamine,	- - - - -	138

1482

FIFTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Estill,	-	-	-	145
Madison,	-	-	-	215
Garrard,	-	-	-	237
Lincoln,	-	-	-	163
Pulaski,	-	-	-	171
Boyle,	-	-	-	134
Mercer,	-	-	-	346
				1411

SIXTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Kenton,	-	-	-	363
Boone,	-	-	-	142
Gallatin,	-	-	-	63
Carroll,	-	-	-	89
Trimble,	-	-	-	78
Henry,	-	-	-	225
Owen,	-	-	-	230
Grant,	-	-	-	216
				1406

SEVENTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Shelby,	-	-	-	296
Spencer,	-	-	-	77
Jefferson,	-	-	-	886
Oldham,	-	-	-	158
				1417

EIGHTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Nelson,	-	-	-	203
Washington,	-	-	-	311
Marion,	-	-	-	244
Meade,	-	-	-	138
Bullitt,	-	-	-	158
Larue,	-	-	-	113
Hardin,	-	-	-	199
Breckinridge,	-	-	-	125
				1491

NINTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Wayne,	-	-	-	113
Russell,	-	-	-	60
Adair,	-	-	-	97
Cumberland,	-	-	-	105
Casey,	-	-	-	94
Clinton,	-	-	-	63
Taylor,	-	-	-	40
Green,	-	-	-	200
Barren,	-	-	-	279
Hart,	-	-	-	85
Edmondson,	-	-	-	83
Monroe,	-	-	-	50
Allen,	-	-	-	100
				1369

TENTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Hancock,	-	-	-	63
Grayson,	-	-	-	64
Butler,	-	-	-	73
Muhlenburg,	-	-	-	171
Ohio,	-	-	-	148
Daviess,	-	-	-	180
Henderson,	-	-	-	188

Union,	-	-	-	195
Hopkins,	-	-	-	205
Crittenden,	-	-	-	190
				1477

ELEVENTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Warren,	-	-	-	224
Simpson,	-	-	-	59
Logan,	-	-	-	200
Todd,	-	-	-	293
Christian,	-	-	-	481
Trigg,	-	-	-	187
				1444

TWELFTH DISTRICT.				No. Cases.
Caldwell,	-	-	-	280
Livingston,	-	-	-	156
McCracken,	-	-	-	243
Ballard,	-	-	-	206
Graves,	-	-	-	159
Calloway,	-	-	-	116
Marshall,	-	-	-	36
Hickman,	-	-	-	96
Fulton,	-	-	-	283
				1574

Number of suits and prosecutions in nineteen circuit court districts, to-wit:

	Chancery.	Com'on law.	Crimin pros.	Total.
District, No. 1,	245	545	117	907
District, No. 2,	151	533	129	813
District, No. 3,	267	611	85	963
District, No. 4,	278	632	266	1176
District, No. 5,	39	871	134	1044
District, No. 6,	251	569	148	959
District, No. 7,	228	763	78	1069
District, No. 8,	82	196	97	375
District, No. 9,	197	569	164	930
District, No. 10,	296	642	185	1123
District, No. 11,	284	528	130	942
District, No. 12,	225	527	269	1021
District, No. 13,	287	459	142	888
District, No. 14,	199	415	146	760
District, No. 15,	106	224	100	430
District, No. 16,	290	511	338	1139
District, No. 17,	309	836	93	1238
District, No. 18,	135	421	112	668
District, No. 19,	114	332	371	817
				3,983 10,175 3,104 17,262

Mr. NUTTALL. It was a wise stroke of policy to submit these three propositions for a judiciary system to a joint committee for the purpose of compromise and concession, and it is my decided opinion that unless there is an obvious necessity, the convention should not depart from the report of that committee. Not that I regard it, as of itself, binding on the convention, but because it is a matter of concession and compromise on which extremes have met and united. It is upon this ground that all governments have been framed, and it is upon this ground that I shall support the report of the committee. I am glad also to hear the confession of my venerable friend from Nelson, (Mr.

Hardin,) for 'an open confession is good for the soul,' thus saith the Lord. I will not say of him, that in the times to which I allude, he "magnam partem vidit et magna pars fuit;" but it is said in the good book that—

"Long as the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return."

When the great question was agitated as to the constitutionality of the reorganizing act, and of the old court and the new court, I had the honor of a seat in the legislature, and I recollect that the gentleman himself, and the party who acted with him, went so far as not only to break down the new court, but the old court with it, for they refused to give them a salary, and with it fell every prosecuting attorney in Kentucky. I went against the whole thing, for I was a new court man, and as long as any did stand up for it, I was among them.

Well, for all I know, we in this body, as the senior gentleman from Nelson says, are a very wise set of individuals. I have gone around for the last two or three evenings for the purpose of visiting the members, for none of them will come and see me, and I really can't account for it, and I will venture to predict, as the result of my observation, that during the last three or four nights in the town of Frankfort, there have been more figures made than in the balance of the United States, for the same length of time. I have never before seen the same amount of figures on the face of the earth. I am not much at figures myself, never having cyphered further than the rule of three, and if we are not to come to a conclusion except through cyphering, then I have no earthly chance at all. With my friend from Montgomery, (Mr. Apperson,) and not him alone either, there is nothing in the world that cannot be done by figures. Is it the court of appeals, or the circuit courts, or the basis of population that is being argued? It makes no difference, in either case or in whatever case, the gentleman is prepared with his figures, and has the matter all laid off into districts. He reminds me of the doctor who was called on by a gentleman to see his wife, then on a sick bed. He called on her, and drawing out his big bottles prescribed doses to be given her, a quart at a time. Says the husband—"See here, boss, no more of that." "Let me alone," replied the doctor; "I only want to throw her into fits, and if I can do that she is cured, for I am hell on fits." So with the gentleman; if he can only throw the question into figures, he will carry it beyond a doubt. [Laughter.]

Now, I am for the twelve judges, believing that they can do all the work. We have a very excellent judge in my district, and I believe he can do the business for three or four more counties. But if their labors are to be increased, I should like to see them better paid, and I regret that the committee did not adopt the minimum of $1600 for their salaries. I want to secure good men, and do not desire to see any jack-legged lawyers on the bench. Men sufficiently qualified will not leave their practice for a less salary than $1600. My idea of a judiciary is to have fewer and better men, who will do more work and to pay them well for it.

Mr. CHAMBERS. Some misapprehension as to the amount of additional labor which each of the twelve circuit judges will have to perform, in case this provision is adopted, may grow out of the statements of gentlemen on this subject. The senior gentleman from Nelson says, the additional labor will be seven-twelfths; the gentleman from Oldham corrects him, and says it is seven-nineteenths, which is right as to the amount of additional labor imposed upon the twelve, and this gives the one-twelfth of seven-nineteenths as the additional labor of each of the twelve judges, which is somewhere about the one-thirty-fifth part of the whole business of our circuit courts. I am inclined to think that twelve judges can do the business, and do it well, if they are adequately paid, and I shall go for the section, with the understanding that the 9th section, which is restrictive of the legislative power to create additional circuits, shall be stricken out. I live in the same judicial circuit with the gentleman last up, and concur with him fully in opinion, as to the high qualifications, integrity, and business habits of our judge. It appears by the statements of the gentleman from Montgomery, that the judicial district in which I live contains as great a number of counties as any other judicial district in the state save one, and that the judge of this district decides as many cases as any other judge in the state; yet I am certain he could perform the additional labor of one more county, and this would be his one-twelfth of the seven-nineteenths to be divided, if the labor of the whole state be equally distributed among the twelve judges.

Mr. GRAY. I am satisfied, from my own knowledge, that twelve circuit judges will not do all the business of the state. Even now, with nineteen judges, in some of the counties, in Washington for instance, I understand that their chancery docket is so crowded that it is almost impossible to get a cause tried. Well, this evil will certainly be increased, if we reduce the number of judges to twelve. The judicial business of the country is now, probably at as low an ebb as it ever was in this state, and in making a constitution for future years, we should take into consideration the possible increase of litigation. It is only a few years since the popular will, from the want of facilities for the transaction of their judicial business, demanded the increase of the number of judicial districts to eighteen or nineteen. In the district where I reside, the business had increased so that a judge had to be brought from the northern section of the state, where there were too many, in order to relieve the litigants. And the judge had only about fifteen hundred appearances there, when this relief was considered necessary. I think, therefore, in contemplation of what must be the natural increase of business, we should not restrict the number of judges in the constitution, but leave it to the legislature to increase or decrease it, as the public necessities may require. But if we do fix the number, we clearly ought not to reduce it below fifteen, for I do not believe that even at this time, less than that number can get through with the dockets in each county in Kentucky without it, and with but twelve judges there would be such an accumulation of chancery business on the docket, that there would soon be no such thing as trying a chancery cause at all. But there was another portion of the report even more objectionable than this. It is, that no matter what may be the exigencies of the community, or the necessity for the increase of judicial labor, the people shall be denied the right, through the legislature, to increase the number of judges. Such, I maintain, will be the practical operation of the section providing that the number shall not be increased over sixteen, until the population of the state shall exceed one million and a half. All know that the increase of litigation is not governed by the increase of population. Now, I am for restricting legislation in some degree, but in a matter of this kind, so vitally important to the best interests of the people, I would not prevent the legislature from affording relief to the people, when their will and necessities may demand it. I doubt whether such a restriction exists in the constitution of any state in this Union, and if it does, it certainly ought not to. Let the people decide the matter for themselves. If they require more judges, give them the power to create them, and do not adopt a provision which will ever prevent them from increasing the number above sixteen. I believe that number to be necessary now, or that it will be, if the business of the state continues to increase in any thing like the proportion it has heretofore, by the next five or six years. And what is the reason—the apology offered for doing this? Why, it is said that if we pay them well, the judges will be more industrious in the discharge of their duties, and that therefore, a less number will be required. I acknowledge this in part, but gentlemen have abandoned this ground. While they refuse to the legislature the right to increase this number, they give to that body the full power to fix the salaries. Gentlemen should not feel themselves bound or restrained by the report of the committee; but if any amendment is needed they should be prepared to make it. The people certainly ought to have the right to create what tribunals they may need, and the right to pay their officers such salaries as may be proportionate to the labors they are required to perform. Do gentlemen believe that these salaries will ever be increased by the legislature, to the point that is here suggested and desired? I say they will not, for the people generally, believe that $1,200 is as much as the services of a judge are worth. I should therefore, have preferred that the salary should be fixed here. The legislature did once, when money was plenty, and every thing high, increase the salaries to $1,500, but it did not stand the test of time, and they were again reduced to $1,200. And gentlemen may certainly expect that if the matter is left to the legislature again, they will be fixed at not more than that amount.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the gentleman want to make a constitution which will prevent the people from reducing the salaries of their officers, if they desire it?

Mr. GRAY. I have made no motion of that sort. I believe that twelve judges are not enough, and that if we had more, their salaries could not be increased. And I say that, taking as an index for the future the course heretofore pursued, the salary will not be above $1,200, and that therefore, the purposes of those gentlemen, who, by fewer judges with higher salaries, expect to have all the judicial business performed, will not be achieved. I call upon gentlemen to consider these facts. If there are to be fewer judges with more duties imposed on them, I should certainly be willing to increase their salaries; but I believe the effect would be to clog the constitution, and risk its adoption by the people. I hope we shall not fix the number of judges in this constitution, or if the number should be retained there, I trust we may strike out the provision which prohibits the legislature from increasing the number.

Mr. MACHEN. In my district the judge not only discharges all the duties imposed upon him, but could do it were they thrice as much.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved the previous question, and it was ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to strike out twelve and insert fourteen, by yeas and nays, on the call of Mr. BALLINGER, and the convention refused to strike out—yeas 7, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, Thomas James, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner—7.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—64.

The fourth section was then read and adopted.

The fifth section was read, as follows:

“Sec. 5. The general assembly shall, at the same time that the judicial districts are laid off, direct elections to be held in each district, to elect a judge for said district, and shall prescribe how, and in what manner, the elections shall be held and conducted, and how the governor shall be notified of the result of the election, and who has been chosen: Provided, That such election shall be held at a different time from that at which elections are held for governor, lieutenant governor, and members of the general assembly.”

Mr. TRIPLETT suggested a verbal amendment, by which the election of circuit court judges should be first held on the second Monday of May, 1851, as was provided in the cases of the judges of the court of appeals.

The amendment was adopted, as was the section thus amended.

The sixth section was then read and adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 6. All persons qualified to vote for members of the general assembly, in each district, shall have the right to vote for judges."

The seventh section was read:

"Sec. 7. No person shall be eligible as judge of the circuit court who is not a citizen of the United States, a resident of the district for which he may be a candidate, two years next preceding his election, at least thirty years of age, and who has not been a practicing lawyer eight years, or whose service upon the bench of any court of record, when added to the time he may have practiced law, shall be equal to eight years."

Mr. WM. JOHNSON. This section contains a principle entirely new, and which I believe has never been incorporated into the constitution of any state in this union, to the extent in which it is here provided. I refer to the requisition of eight years' practice of the law, or practice and service as judge equal to that time, as a qualification for a candidate for the judgeship. No constitution of any state that I know of, adopts this principle save Louisiana, and there the requisition is for only five years. When we are about to enter upon new ground and establish a principle of this kind, particularly in view of the fact that there are forty two lawyers in this convention, and I say nothing against them, there ought at least to be full investigation. In the State of Mississippi, there is no such restriction. In New York, the only restriction is, as to the judges of the court of appeals, who are required to have been judges of some inferior court. In Louisiana there is a restriction, and they are required to have been practicing lawyers for five years. What has been the rule in Kentucky? Under the present constitution the candidate was not even required to be a citizen of the state, or twenty one years of age—there was no restriction at all. Therefore, when you are about to say to one hundred and fifty thousand voters in this state, not one of you shall be a judge, and to give to some two or three hundred citizens alone this exclusive privilege, I say it becomes necessary to look at the subject and to investigate it. It will be a liberal allowance to say that there are one thousand two hundred practicing lawyers in Kentucky, and of these not more than one fourth have practiced eight years, and it is to these alone you propose to give the exclusive right of being candidates for judge. You say that the people are the proper body to select these officers, and yet you restrict their choice out of one hundred and fifty thousand to some few hundred individuals. No matter how well qualified the candidate may be, you fix the iron rule that he shall not be eligible to the office unless he has been a practicing lawyer for eight years. No matter if he had practiced for seven years and eleven months, and become as good a lawyer as was possible for him to become in another month, still he would not be eligible. I had this idea in my mind when I called for the yeas and nays on a similar section in the article in relation to the court of appeals. My objection to the restriction, however, is not so great in regard to that body, as in regard to the circuit judges. I now move to strike out that restriction in this article, with a view, at least, to secure a reduction in the term of years required, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARDIN. The action of the circuit court committee has been to make their article conform and harmonize, as far as possible, with that on the court of appeals, and in so doing they have conceded many qualifications as to age, &c., which they were disposed to require. This qualification, which the gentleman from Scott proposes to strike out, is the same as that contained in the court of appeals article, and if it is necessary for the judges of that court, surely it is necessary for the circuit judge. He has no body to help him, no time given him to make up his opinion, and must decide hundreds of controversies during the rapid progress of a jury trial, and he ought, therefore, to be a remarkably well read lawyer, and not only that, but he should be one whose mind has great powers of concentration and energy, because the lives, liberty, and the fortunes of men are to depend upon his decisions, given upon the spur of the occasion, and without a moment's time for consideration. The court of appeals may take time. A circuit judge, above all others in the state, should be a man of the highest order of talents and attainments. We know that there are men of remarkable eloquence who can run off with the feelings of the voters, and perhaps secure an election from the people thereby, who possess no legal attainments, and who would never get the appointment from a governor and senate, upon whom this influence could not be brought to operate. I knew a young man who was the finest orator I have ever heard, and I do verily believe that if the candidate was eligible at the age of twenty one or twenty two, unless his opponent was a man of great ability, he would run off with all the voters. Great God, how the boys would gather around him at a battalion muster. I have seen him pour in the hot shot, one after another, until he would set the whole battalion in a flame. There will be such men now and then, and what sort of a judge would they make? I will not say a word against him, for the poor fellow is dead and gone, but he never would have made a judge. I do hope, therefore, we shall retain this qualification for a judge. We have already required a qualification of age, and this being the most responsible office in the state, for the truth of which I appeal to every practicing lawyer, requiring the greatest experience and the highest attainments. I do hope the gentleman will be content with having called the yeas and nays, as he says, on the section of the court of appeals article, and let this section go as it is.

Mr. CLARKE. I concur with the gentleman last up, and with the gentleman who offered this amendment, but not upon the same points. As a general thing, these brilliant and sparkling men to whom the gentleman referred as firing their hot shots and carrying off whole battalions, never make good lawyers. Yet this very young man, at the end of eight years practice, without being a better lawyer than he was at the end of four years, might then, with the aid of his hot shot, according to the section as it stands, have mounted the circuit court bench. I agree with the gentleman as to the importance of the office, and that its incumbent should be a man well qualified, but just here the gentleman and I separate, and I go with the gentleman from Scott, (Mr. W. Johnson.) I maintain that the people are competent to judge of these qualifications. Under our present constitution none of these qualifications have been required; neither has it been required that the governor and a majority of the senate should be lawyers; yet to them was given the power, without restriction, to judge of the legal abilities and attainments of a candidate. But when you are about to place the appointment in the hands of the people, then you come in with your instructions, and seek to throw shackles upon their exercise of that power. If the people are capable of self-government, and of choosing their own officers, why throw these restrictions around them. If you would not impose them on the governor, why should you on the people? If you were to give to the governor the power to appoint his own secretary of state, would you say in the constitution that this secretary should be a fine pensman and a good clerk? I reckon not. You leave this to the governor to determine, though the secretary of state is a very responsible officer, but as I have remarked through the whole sitting of the convention, whenever it is proposed to make an officer elective by the people, a mutual distrust of them pervades the minds of a large majority of this body, and they at once proceed to throw such restrictions around the people as will stamp upon the face of this constitution our distrust of their capacity. I shall in this instance, as in regard to the judges of the court of appeals, vote against these restrictions. I believe in the capacity and the competency of the people to judge as to these qualifications for themselves. I have not the remotest idea that the time will ever come in this commonwealth when the people of any judicial district will be so blind to, and regardless of their own interests and rights as to select for the office of judge a man who is not competent to the discharge of its duties. Having the most abiding and lasting confidence in the intelligence of the people on this subject, I am willing to submit the right unrestricted to them. And if they do on one occasion select a man who is not qualified, their interests, their dearest rights, are all in jeopardy, and if any body suffers, it is them, and as they can soon ascertain when they have done wrong, they have then the motive to do right, and will do it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman has poured out a torrent of indignant eloquence against those who are so unfortunate as to believe that certain restrictions, if you please, in the constitution will be wholesome. He has thought proper to denounce that portion of the house, who entertain such opinions, as being distrustful of the intelligence of the people. I either do not understand the subject, or else the gentleman does not. He seems to distinguish between this convention and the people, and he says this convention is about to throw shackles around the action of the people. Why, the action of this convention, whatever it may be, is to be submitted to the people, and if they ratify it, then it becomes the direct action, and the will of the whole people. It is then the whole people prescribing to the various districts of the state, what is their will. You might as well attempt to throw shackles about a flash of lightning, as around the sovereign people of this commonwealth. As long as the constitution about to be made, shall exist, it will be the will of the whole people of this commonwealth, ascertained by their ratification of it, and whenever they object to it, they will take measures to revoke that will—they will call a convention and modify their organic laws. Upon the principle the gentleman contends for, that you should remove all restrictions, where is the propriety of declaring that the citizen shall be twenty one years of age before he is entitled to vote? The sovereign people have the intelligence to judge of that matter. Why are we assembled to make any fundamental law? If there is no necessity for some fixed principles of government, why not say at once, that the people, in their sovereign capacity, are capable of self government, and adopt no such fundamental law. I say, carry out the principle urged by the gentleman, and it amounts to that, and does not stop short of the destruction of all fundamental law. The doctrine of the gentleman reminds me of an anecdote, I once heard, of an old gentleman who had been engaged for some time in a debauch. He came home after nightfall, and found his wife in bed, and feeling considerable nausea about the stomach and desiring something acid, he went to her, and asked, "Jinsey, is there any buttermilk?" He was told, alta voce, to look for it in the press, and after fumbling about in the dark without finding any, he again approached his sulky wife and said, "Jinsey dear, did you say the buttermilk was in the press." "Yes" was her angry reply, "go 'long and look for it." Meeting with no better success, said he, at length "Jinsey, Jinsey, (raising his voice.) Jinsey, I say, is the buttermilk in a crock, or is it just loose so." It occurs to me we ought to put our buttermilk in a crock, and not leave it "just loose so." But carry out the argument of the gentleman and we are to have every thing "just loose so." The gentleman who first made the motion to strike out, does not seem to object to the restriction. He does not think the sovereign people assembled here through their delegates may not impose restrictions upon the various districts of the state—the whole speaking to a part; but he thinks the time of practice required, too long, and is against—not the principle, but the matter in its details. He thinks eight years too long, and he says that a practicing lawyer of seven years and eleven months may be just as good a judge as the man who has practiced eight years, and yet you exclude him. We have to fix upon some time, and if it was seven, six, or five years, still there would be the same objections existing. It was the experience and declaration of one of the greatest legal sages the world ever saw, that it is necessary there should be, "viginti annos lucubrationes," twenty years of study, to compass the science of law. We have not prescribed so long a period. We have proposed that eight years shall be the time. The mind and the judgment, at the age of thirty, are usually matured, and the professional experience which eight years bring with them, gives promise that our judicial candidates will be conversant, not only with the theory but the practice of the law. A judge, no matter how well learned he may be in the theory and elements of the law, would be exceedingly awkward, if called upon to dispense justice, without having become familiar with the practice of our courts. This is rarely acquired to the extent required, in less than eight years. The experience of all lawyers, and the practice which has obtained in judicial appointments in Kentucky, justify this. I do not know that an instance has ever come to my knowledge, where a man was placed on the bench in this state who had not practiced for eight or ten years.

The gentlemen have said that we were about to impose restrictions which were not required in the old constitution. Gentlemen would find by referring to that instrument that the circuit court is not the creature of the old constitution, but of the legislature. It has been demanded that in the fundamental law of the land there should be less discretion given to the legislature, and hence we are fixing these details in the constitution. It is the people, by their delegates here, doing this thing, which, when submitted to them and ratified, will become their direct act.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am one of those who believe that the people are competent to select all their officers. If so, there is no necessity for these restrictions in the constitution—if they are incompetent, why then the power to make the selection should be confided to some other tribunal. In N. York, Illinois, Mississippi, Iowa and Wisconsin, the only states I believe in the Union who elect their judges, you find none of these restrictions imposed on the people. Nor were there any restrictions of a similar character imposed upon the appointing power of the governor in Kentucky under the old constitution. The only restrictions, as to governor, members of the legislature, &c., were as to age and residence. Under the federal constitution it is the same. Now we are willing to go as far in this matter of restriction as in the instances to which I have referred, but no further. Turn your attention to those states where they elect their clerks, and you will find that, except in Indiana, a certificate is required of none of them. I shall support the amendment.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and it was ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. JOHN-SON'S amendment, and it was rejected yeas 31, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thos. D. Brown, Wm. Chenault, B. L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, William Johnson, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Michael L. Stoner, William R. Thompson, John Wheeler—31.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Charles Chambers, Jas. S. Chrisman, Jas. Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benj. F. Edwards, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thos. J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Alex. K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Ira Root, Jas. Rudd, Albert G. Talhott, John D. Taylor, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—38.

And then the convention adjourned.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. GEORGE W. BRUSH.

INELIGIBILITY OF CIRCUIT JUDGES.

Mr. LISLE. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

"Whereas, it is necessary for the protection and security of the citizens of this commonwealth, that the independence of the judiciary shall be strictly preserved, and nothing should be done which would be calculated to weaken or destroy the independence of that department of the government. Therefore,

Resolved, That the circuit judges should be ineligible for the term of one year from the expiration of the term for which they may be elected."

Mr. President: Before any action is taken on the resolution which has just been read by the secretary, I desire to submit a few remarks. The subject of the election of the circuit judges has not been discussed in the committee of the whole. I regard it as one of the most important which has come under the consideration of the convention.

I am satisfied, from the manifestations I have seen in this house, that the fate of my proposition will be somewhat similar to that of my friend from Bourbon; nevertheless, I am willing to risk what little reputation I have on the truth of the proposition.

Perhaps it is proper that I should say that before my constituents I advocated the election of the judges by the people, nay, I may say that I desired the election of all, or nearly all, the officers, and I still desire it. I advocated the election of the judges by the people, not because I thought it free from objection, but because I thought it less objectionable than the present mode, or any other mode which I had heard suggested. How it will work, time only will show. I believe, if well guarded, it will do well.

In relation to the judges of the appellate court, I desire to see them elected by districts. The object to be attained is an intelligent, upright, independent judiciary. When I say an independent judiciary, I mean that the judges shall be free from, and above all improper influence. Such a judiciary all desire. It is admitted that such a judiciary is necessary to the safety and protection of all classes, and more particularly to the humble in society. It is agreed and settioned that the judges shall be elected. Sir, I desire to see the experiment of electing judges fairly tested in Kentucky, though I acknowledge that I have not so much confidence in it as some gentlemen profess. We have been assured that there is no danger to be apprehended from that mode of selecting a judge. We have been assured that we have the light of experience in other states to direct us, and that this light so illuminates our pathway, that the way-faring man, though a fool, need not err therein. The light which we have from our sister states on this subject, is not so clear to my mind as it has appeared to other gentlemen. Let us examine for a moment what that light is. Mississippi was, I believe, the first state in this union which ventured on the election of her inferior judges. She has been electing them since 1831 or 1832. In that state the circuit judges are required to interchange or alternate circuits. This interchanging is a conservative feature in her system; but even with that feature, how has it worked there? I acknowledge that I am not well informed in relation to its practicable operation in Mississippi. I have been informed, however, by respectable gentlemen, who professed to have been present and witnessed it, that during the pressure in 1836 and 1837, their judges, perhaps, and sheriffs, resigned to avoid holding courts and making sales of property, and were immediately re-elected. Such a course as that might suit a state where the doctrine of repudiation meets with popular favor; but, sir, I hope the day may never come, when it will be countenanced in Kentucky. She has given the highest evidence, under the most trying circumstances, that it would not. Sir, during the pressure in this state in 1823 and 1824, when the country was largely involved in debt, when ruinous sacrifices of property were made, by sales under execution, and when the legislature interposed and passed laws and formed a court, to protect the debtor class from those great sacrifices, Kentucky, be it said to her honor, law-abiding as she ever has been, and as I hope ever will be, rose up as one man, and repudiated this new court and those relief laws, and sustained an upright and independent judiciary which had declared those laws unconstitutional.

Georgia, though she has elected her superior judges for some time, has only recently commenced electing her inferior judges. New York and Iowa have been electing their judges since 1846, and Wisconsin since 1848. So, sir, it will be seen that in none of the states in which they elect their judges, except Mississippi, has the system been long enough in existence to test its practicable operation, and it becomes the friends of an elective judiciary to be cautious, and to throw such guards around it, as will avoid the evils which many good and wise men fear will result from it.

Sir, there is another consideration which induces me to proceed with caution and prudence, and to guard in every possible way against any evils which may result from an elective judiciary. It is, that the sages and patriots who formed our federal and most of our state constitutions, were unwilling to elect judges. It has been asserted on this floor, that we are disposed to pay too much deference to the opinions of our ancestors. But, sir, the men who formed those constitutions were wise and patriotic. They loved liberty; it had cost them much. They had confidence in the people and believed that they were capable of self-government, though they may not have professed as much devotion to them as we have. I acknowledge, sir, that I revere the memory of those great and good men. They were the devoted friends of civil and religious liberty, and I respect the works of their hands. They were willing to confide to the people of this country the election of their governor, members of congress, and members of the state legislatures, and virtually of the President of the United States. Why was it that they thought it unsafe to risk the election of the judges? There was, I suppose, some reason for withholding from the people the election of judges, while they confided to them the election of other officers. I acknowledge, sir, that I am timid, when we are about to subvert great principles which are recognized in our constitutions, state and federal, under which we have lived and prospered for half a century, and from a few scattered colonies, have grown to be a great nation of thirty states—the admiration of the world—principles which were sanctioned by a Washington, a Madison, a Franklin, an Adams, and a Jefferson, and, to come nearer home, by a Breckinridge, a Rowan, a Marshall, and other illustrious names. Sir, my friend from Knox (Mr. Woodson,) while he charges others with too much respect for the opinions of those sages and patriots, boldly proclaims that he is for carrying his principles out, and is for electing all the federal officers, judges, postmasters, &c. Sir, when this is done, what will be its effect on the peculiar institutions of this country? They will, most assuredly, be swallowed up by what the gentleman was pleased to call the aristocracy of numbers.

Have gentlemen reflected on the difference there is between the election of executive and legislative officers, and that of judges? It is the duty of executive officers to see that the laws are executed, and that they operate alike on all. Your congressmen and legislators enact laws, which affect all alike. If they pass oppressive laws, they and their families and relations and friends live under them. If an oppressive law is passed, or an objectionable vote given by a legislator, as it affects the whole community, they become excited, and call their representative to an account. This we have all witnessed. But, sir, it is not so with a judge; he decides private rights between individuals, in which the community at large are not particularly interested. In a legal contest between you and myself, Mr. President, the judge may decide for you and against me, without affecting himself or the community. It was, I imagine, for this reason that the framers of our federal, and most of our state constitutions, thought it unsafe to elect a judge, and it is for this reason, that while I desire the election of the judges, I still wish to guard against any evils which may arise from it.

I have said sir, that before my constituents I advocated the election of the judges. I have heard no argument which has shaken my opinion and views on that subject; but while I advocated the election of judges, I gave it as my deliberate opinion to the people whom I have the honor to represent here, that it was unsafe to elect a judge and make him re-eligible immediately after the expiration of the term for which he was elected. I desired their election, but that they should be ineligible. Entertaining these views, which were freely expressed and discussed, I was returned as a delegate to this body. I desire faithfully, as far as I can, to carry these opinions out. It has been urged against the principle of ineligibility, that it strikes at the principle of electing by the people. Sir, there may be plausible objections urged against any mode of appointment which I have heard named. I have stated that I advocated the election of judges—not because I considered it free from objection—but because it is less objectionable than any other mode which I have heard pointed out. Now, sir, when a gentleman presents himself the first time as a candidate for a judgeship, he presents himself on the great platform of equality. He has no official power which he can use to secure his election. But when you once place him in power, you should throw such guards around him as to prevent his using his official power to perpetuate its continuance. It is a dangerous principle in government, to place power in the hands of any man which he may use to continue his power. Sir, can the power of a judge be thus used? I think it can, and I am, therefore, for making him ineligible for one year, to avoid its exercise.

It has not been, and I suppose will not be, denied, that the judges have, and will continue to have, immense power in their hands. They are to decide on the lives, the liberties, and the fortunes of the citizens of this commonwealth; and, to some extent, will have them in their hands. Will any gentleman venture to assert that this immense power in the hands of a corrupt judge, might not be used to secure his re-election? I do not say that it often, or even ever, would be so used; but I maintain that it might be, and that it is the part of prudence, in arranging our organic law, so to form it as to avoid, as far as possible, the improper use of this power, by any judge. If we are so fortunate as always to have good judges, it will do no harm; but if we should have bad ones, it may do much good.

We have been assured by honorable gentlemen on this floor, that there is no danger of a judge ever attempting to exercise his power for improper purposes. This may or may not be. Judges are men, and sometimes not the best of men. Sir, it was said by my friend from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis,) that the Lord's prayer could not be bettered. I would apply a portion of that inimitable prayer to the judges which we may have—"lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."

My friend from Simpson (Mr. Clarke,) told us on Saturday, that the judges possessed more power than any officers of this government—that they had in their hands the lives, liberties, and fortunes of the citizens. And my friend from Adair (Mr. Gaither,) drew us a dark picture of the judiciary of this and other countries. When speaking of the judiciary, he said:

"I have witnessed the operations of the judicial arm of the government, and paid some attention to the judicial history, not only of our country, but of times past in other governments. And I find that, according to their number, there were as many blood-thirsty despots and tyrants, and infinitely more, among the judiciary, than ever disgraced the legislative halls of any country. Let any man read the history of the state trials in Great Britain, and he will learn that the best blood the world ever saw, has been sacrificed at the shrine of judicial tyranny. Mark the history of the United States, and what will you there discover in relation to the judiciary? Does it exhibit them in a light to be regarded as the depot and reservoir of our liberties, and the asylum to which we must carry ourselves for safety? In this country we have been taught a different doctrine, it may be however, of a school which certain portions of this community will not recognize or adopt. We are told, and every man who has regarded the practical operations of our judiciary, must concede it, that they are embarrassing and suppressing the liberties of the country, gradually, yet certainly, by their decisions, and by their operations on the political acts of government, depriving the sovereign people of many of their rights. They are the great high priests of political jesuitism, and passive obedience and non-resistance will be the inevitable consequence, if the people listen to the doctrines being inculcated by many of the judiciary."

Sir, after the gentleman had drawn this dark and frightful picture of the judiciary, and asserted its power, they oppose any restraints to prevent its improper exercise, and propose that the judges shall be eligible for re-election as often as they choose to present themselves; and thus, sir, they would throw on the community these "great high priests of political jesuitism," with the strongest temptation to exercise their priestly and jesuitical powers. And, sir, they will exercise them, whenever it becomes necessary to secure their re-election.

There is no class in society which are so deeply interested in having an independent, intelligent, and upright judiciary, as the poor and humble. Government was instituted to protect the weak and humble in society against the aggressions of the strong and powerful. The strong man in society can protect himself. Sir, the goddess of justice is represented as being blind, that the parties whose causes were to be decided, might not even be seen; but now, sir, the parties are not only to be seen, but if you make your circuit judges re-eligible, there will be the strongest temptation held out to them, to court the favor of the powerful and influential in society, at the expense of the more humble. But it is said, that if a judge should thus act he would array all the humble in society against him, and as they are much the most numerous, such a course would be fatal to him. Sir, would it be so? I think not. Men take but little interest in the affairs of other men, and particularly in their law suits. It is not like legislation. Judgments and decrees affect individuals only, but legislation affects all. An oppressive law affects all, and all become parties to it; but not so of the decisions of a court. Sir, if I was disposed, I could refer to hundreds of cases with which history abounds, to show that gentlemen are mistaken in this position. I will mention only one. And it is a strong case, sir. There once lived a man—nay, he was more than man—he was God and man. He was poor and humble as far as this world's goods were concerned. He had not where to lay his head. He had gone about all his life doing good. He had raised the dead, he had opened the eyes of the blind, he had healed the sick, and he had fed the hungry. And yet the Saviour of the world was brought before a judge. His character and course of life were certainly well calculated to excite the sympathy, affection, and admiration of the multitude; yet we are informed that “when the chief priests and the officers saw him, they cried out, ‘crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, take ye him, and crucify him, for I find no fault in him.’” Here, sir, we find this judge yielding to the popular feeling against justice, and against the convictions of his own conscience; and this example illustrates another point in my argument; that is, that a judge may use improperly his official power. We are told that “Pilate said unto him, whence art thou? but Jesus gave him no answer. Then said Pilate unto him, speakest thou not unto me, knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and I have power to release thee?” Sir, may it not be, if you make your circuit judges re-eligible, and they desire a re-election, that they will thus speak, or intimate to the hundreds and thousands, whose lives, liberties, and fortunes, will be, to some extent, in their hands. Men are the same frail, imperfect creatures now, which they were two thousand years ago. I ask honorable gentlemen who are disposed to differ with me, if this great power in the hands of a judge who was disposed to use it to secure his re-election, would not be irresistible. Sir, we have been told by honorable gentlemen on this floor, that there are men all over this state, who can and do exercise immense influence in elections. Suppose a judge desires a re-election; and suits should come up before him in the various counties of his circuit, between gentlemen of this class, who could control their fifties and hundreds, on one side, and an humble individual who had but one vote, on the other; think you that a judge might not use his official power to secure his re-election? It seems to me that no judge would desire to be placed in such a situation. Sir, it is not only desirable that the law should be administered impartially, without favor or affection, but it is important that litigants should feel assured that no improper influence has been brought to bear in the decision of their causes. Nothing is more calculated to lessen the respect for judicial decisions than a want of this confidence. Sir, it is due to the judge to place him in a situation where his motives cannot be impugned, and while we do this, we should form our constitution with an eye to the fact that men are frail and erring, and that bad men may and will get into power. If men were perfect, we should need no constitution or laws.

To show the power and influence of a judge, I will mention another fact, which will be duly appreciated by every gentleman of the profession of which I am an humble member. When a judge refuses to sign a bill of exceptions, you call on by-standers to sign it, and every lawyer will agree with me, that it is very difficult to get by-standers to sign a bill of exceptions when a judge refuses to do it. Few men are willing voluntarily to incur his displeasure. All desire to be on good terms with the judge who may be called on, we know not how soon, to decide on our rights. Though we may not be involved in law, yet no man knows when that misfortune may befall him.

Sir, you propose to make your governor ineligible, and your sheriff, after the second term, and why? Because they may use their official power to perpetuate it. I conceive that it is much more important that a judge should be ineligible, for after his election he has more power which he might bring to bear to secure his re-election, than either or both these other officers. If you have an upright, learned, and independent judge, he will act as a restraint on your sheriff, your clerk, and many other officers; but sir, let all these officers combine to secure their re-election, as they most likely would do, and the man who comes in contact with them and their official power would have most woeful odds to contend against. Sir, I desire that every man, who presents himself before the people for public favor, shall present himself, so far as practicable, on terms of perfect equality, and that capacity and merit alone shall decide the contest.

We have been told by my friend from Oldham, (Mr. Mitchell,) that now is the time to raise the judicial superstructure. So say I; but let us lay its foundation with wisdom and caution. We have been admonished by that gentleman, that we should disregard the dogmas of conservatism. Perhaps it would be as well for the country, if some of us possessed a little more of it. He and my friend from Adair, animadverted on the independence of the judiciary. Sir, whilst I desire to see the judges elected by the people that they may be responsible to them for their conduct, and that they shall acknowledge them as the source of their power, still I hope that the day may never come when this glorious commonwealth, the land of my nativity, shall be cursed with an ignorant, weak, time-serving, electioneering judiciary. Sir, I agree with the gentleman from Bracken, (Mr. W. C. Marshall,) that no greater curse could befall any country.

It has been objected that the principle of ineligibility in a circuit judge, argues a want of capacity in the people to elect their officers. I think not. To gentlemen who argue thus, I would say be consistent. You propose that your governor shall be ineligible, and that your sheriff shall be made ineligible after the second term; you propose to throw certain restrictions around almost all your officers; you propose that no man shall be a judge, unless he has been a licensed lawyer and has practiced his profession a certain time, and that he has attained a certain age and resided in the district or circuit for a period of time; you require your clerk to have a certificate of his qualification; and you require qualification as to age and residence in your senators and legislators. All these are but restraints on the elective franchise, and gentlemen who profess such high devotion to principle, should strike out all these restraints. Sir, government itself is a system of restraint. I admit that no restraint should be imposed on any individual, which is not necessary for the welfare and preservation of the whole. But the question is, is the restraint of ineligibility on a circuit judge, a necessary one? That is the great question.

Sir, it is not a matter of so much importance to the great body of the community, whether A or B is judge; but they are all interested and deeply interested in having the duties of the station well performed. The great object is not to provide stations for a few individuals, for but a few, comparatively speaking, can be judges; but it is to obtain a proper discharge of the duties of the station. Sir, the people desire a good judiciary; it is necessary for their protection and for the peace and welfare of society, and they will submit to such restraints as are necessary to the attainment of that great object. Sir, one of the objects for which we have been called here by the people is to throw greater restraints around legislators elected directly by the people. The people themselves have demanded this at our hands. They demand that the power of contracting debt, except in cases of emergency, and that to a limited extent, and the power of granting divorces shall be taken from the representatives elected directly by their votes. And they require that their representatives shall not meet as often as they have done.

Gentlemen who argue against all restraints on individuals, strike at the first great principle of all governments. In the formation of government each individual agrees to surrender a portion of his natural rights, in order that he may be secured in the enjoyment of the balance. Sir, do gentlemen wish to see our judicial decisions as uncertain and as changeable as our legislation has been? If they do, let them so organize the system, that the judicial decisions shall reflect truly, all the changes in public opinion, and they will have accomplished their object. Such a judiciary would unhinge society. None of the rights which we hold so dear would be secure. If you would have decisions uniform and consistent, you must give some element of stability to the system. I would as soon suppose that the majestic oak would stand unmoved without support, amidst the raging storm, as that your courts would withstand the frequent changes of public sentiment, without some element of the kind. Sir, when you elect your circuit judges for a short time, and make them re-eligible, you court the storm with little or no power of resistance. Say at once how long you think it prudent that a circuit judge should preside, elect him for that period, and make him ineligible for one year thereafter, and you thus to a great extent draw him from the arena of politics during the time he is judge, and he applies himself to the duties of his station, and to reading and study which are so indispensable to a judge. Some weeks since, I procured a list which was made out from the record in the office of the secretary of state, of all the circuit judges which we have had in Kentucky since the adoption of the circuit court system. The list may not be entirely complete, as there was some difficulty in making it, owing to the want of an index to the early executive journals. I suppose, however, that the list may be relied on. From this list it appears that we have had in the state sixty-two circuit judges, including the Louisville chancellor. In this list persons are not included who were appointed and did not accept, and yet I find that said sixty-two judges have served on an average eight years and eight months. Of these seven have died, thirty-five have resigned, and twenty are still acting. Several of these judges have been twice commissioned—and in making the estimate of the average length of time which they have served, the computation has been made of the whole length of time they served under both commissions, as if there had been but one.

It has been objected to the principle of ineligibility in a circuit judge, that it would withdraw from the judge all stimulant to improvement, and that in time the high judicial character of Kentucky would be lowered. I am not for lowering but elevating it, and I ask my friend from Todd, (Mr. Bristow,) and my friend from Oldham, (Mr. Mitchell,) who have urged this objection, to examine the list to which I have referred, and they will there find that it is not to those judges who have presided longest on the circuit court bench, to whom they can refer as the brightest ornaments in the list of Kentucky's distinguished jurists. Sir, there are other stations sufficiently alluring to excite and stimulate men of talents and ability to exertion; but shall we risk inflicting on the country the evils of an electioneering judiciary with the hope of stimulating a few men to greater exertion?

What evil to the community can arise from making the circuit judges ineligible? There will be no circuit in the state in which there will not be several persons, between whose qualifications for a judgeship, there will be but little difference. It will bring about rotation in office, which was one of the objects for which this convention was called; competition will thus be excited, and it will, as I verily believe, be a conservative and wholesome feature in our constitution. But let the fate of the proposition be what it may, I shall have the proud satisfaction of having advocated the position here which I did before my constituents.

Sir, at this time I will not ask for a vote of the convention upon my resolution, for it may come up in another shape when we have the judiciary articles before us. I now merely ask that it be passed by informally.

It was passed over accordingly.

THE CIRCUIT COURTS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the articles on the judiciary.

The question first in order was on the eighth section of the article concerning circuit courts, which was read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The term of office of the judges of the circuit court shall be six years from the day of the election. They shall be commissioned by the governor, and continue in office until their successors be qualified. The removal of a judge from his district shall vacate his office, and when a vacancy may happen from any cause, it shall be filled as hereinafter prescribed."

Mr. HARDIN. There were three propositions in the committee on circuit courts, fixing the term of the judge—one for eight years, another for six years, and another for four years. The committee finally settled on six years, but finding the committee on the court of appeals had fixed the term of those judges at eight years, the matter was reconsidered, and the term of the circuit judges made to conform to that. In the committee of thirty it was again fixed at six years. That committee also provided that the term should commence on the day of election, with a view of uniformity throughout the state.

Mr. LISLE moved to amend by inserting the words, "and that they shall be ineligible for the term of one year from the expiration of the term for which they may be elected."

Mr. KELLY. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HARDIN. I have no argument to make on this subject. It was a matter upon which the committee divided equally, and was, therefore, reported as it is found.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I was opposed to making the judges re-eligible, because I considered one of the great means of securing the independence of the judiciary to be ineligibility. I was opposed also to the shortness of the term, believing that six years was not a term sufficient to secure the best men of the country. However, in the committee of thirty, a compromise was had on six years. I believe that either six or eight years is too limited. If the number of years shall be fixed at six, and the number of judges reduced to twelve, as proposed in this report, my word for it, and I call the convention to witness it this day, it will be the greatest misfortune that ever befell this country. What man of the proper character, ability and legal learning in the state would occupy the position of circuit judge under such circumstances? None; it would be accepted only by men wholly unfit for the place, and who could not make their salt at the bar. I am fully satisfied that this will be the case if the term is reduced to six years, and the judge made re-eligible. I am against re-eligibility if you give a fair term and proper salary. My favorite idea is, that no man should go on the bench of the circuit court until he had attained the age of thirty, and that no man should come off of it by a limitation of the term until he had served for fifteen years. And I was willing to give him a salary of $2000, so that it should be an inducement to competent, qualified men to go on the bench, with the prospect when they retired of having received something like a compensation for their services. But to go on the bench, with the certainty of being turned out at the end of six years, after the loss of all their practice, and being obliged then to come in competition with the boys who had sprung up around them in the struggle for existence, a man of the proper qualifications would never consent to do it. Hold out the inducements to which I have referred and you will have men of talent on the bench; restrict it, as the gentleman from Green, (Mr. Lisle) proposes, and prudent men of that character will not accept of the office. If the term is to be limited to six years, the incumbent of the office ought to be re-eligible. I have made these remarks to define my position, having before opposed re-eligibility.

Mr. MORRIS. I have been in favor of a long term and ineligibility. I have no disposition, however, to interfere with the compromise of the committee, but in order that I may not be misunderstood, hereafter, I wish to say that I shall vote for re-eligibility because I consider the term proposed to be too short to admit of ineligibility.

Mr. IRWIN. I am opposed to the re-eligibility of judges, and I think the term proposed too short. I move to strike out six and to insert twelve years, and upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT ruled the amendment out of order, there being a pending amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am in favor of the re-eligibility of the judiciary, and I am so on principle. I regard the re-eligibility of the judges, as bringing about what we all desire and aim to secure—an independent, a safe, and an enlightened judiciary. There is no system in government, no appointment to any office under any government to which the ingenuity of man may not find some objection. In considering the question, whether a judge should be re-eligible or not, the proper light in which to view it in my judgment, is whether the inducement and incentive to labor and to integrity is not best secured by holding out to him, especially when he has to come before a popular tribunal, the prospect of a re-election—and whether the inducement to good behavior and purity is not greater thereby, than if you tell him that no matter how he behaves or acts, whether he is corrupt or indolent, or comes up to the highest standard of judicial excellence, in either event he is unfit for re-election. According to my judgment, there is no doubt on the subject. I think every thing goes to show, that a bad man will be actuated, as all bad men are, by selfish motives, and that the very fact, that he might lose his office when he came before the people for re-election, would repress his bad feelings, and hold out a corrective on his bad passions. A good judge would also have every motive to the pure, intelligent, and industrious discharge of his duties, in the knowledge that he would be rewarded for it by the people. Gentlemen talk about rotation in office, and those who have talked about it as a democratic principle, will get up and ask us to fix a term of twelve years! That would be rotation in office with a vengeance. My idea of rotation in office is, to let the people have the right to vote a man in or out of office, and to have short terms, so as to give them the choice. It is not re-eligibility, for that deprives the people of the right to rotate in office. It is short terms that gives them that right. I am therefore in favor of the term of six years and of the re-eligibility of the judiciary, and I believe that both will tend to bring about the object we all have in view, an independent, enlightened, and pure administration of justice.

Mr. DIXON. I rise to express my full approbation of the principle contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Green. I thought when I came here it was right and I still think so, and I shall vote for the amendment. I ask my friend from Kenton, (Mr. Stevenson,) this question; suppose a judge on the bench, under the expectation that he may be re-elected, should surrender up the rights of some weak litigant, to secure the influence of some powerful litigant, would his rejection by the people remedy the evil and the wrong inflicted on the weaker litigant? I do not see how it would. The fact that the judge was not re-elected, would not in any way remedy or mitigate the wrong to which the individual had been subjected. I have given my views on this subject before, and I am satisfied that the principle of the amendment is right, and I should, though I have little hope of it, like to see it adopted in this constitution.

Mr. T. J. HOOD. I am disposed to stand by the compromise, reported by the committee, and I have at all times been in favor of the re-eligibility of judges. Those gentlemen who are opposed to it, seem to look to the single idea that by a long term, sufficient inducements will be held out to secure men of the first order of ability to occupy the station. Now then, those in favor of re-eligibility, look further and beyond that. We also wish to hold out the inducement when they have attained that station, to discharge its duties faithfully, by making them responsible at short periods to the people. Then, if satisfied with his discharge of the duties, the people will reward him, by re-electing him, and if he has been incompetent, they will place the seal of public disapprobation upon him. We wish to hold out an inducement that will not only secure talent, but diligence and industry in office. And I think we may properly and safely trust this power of discrimination between the competent and the incompetent, in the hands of the people, those most interested.

Mr. ROOT moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Messrs. KELLY and GHOLSON called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment, which being taken resulted as follows—yeas 9, nays 80.

YEAS—Archibald Dixon, Selucius Garfield, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, J. W. Irwin, Wm. Johnson, Tho. W. Lisle, Martin P. Marshall, Jno. L. Waller—9.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Grey, Jas. P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Tho. J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, Tho. James, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, Geo. W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William

R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Geo. W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. On Friday last, in the course of debate, I made the following remarks:

"In the conversation that I had with Judge Marshall, he expressed no preference for three or four, but stated emphatically that three were amply sufficient to transact the business of the court; and he coincided with the opinion of Judge Robertson, that four judges would rather retard than expedite the business, and that it would be no disadvantage, as far as the transaction of the business of the country was concerned, that the court should consist of but three judges."

I left the room immediately after concluding my remarks, and consequently did not hear what was said by the gentleman from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) but my attention has been called this morning to the following remarks of that gentleman:

"I care not what any judge, or what any lawyer has intimated, since the subject has been talked of here. I do not believe Judge Marshall has given an opinion; he is one of the most cautious, prudent, discreet men, that I am acquainted with. I do think that any gentleman, occupying the station that he does, could or would give such an opinion."

I have read these remarks, sir, for the purpose of making an inquiry—

Mr. TURNER. With the permission of the gentleman, I will state, that I did not understand him as asserting that he had had a conversation with Judge Marshall. I supposed that he derived his information from some third person. If I had understood the gentleman as making the assertion, of course, I should not have thought of contradicting it.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I am gratified to hear the explanation of the gentleman, for I was sure that he either misunderstood me, or had not been correctly reported.

The ninth section was then read, as follows:

"SEC. 9. The general assembly, if they deem it necessary, may establish one district every four years, but the judicial districts shall not exceed sixteen, until after the population of this state shall exceed one million five hundred thousand."

Mr. GRAY. I move to strike out the whole section, and insert the following:

"The general assembly shall have power to increase the number of judges and districts, as the exigencies of the country may require: Provided, that no more than one district shall be established at any one session of the legislature."

I do not think we ought to restrict legislation upon this subject, as proposed in the report. I think the legislature should have power to increase the number of judges and judicial districts, when an increase shall be demanded by the people. Providing, as I do, that only one district shall be established at any one session of the legislature, we shall avoid any thing like combination between different sections of country. This, I think, will insure us against the establishment of any judicial district, unless the necessities of the country require it.

Mr. HARDIN. I think the whole provision will be valueless, if we adopt this amendment. We began our circuit court system with ten or eleven districts, and we have been adding to them, until we have now got the most cumbersome system of circuit courts in the United States. We have now got nineteen judges, and if we leave it to the legislature, we shall have as many, if not more, in future. Gentlemen are aware that for the last five hundred years, they have had but twelve circuit judges in England, until within a few years past, when I understand they have added a thirteenth judge. There was a judge for the high court of chancery, and a master of the rolls, making but fourteen in all, while we have had nineteen judges. I think there ought to be some restriction upon the power of the legislature in this respect. While up—for I am more anxious upon this subject than any other—and that we may adjourn in the course of a few weeks, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was sustained, and under its operation the amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The tenth section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 10. The judges of the circuit courts shall, at stated times, receive for their services an adequate compensation, to be fixed by law, which shall not be diminished during the time for which they shall have been elected."

Mr. HARDIN. The bill as originally framed, fixed the minimum of the salaries to be paid to the judges at $1,600, the number of judges being reduced from nineteen to twelve. The committee of thirty struck out $1,600. I want to see the best talent that can be obtained placed upon the bench, and in order to secure that talent, I think the minimum ought not to be less than $1,600.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I am inclined to the opinion that in putting together the amendments adopted by the committee of thirty, one was pretermitted. My recollection is, that there was an amendment adopted at the instance of the gentleman from Hickman, (Mr. James,) that the salaries of judges should be equal and uniform throughout the commonwealth. I therefore beg pardon of the committee and of the house for pretermitting the amendment, and now offer it for insertion.

The motion was agreed to, and the following words inserted after the word "law," "which shall be equal and uniform throughout the state."

Mr. MERIWETHER. I will offer the following as a substitute for the section under consideration:

"Each circuit judge shall receive from the public treasury an adequate compensation, to be fixed by law, and shall not be diminished during their respective continuance in office, and shall never be less than _____ hundred dollars per annum, and which shall be equal and uniform throughout the state."

It will be perceived that this is precisely the same as the original section, except that it fixes a minimum salary.

Mr. NESBITT. I beg to offer as an amendment to the amendment the following:

"Provided, That whenever a new judge is added, his salary shall be raised by deductions from the salaries of those already in office."

Mr. HARGIS. There is much in this article that is not agreeable to me, but in the spirit of compromise, I am willing to sacrifice some of my own views, and therefore I hope the section will be allowed to stand as it is.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MACHEN. I prefer that the whole subject shall be left to the people, unless we fix a large minimum. It appears to me that $1,600 is the smallest salary that will give us any reasonable chance of procuring the services of men of the best talent. But I think it will be better to leave the whole matter to the legislature.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I propose that $1,800 be the minimum fixed, as the salary of these judges.

Mr. WALLER. I propose $1,600 as the minimum.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I accept the proposition of the gentleman from Woodford, (Mr. Waller.)

The question then being upon striking out $1,600, and inserting $1,800.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I shall vote for the largest amount named. I believe, from my intercourse with the delegates upon this floor, that there will be perhaps no better opportunity to test the views of this convention, as to whether the judges shall be liberally compensated for their services. I am disinclined, however, to fix either a minimum or maximum salary in the constitution, for there is great sensitiveness on the subject of the salaries of officers; and although a large portion of the community who are in favor of a well regulated judiciary, would be willing to vote a large and competent salary, yet if you were to tell these men that the organic law had fixed it beyond their control, you might produce in their minds a prejudice against this constitution difficult to be removed. I had intended at the proper time, to offer, on my own responsibility, the amendment which I proposed in committee; that the next legislature, coming in under the new constitution, fully impressed, as I trust it will be, with the importance of giving this experiment a just and impartial trial, should fix the salaries of the judicial officers at a standard which should not be diminished for eight or ten years; and by that means we should secure better salaries, and free the constitution from the danger of attack, because of its inhibition on the subject of salaries.

If the amendment under consideration should be rejected, I shall offer, in the shape of an addition section, the substance of what I have indicated.

Mr. NESBITT. My opinion is, that if we fix a minimum in the constitution, we ought to give the legislature the power to reduce that minimum whenever they increase the number of judges. I have no objection to fixing a minimum, provided this principle be adopted. The legislature may increase the number to twenty, and if so, it is not to be expected that they should each receive a salary of $1,600. When in order, I will move to add the following proviso:

"Provided, That when the general assembly shall deem it necessary to increase the number of judges, they shall have the power to reduce the salary thereof; but they shall not have power to depart from the principle of equality and uniformity."

Mr. MERIWETHER. I presume the legislature will never increase the number of judges until there shall be an increase of business to justify it. And whenever there is that increase of business, there should be no reduction of the existing salary, because the old judges would have the same amount of business to perform. I make this remark in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Bath, (Mr. Nesbitt,) but we are now about to test the plan of an elective judiciary, and I want it to have a fair test; and unless you give salaries that will elicit the best talents in the country, we shall never get good judges. I trust therefore, that those who are in favor of giving this question a fair test, will vote for a minimum salary.

Mr. NESBITT. I presume that if the power is given to the legislature to reduce the salaries of the judges, when it shall be found necessary to increase the number, they will never think proper to say they have too much work to do. Suppose the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Meriwether,) should be elected judge under the new constitution, and a minimum salary of $1,600, is fixed, he would find it convenient to say, I can do the business of my district, provided you leave it as it is, and not reduce the salary. But if I should happen to be elected judge, and power be given to the legislature to increase the number of judges, without the power to reduce their salaries, I might say, I have entirely too much work to do, you must add to the number of judges.

Mr. MERIWETHER. The gentleman has supposed a case that can never exist. They have rendered me ineligible for the office of judge, but he is not ineligible. The gentleman therefore can best judge of the motives that would control his own action.

Mr. NESBITT. I assumed some part of the responsibility by taking myself into the illustration. I rather think that if a minimum salary should be fixed, the gentleman would soon have a certificate in his pocket.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL withdrew his proposition to fix the minimum at $1,800.

Mr. BALLINGER. I move to strike out $1,600, and insert $1,500.

The amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred upon the substitute.

Mr. NESBITT moved, as an amendment to the substitute, the proviso which he had indicated his intention to offer.

The amendment to the substitute was rejected.

Messrs. GHOLSON and JAMES called for the yeas and nays on the substitute, and being taken, they resulted as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Selucius Garfield, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Larkin J. Proctor, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—24.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chénault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—66.

So the substitute was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The eleventh section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 11. The judges of the circuit court shall be removed from office by a resolution of the general assembly, passed by two thirds of each house. The cause or causes for such removal shall be entered at large on the journal of each house."

Mr. MITCHELL. I propose the following substitute for that section:

"The governor shall remove the judges of the circuit courts on the address of two thirds of each house of the general assembly: Provided however, that the cause or causes for which such removal may be required, shall be stated at length in such address on the journal of each house."

This is a provision that has been adopted in regard to the court of appeals; and it occurs to me there is no good reason for departing from the rule in relation to the judges of the circuit courts.

The question being taken, the substitute was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The twelfth section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 12. The governor shall have no power to remit the fees of the clerk, sheriff, or commonwealth's attorney, in penal or criminal cases."

Mr. HARDIN. I never believed the governor had this power, but I have heard a great deal of complaint on the part of sheriffs and others, on account of having their fees remitted. It will be seen by reference to the constitution, that these fees were intended to be a part of the compensation of these officers, and it is consequently out of the power of the governor to deprive them of such compensation.

Mr. MAYES. I will call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this point. It appears to me that the section is wholly unnecessary. The governor has no power to remit any part of the compensation that is due these officers.

Mr. TURNER. I have drawn up an amendment which I think will meet the views of the gentleman; it is as follows, insert after the words "commonwealth's attorney," the following:

"Or the portion of a fine or forfeiture, given by law to the latter office."

I supposed, with the gentleman last up, that the governor had no power to remit the fees of officers; but I am told there are instances in which he has attempted to do it, and there has been no judicial decision upon the point. I should have offered this amendment at an earlier day, had it not been for the position of a member of my family. A son of mine was commonwealth's attorney, and I knew my motive might be misconstrued, if I offered it while he occupied that situation. I am satisfied we shall never get persons who are competent to discharge the duties of commonwealth's attorney, unless we take from the governor the power to remit that portion of the fines which the law gives to these officers, as part compensation for their services.

Mr. HARDIN. I intended by the word "fees" to embrace the very case the gentleman has mentioned, because it is the money that belongs to the officers. The sheriff, clerk, and commonwealth's attorney, each have their fees. However, I am willing to agree to any thing that will make it more explicit.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think there are many cases in which the interposition of the governor is called for. A man may be unjustly convicted of an offence; he may be improperly fined. If the case does not require the interposition of the governor he will not interfere. I am utterly opposed to restricting him in the way the amendment proposes.

Mr. TURNER. We do not propose to prohibit the governor from remitting fines that go into the treasury; but only that portion which goes to these officers, as a part of their compensation for service rendered the commonwealth, which is given to them in order to stimulate them to a proper discharge of their duties. Without this, it would be necessary either to fix an adequate salary for these officers, or else we must not expect to obtain competent persons to fill this office. Public opinion demands that there should be a check upon the power of the governor in this respect.

Mr. WOODSON. Mr. President: Having discharged the duties of attorney for the commonwealth in the 15th judicial district for several years, and having now resigned that office, and not expecting that it will ever be conferred upon me again, I cannot, in justice to myself, allow the present occasion to pass without giving to the convention a very brief statement of my observation and experience in reference to the subjects involved in the section as reported by the committee—in the amendment of the delegate from Madison, (Mr. Turner,)—and alluded to in the course of the present discussion.

The office of attorney for the commonwealth is a responsible and a very laborious one, and I am sure that few men in the state, possessing the requisite qualifications for an able and satisfactory discharge of the duties of the office, can be induced to accept it, after the judicial districts shall be enlarged according to the provisions of the report of the committee, in consideration of the very low salary now paid that officer, provided the governor, as heretofore, is invested with the power to take from him all the valuable perquisites of the office.

Laws are enacted, high penalties, extending to the forfeiture of life, liberty, and property, are denounced against all who violate their provisions—the expensive organization of the necessary tribunals, to bring to the light and punish the guilty, incurred,—grand juries present, petit juries find the delinquents guilty; the courts pronounce the penalties of the law, without any terrors to the guilty ear, upon which the sentence ought to fall with all the solemnity of the thunders of the judgment day. And why? Simply because of the facilities afforded for the acquisition of executive smiles, remissions, and pardons. Sir, I have heard the awful sentence of death pronounced without any striking effect upon the guilty culprit, executive sunshine enlivening by anticipation the gloom, the horrors, the awfulness of the scene. Hence, I confess that I am not satisfied with the report of the committee, or the amendment, because they do not go far enough in their restrictions of the exercise of the pardoning prerogatives of the executive. But, as the report is the result of compromise, I feel it my duty to support it and such amendments as the committee will allow.

I wish to speak particularly though, Mr. President, in reference to the defects in the present constitution, sought to be remedied by the section under consideration, and the amendment of the delegate from Madison. Little regard has been paid to the penal statutes in Kentucky, by those whose interests or abandoned natures prompted them to set them at defiance, and why? Not because grand juries were disinclined to ferret out offences, or because petit juries and courts were opposed to inflicting the appropriate and legal penalties; but they have been trampled under the feet of the lawless desperadoes of the country in consequence of the certain refuge universally extended, almost, by the executive to them. I have known more than one unprincipled law-defying villian, to laugh at, and defy the officers of government, in their efforts to enforce the penal statutes of Kentucky, knowing sir, that let their delinquencies be never so great, that a merciful executive would avert the chastising rod in the name of poverty, mercy, or something of the sort. So much does not depend upon the number or the severity of penal statutes as a rigid enforcement of their penalties when violated. The certainty, more than the character of the punishment deters from the commission of crime, and a violation of the moral precepts of our penal code. I do not pretend to speak of the practice in any portion of Kentucky, save that immediately represented by me upon this floor; but I do know sir, that within my knowledge, the exercise of the pardoning power by the governor, and the indiscriminate remission of all fines imposed by the courts and juries of the country, have done more to embolden crime, interrupt the peace of society, and trample under foot the morals of the community, than all other causes combined. I would be willing to deprive the governor of the power to remit fines altogether, and say that after an enlightened court and jury had found a man guilty of a gross violation of the penal laws, he should suffer that punishment which the wisdom of the law-making power had provided. But as I cannot succeed to the full extent, I do hope that the report of the committee will be sustained. There has been a constant warfare going on between the virtuous law-abiding citizens, determined to sustain the morals and well being of society, on the one side, and the reckless out-breaking law-defying desperado on the other, ever since law was invented and applied to human action. The innocent man will never suffer in consequence of the application of the remedy, which the section under consideration proposes, to the evils complained of. The guilty alone are destined to reap, in merited punishment by it, the legitimate fruits of their desperate deeds.

Mr. President, no tongue can tell the evils which have resulted to Kentucky, in a thousand ways, from the grog shops, and tipling houses in the country. The young—the middle aged, the old, black, white, rich and poor, have been, and I fear are, destined to be the victims of these sinks of iniquity in Kentucky. As long sir, as tipling houses &c. are permitted to be set up and money to be made at them in violation of law, under the protecting influences of executive favor, so long will your sons, your brothers, your nephews, and your neighbors be decoyed within their influence—so long will the tears of the mother flow—so long will the heart of the wife bleed, over the fallen depraved fortunes of her husband. If you wish to destroy crime, wretchedness, woe and misery, you must begin at the fountain head. And I now say to you, and this convention, that the whole penal code might as well be repealed, and every man allowed to drink, gamble, fight, and do all he can to ruin the morals of the country, without any restraints at all, as to continue upon your statute books, laws which are rendered wholly and almost universally inoperative by executive clemency. The time has not long passed, when the governor was not only in the habit of remitting the fines and forfeitures imposed upon the guilty violators of the laws, but the clerks, sheriffs, and attorneys fees, allowed by statute. The section now under discussion only deprives him of the power to make the officers of the law labor in their laudable effort to preserve the morals and well being of society for nothing.

Mr. MAYES. I am not commonwealth's attorney nor do I expect to be, but I have acted in that capacity, first under the appointment of Gov. Letcher, and then under the appointment of Gov. Owsley. It is proposed that the commonwealth's attorney, shall have a salary of three hundred dollars, and as an inducement for gentlemen of talents to accept the office—and that violators of the law shall not go unpunished—a portion of the fines and forfeitures are appropriated as fees, in payment of the services of these officers. I hope the principle of the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHAMBERS. I offer the following as an amendment to the substitute for the section.

"The governor shall have no power to remit any fine or forfeiture, except such as may be payable into the public treasury."

The governor has no power to remit the fees of clerks, sheriffs, or commonwealth's attorneys in penal prosecutions. This twelfth section is, therefore, merely declarative of what the law is, and is wholly unnecessary.

The amendment proposes to take from the governor his right to remit so much of any fine or forfeiture, as the legislature may have given or appropriated to the prosecuting attorney or others, as pay or inducement to successful prosecution. I am opposed to the amendment. It is calculated to put it in the power of the legislature to render the executive power to remit fines and forfeitures entirely nugatory. If the legislature may give a part of the fine or forfeiture to the attorney prosecuting, it can give the balance to others, and thus withdraw all fines and forfeitures from executive clemency. We have already deprived the executive of most of the powers delegated to him by the constitution of 1799, and it would be wrong to trench further upon his prerogative. If the commonwealth's attorney, and other officers, have not sufficient compensation, let it be increased in some other way, and let us leave with the governor the power to remit fines and forfeitures, unrestricted.

I shall vote against both the amendment and the twelfth section, for I am unwilling to deprive the executive, to any extent, of his power to remit fines and forfeitures in meritorious cases.

Mr. HARDIN. I, too, have been state's attorney, and know the necessity for having men of talents to fill that office. I have seen that office dwindled down to a mere nothing, when compared to what it once was. The object of the committee was, to give to the commonwealth's attorney such compensation as will induce gentlemen of the best talents to accept the office. I think the house is sufficiently informed on the subject, I will therefore call for the previous question.

The question being stated, "shall the main question be now put," it was carried, upon a division—yeas 35, nays 21.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Madison.

The yeas and nays being called for, by Messrs. FORREST and HARDIN, resulted as follows—yeas 37, nays 52:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, William Chenault, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Selucius Garfield, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—37.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, Jas. S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Thos. J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, James M. Nesbitt, William Preston, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—52.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the twelfth section, by yeas and nays, on the call of Messrs. MITCHELL and BROWN, and were—yeas 50, nays 38:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfield, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—50.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, William Preston, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, Robert N. Wickliffe—38.

So the section was adopted.

The thirteenth and fourteenth sections were then read and adopted as follows:

"Sec. 13. If a vacancy shall occur in the office of judge of the circuit court, the governor shall issue a writ of election to fill such vacancy, for the residue of the term, and another judge shall be elected by that district, to serve until the expiration of the time for which the judge was elected whose death, or other cause, produced such vacancy: Provided, That if the unexpired term be less than one year, the governor shall appoint a judge to fill such vacancy."

"Sec. 14. The general assembly shall not change the venue in any criminal or penal prosecution, but they shall provide, by general laws, the mode and manner in which changes of venue in such cases may be had."

The fifteenth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 15. In all trials for treason or felony, the commonwealth shall be entitled to peremptory challenges of jurors equal to one-fourth the number allowed the accused."

Mr. HARDIN. As the law now stands, in cases of felony, the accused has the privilege of challenging without showing cause, but the commonwealth has no such right, unless they show good cause. It is known to gentlemen who have prosecuted criminal cases, that men are placed upon the jury, sometimes upon their mere allegation that they have formed no opinion in the case, and who go there predetermined to acquit the accused. This was the reason that operated with the committee, and caused the insertion of this section.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will offer the following amendment:

"Provided, That in all penal and criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right to prosecute an appeal, or writ of error, to the court of appeals."

The first thing, no doubt, that strikes the mind of delegates in this house, upon a few moments reflection, is that there is a vast difference between the life, liberty, and character of a citizen, and his property. In a controversy involving but $50 you have a right to appeal, you have a right to spread upon the record a bill of exceptions, to any opinion that the judge may render in the progress of the trial; and you have a right to a writ of error to the court of appeals; and to have the decisions of the circuit courts reversed, if wrong. But sir, upon a question involving life, liberty, or reputation, you have no such right. I ask every delegate on this floor, to put the question to himself, and answer it, why this difference between the property of the citizen on the one hand, and his life, liberty, and reputation on the other? The constitution of Virginia, which is said to be the mother of commonwealths, and which has produced such men as John Marshall—and time has not placed upon the sepulchre of the dead a nobler name—allows the accused to appeal from the decision of the court below, and a worthier example we could not follow.

I was struck with a remark made by the venerable gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) the other day. It was, that the circuit judge, has the life, liberty, and property of the citizen in the palm of his hand, and it was a remark that came from his heart. And he added, that if he had a son upon trial, he would expend the whole of his fortune in order to purchase his release. He might have gone further, and said that he would have coined his heart's blood for the redemption of his son.

The power and influence that a circuit judge has over the life and liberty of the citizen, is exhibited upon the admission or rejection of testimony. Suppose that I am on trial, and that the admission of certain testimony which I seek to introduce to the consideration of the jury, would absolve me from the charge; and make my innocence as clear as sunshine, in shady places, and the judge should exclude it, then it is that the power of the circuit judge is felt. Why should we, I ask, make this invidious, this inexcusable and unjust distinction, between the property and life of a citizen? The old constitution is radiant with the principle of protection, in relation to property, as the firmament with stars. And gentlemen have introduced here certain abstract principles, which they intend to incorporate in the bill of rights, that are not only to protect us now, in the enjoyment of our property, but at all future times. And this convention is laboring, by a thousand methods, to secure and protect persons in the enjoyment and acquisition of property; whilst life, liberty, and reputation is entrusted to a single judge, without check or limitation, in any form whatever.

Gentlemen say it would have a tendency to increase the expenses of the judiciary. It is true, that in many cases it would be expensive. But I ask, is any gentleman so wedded to his peculiar notions, as to be willing to make life and liberty a question of pounds, shillings, and pence. It is proper, that the humblest as well as the most exalted, should have the right of appeal, upon questions involving his liberty or his life.

If gentlemen have talked about bribery and corruption, sir, this provision is intended to prevent bribery and corruption; to prevent money from having an influence in our criminal jurisprudence; and to adjourn questions, involving life and liberty to another court where the matter may be clearly and deliberately examined, in all the lights possible to be thrown upon it. The decision of the judge is sometimes given, under the influence of feelings favorable, or hostile to the parties; sometimes under the influence of the powerful arguments of counsel, upon questions that affect a man's life, liberty or character. What is a man's character? Like his shadow, it sometimes goes before him, and at others follows him. And when this and other interests dear to him, are at stake, I for one, would admit of no petty consideration of pounds, shillings and pence, to interfere and prevent protection by having the questions of law, involving their safety, examined and settled by an appellate tribunal, and hence I have submitted my amendment.

Mr. HARDIN. The power is now in the legislature to give the right of appeal to the accused, and our government has been in operation for fifty seven years, last June, and such a right has never been granted. And if this provision should now be put into the constitution, I do not believe, that any application would ever receive the support of more than one-tenth of the legislature. I will venture to say, one thing certain, that there would not be one conviction out of ten, unless he be some poor beggarly, vagrant, in which there would not be a writ of error demanded; and before the trial came on, the accused—if out on bail—would make his escape, and if in jail, would require three or four men to guard him. I ask the gentleman, if he is not as likely to get justice in the circuit court as in the court of appeals. Some judge must decide the case, and the inconvenience of suspending the execution of a judgment in every case, would be beyond the endurance of the country. But that is not all; sometimes escapes might be had through the great influence of money. I want it left to the legislature. If we adopt it here, we cannot afterwards get clear of it. It is an old adage, "that it is better that ninety nine guilty men should escape, than that one innocent man should be punished." I do not think I ever saw an innocent man punished in my life; but I believe that ninety nine guilty scoundrels escape for every one that is punished. I hope the proposition will not be adopted.

Mr. DIXON. I am against the entire section and against the amendment of the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor.) The commonwealth has advantages enough over the accused now, and I am not disposed to increase them. I have been engaged a great deal in the management of cases of a criminal character, and I know the great difficulties which the accused has always to contend against. The very fact that a man is charged with a high offence as murder, excites the public suspicion and prejudice against him, and the cry of the community at once, too often without stopping to enquire into the facts, is crucify him, and the protection which the law affords him and the ability of his advocate can scarcely save him from becoming a victim to that popular prejudice. The commonwealth has advantages enough, and the accused should have every opportunity afforded him of an impartial trial. He should have a jury not packed to decide his case against law and in favor of himself, but one that will secure him an impartial trial. This was the object of allowing him the right to challenge twenty jurors peremptorily, and thus to secure himself against the influence of popular prejudice. The commonwealth have nothing to fear from any such prejudice, and therefore there is no such reason why it should have the right of peremptory challenge. It is a principle in the laws of Kentucky, except to a limited extent. I believe in the correctness of the maxim, to which my friend from Nelson has referred, "that it is better that ninety nine guilty men should escape, than that one innocent man should suffer." Although I am for punishing crime, I would save those who are not guilty. I am satisfied with the constitution as it is, and I hope the section, together with the amendment, will be rejected.

Mr. MAYES. I wish to say a few words upon this section before the vote shall be taken. I have never yet been able to see why it is that the man charged with crime should be allowed to challenge twenty persons presented as jurymen, without being required to show cause for such challenge, when the right is denied to the people of the state to object to a single one, unless cause can be shown for such an objection. The gentleman from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon,) says that the state has advantages enough now over the man arraigned for crime. I know not of the advantages of which that gentleman speaks. He says that great prejudice is engendered in the public mind against the accused, and that this is an advantage. Another advantage he tells us consists in the fact that the attorney for the state has the right to open and conclude the argument before the jury. Now, sir, I cannot admit that the public are prejudiced against a citizen merely because he may be accused of crime. No sir. Our sympathies are all in favor of the accused, unless the evidence of his guilt be clear. If it be true that the concluding speech operates as an advantage in favor of the state—which I by no means admit—the defendant in a civil action for the same reason should have the right, without cause, to object to at least six; for in such case the plaintiff has the right to open and conclude the argument. I do not, however, admit that an honest jury can be swayed or controlled by the last argument. They are, generally, and at all times should be, controlled by the law and the evidence touching the subject under consideration, and not by the last speech, as supposed by the distinguished gentleman from Henderson.

It may be that I occupy a singular position upon the subject under consideration, for I am a member of the legal profession, and it is said that all men are controlled in their action by that which may be regarded as affecting their own peculiar interest. I however contend that there have been instances, and there have been many such, where persons have lost sight of personal aggrandizement, and have done that which was best calculated to advance the greatest good to the greatest numbers. I am and have long been satisfied that the right of challenge should be given to the state in criminal causes; and that without it, in many instances, the criminal law of the country is nothing more than a farce, and is rendered wholly impotent and ineffectual to suppress and punish crime. There have been instances of packed juries. I have thought, nay, I am sure I have seen this thing done. All who are conversant with the administration of the criminal law of the state, have seen it outraged by bribery and perjury upon the part of persons sworn as jurymen. Yes, sir, they have seen those miserable wretches standing at and around the court house door, ready, whenever the regular panel should be exhausted, to present themselves as jurymen. They have been thus presented—have sworn that they had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and have taken their seats on the jury; and in defiance of the most positive proof of the guilt of the fiend in human shape, he who had perhaps crimsoned his murderous hands in the blood of the husband and the father, by their verdict have declared him not guilty, and turned him loose to prey again upon society, and again to violate that law with impunity, which was made, as it is supposed, to secure to the citizen the right to his life and property. They have done this too when all who heard the facts of the case—and who have no wish to gratify but that the guilty be punished, and the majesty of the law vindicated—are satisfied of his guilt. It is not proposed, sir, to take from the accused the right of challenge—nor is it proposed to deprive him of any advantage whatever, which he may now enjoy. The object is to secure to the people—for whose protection the law has been made—some little chance, that the man who has no regard for the law of the country, and who is ready at all times and upon all occasions to commit crime, shall not, by a packed and corrupt jury, be declared innocent, when his guilt is manifest to all. Sir, we all know the power of money; its power has been wielded in such a way as often, very often, to set at open defiance the criminal law of the country, and set at liberty the veriest murderers and scoundrels that ever disgraced the shape of man; yes, it has entered the very temple erected and dedicated to justice, and has contaminated and poisoned that stream which should ever be kept pure. It has bribed jurymen and witnesses, and has rendered the criminal law of your state little better than a dead letter. What is more common at this day, than when it is said that murder has been committed, to hear the information answered by the remark that the man who may have committed the deed is in no danger, he has too much wealth, his family connexion is too extensive and powerful, and that the law was not made for him? What, sir, does all this mean? It only means that if you give a man money, united with strong family friends and influence, he may at his will laugh to scorn your courts of justice, trample the law with impunity under his feet, and commit crime without the fear of punishment. The poor, the weak, the humble, and the penniless, regard the criminal law as but a poor shield indeed to them, against the wrongs and outrages which the strong and mighty impose upon them. The people have, in a great measure, lost confidence in the security offered by the criminal law. Let a poor and friendless man be indicted for crime, and he is convicted or executed, or sent to the penitentiary to expiate his crime; and to effect this, the evidence of his guilt need not be very strong. The unfortunate man has no money; no powerful and influential friends to stand by him in the hour of his need. He has no money with which to bribe miserable wretches to come in and take their seats on the jury bench, predetermined to acquit him. This provision allowing a challenge to the state, as far as the man thus friendless may be concerned, may not be so very important; but sir, I maintain that it is most important, when the man of wealth and influence is charged with and guilty of crime, to combat in some degree the wicked use he may make, and which he often does make, of his money, when he has robbed a better man than himself of his life, deprived the wife of her husband, and the children of their father and protector. I have said, sir, that as I am engaged in the practice of law, and am sometimes engaged in the defence of such as are charged with crime, it may appear singular that I advocate this section of the report, as it is the interest of the lawyer to use all honorable means to succeed in his client's cause. I expect to find most of the members of the profession arrayed against this section, for the reason that, if it should be adopted, it will take from them in some small degree a portion of the advantage which the law, as it now is, gives to the man charged with crime, over the people of the state whose rights have been by him trampled under foot; and for that reason, some of them at least may be expected to oppose it. As a class, there is it not, in the wide world, a more honorable high-minded, and patriotic portion of the citizens of this or any other country, than are the lawyers. Their love of country, their hatred of tyranny and oppression, has been evidenced upon every battle-field wherever and whenever the flag of liberty and free government has been raised. They have at all times been found along side of the friends of free government in every country upon earth. Yes, sir, their blood has been freely and nobly shed, and their treasure has been expended to secure to us the free government, the benefits of which we this day so abundantly enjoy. Still, Mr. President, they are but men, subject to all the frailties and imperfections of our unhappy and fallen condition; and perhaps as a class, they may feel it to be a duty they owe to their present and future clients to oppose this section. We should, however, and I hope we shall, upon this occasion, forget all other considerations save the public good, and vote upon this question with an eye alone to the just administration of justice. I presume all will thus vote.

Why is it, sir, that the sympathies of gentlemen appear to flow so freely in favor of those who are charged with crime, or who may be arraigned for trial? I too can sympathize with the wretch who has wantonly outraged the law of the country, but at the same time, when he has my sympathy and my sorrow, I desire that he shall be punished as certainly as he has committed crime. I have much sympathy for those upon whom he has brought ruin, distress, misery, and wretchedness, by his high-handed violation of law. The man of crime has no sympathy. In cold blood he can take the life of his fellow, without mercy, or remorse. In my judgment he is not entitled to a great deal of compassion, and should, when arraigned, be allowed no advantage over the state. He should have a fair trial. So should the state have an equally fair chance. If, sir, we would banish from our land crime and immorality, the laws made for the punishment of such as may be guilty of it must be enforced, and all the facilities and aids necessary to its enforcement must be afforded. Without this, it is and ever will be futile to think of suppressing crime. If it be understood that the heavy penalty of the offended law will certainly be visited on him who may dare violate it, then we may hope to see less of crime, and not otherwise; for sir, when it is seen that the punishments demanded by the law against such as commit crime, are easily evaded, and that there is little or no certainty that such will be punished, just so sure as this is the case, will crime increase in the land. And sir, to this unfortunate condition we have arrived, and the people of the state have in a great measure lost confidence in the power of the law to protect, shield, and secure them against outrage and wrong. It is, Mr. President, the hope with which I flatter myself, that the principle contained in the section under consideration, will, if adopted, afford some little aid in bringing to justice such as regard not the law, that I am induced to advocate it. If adopted, as I have before said, it will not take from the man charged with crime one single privilege which he now has.

The gentleman from Mason has offered a substitute by which it is proposed to allow appeals in criminal causes. I am disposed, sir, to vote for some principle which will give the accused an opportunity to have an error, committed to his prejudice when upon trial, corrected; for although I am anxious that such as commit crime should be punished, still sir, I would have no one improperly or illegally punished. I do not know why it is that in criminal causes, the judgment as rendered in the circuit court, must stand unchanged, whether it be supported by law or not. We have no tribunal to which the accused can appeal, that an erroneous opinion which may deprive him of his life or liberty may be revised and corrected. Our circuit judges entertain different opinions upon different questions of criminal law, yet we have no court to which such opinions may be taken, and when wrong, corrected. That which is a crime in one circuit, may be no crime in the adjoining circuit. I have never been able to see why it was, that Kentucky had no tribunal of last resort, where the criminal law of the state could be settled, and made to operate in all parts of the state alike. I think there should be some such tribunal. It has ever been a source of surprise to me, sir, that persons are allowed, when they deem that justice has not been done upon the trial of a civil action, to take an appeal, and have such errors as may have been committed corrected, and the same may be done in penal prosecutions, and yet when the life or liberty of the citizen is in peril; when he has been tried and condemned upon what he and his counsel regard as an erroneous construction of the law, there is no appeal except to the clemency of the executive. This looks, Mr. President, somewhat as if we thought more of property than of that which we all, in fact, hold most dear, our lives, our liberty, and our reputations. It is said, as an argument against the proposition of the gentleman from Mason, that if persons condemned for crime are allowed to appeal, the costs of criminal prosecutions will be greatly increased. This may be true; but sir, it will surely be better that additional cost be incurred, than that one who may have been wrongfully condemned should be punished; and this shows that those who oppose the right of appeal in such cases, are hard run for argument to sustain their position.

Mr. CLARKE. I am against the section as it stands, and in favor of the amendment. This section is the introduction of a principle that has been adopted in no country, so far as my reading extends. It is true, that in Great Britain peremptory challenges on the part of the crown are allowed, but even then it is confined to Ireland, and does not apply to the English people. In no state in this union, so far as I know, is this right conferred upon the commonwealth. It has been asked what advantages has the commonwealth over the accused? Why, in the first place, the very fact that an indictment is found against a man excites public suspicion and prejudice against him, and places the mark of Cain upon his brow, without his having the opportunity at all to explain the circumstances which operate against him. There the con-monwealth has its own feed attorney, and by the vote of this morning, you do not even allow the governor to say his fees shall be cut down by the exercise of the pardoning power. And with all these powers heaped upon the head of the accused man, it is now proposed to give to the commonwealth the additional power of peremptorily challenging five jurors. Who has not seen, the very moment a man is apprehended on suspicion of crime, the women and children gaze on him as he walks through the streets, and heard the murmurs that pass through the crowd as he passes along. Some then say that "they do not think his eyes look exactly right," or that "he has a bad countenance;" and others, that they "knew him when a boy, and from little circumstances that then occurred, they always supposed he would turn out badly." Others again, significantly shake their heads and repeat stories that have been told in the neighborhood where he once lived, and there will be a thousand influences of this kind operating against the accused, and exciting the public prejudice against him. And just in proportion to the magnitude of the offence and the severity of the punishment which is impending does the popular condemnation of the moment rest on the accused, and deprive him, in many instances, of a just and impartial trial. I trust this innovation will not be made upon the established usage of this state. No proposition has been presented to this convention to which I am more opposed than to the fifteenth section of this report. There is no evil existing, or that has existed in this state, demanding this innovation.

I desire that the accused shall also be allowed to take an appeal to a higher tribunal. I want the man whose life, and liberty, and reputation, and the reputation of his family, are put in jeopardy, to be permitted to take an appeal. If you allow it to a man in a matter of dollars and cents, in the name of heaven give him the same privilege where these sacred rights are endangered. I had the occasion the other day, when speaking on the question of uniformity of decision, to refer to a fact well known to those who live in the southern part of the state. It was the case where, in one county, upon a motion to give a prisoner the benefit of clergy, the judge sustained the motion, and the prisoner, who had been tried and convicted of the highest offence known to our laws, was set at liberty. In another county, a man was tried for a less offence, found guilty, and, on the same motion being made before another judge, it was overruled, and the criminal paid the penalty of his crime under the gallows. Here was one man hung and another set at liberty under the very same code of laws. One or the other of these decisions must have been wrong. There is a want of uniformity in the decisions of the circuit court, upon questions of law. Give to the prisoner the right, then, if his counsel is convinced that questions of law have been wrongfully decided, of appeal to the higher tribunal. There is great need of some uniformity of decision being established. As it is now, the circuit judges decide according to the lights they have derived from their various reading, and according to various authorities, and thus we see one man hung and another set at liberty, under the same state of circumstances. If a court of appeals is to be established in this state for the sake of securing uniformity in decisions, in the name of common sense give to the man who has life and liberty at stake, the benefit of it. I shall vote to strike out every word of this section, and I trust that a majority of this convention cannot be found to vote for this privilege of peremptory challenge on the part of the commonwealth. I trust, also, that we shall all concur in the opinion, that the life, liberty, and reputation of a man are just as sacred as his property in dollars and cents, and that if we give the party the right of appeal in the one case, we shall be ready to do it in the other. The right of appeal in criminal cases has existed in Tennessee from the formation of the present constitution down to the present time, and I have never heard any complaint from lawyers, judges, or from any other source, as to its working wrong. Nor have I heard the least complaint that the additional expense is so great that this privilege should be withheld from the citizen. I would rather, at this moment, see the state incur an expense of $500,000, than believe that from an erroneous opinion of the circuit judge an innocent man's blood had been shed. Such things have been done, or guilty men have been turned loose on the community as in the case I put.

The convention took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. APPERSON proposed the following as a substitute for the whole section.

"Provided, that the general assembly shall provide, by law, that any criminal who may be convicted in the circuit court, may, under proper restrictions, have the law of his case tried by the court of appeals, provided, one of the judges of the latter court shall order a supersedeas to issue to restrain the execution of the sentence until the case can be heard and determined by the court of appeals."

Mr. TAYLOR asked and obtained leave to withdraw his amendment, and to offer the following substitute for the whole section in lieu thereof:

"In all trials for treason and felony, as well as in all prosecutions for penal offences, the accused shall have the right to prosecute an appeal, or writ of error, to the court of appeals, to any judgment which the circuit court may render against him, and the general assembly shall provide, by law, in what manner such appeal, or writ of error, may be prosecuted: Provided, however, that such appeal, or writ of error, shall extend only to questions of law which may arise upon and be decided during the progress of the trial in the circuit court.

Mr. GHOLSON. I do not agree, for one, to either of these substitutes. For God's sake, if we intend to punish any man in Kentucky, let us continue the right to challenge to the commonwealth, and for this the substitute does not provide. My experience teaches me that your very rich, moneyed man, can purchase jurors enough where this right of challenge is not granted to the commonwealth to keep their necks out of the halter. It is to prevent men being bought and sold in the market and placed where they can be put in the jury box, that this right of challenge is proposed. It has become a remark in my section of the country that you cannot hang or punish a moneyed man. Indeed I have heard men go so far as to say that they would not hesitate to shoot any man who would offend them, if they had five or ten thousand dollars to expend to get themselves clear. Instead of striking it out entirely, I should prefer to extend the right of the commonwealth to challenge.

Mr. DIXON. I am decidedly against the section, and greatly prefer the substitute of the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor.) That is, that there shall be an appeal taken only in cases where there is a dispute upon a question of law merely, and nothing else. I do not know that I am in favor of the right to appeal at all, but I greatly prefer it to the section as it stands. I think that the arguments adduced by the gentleman from Graves, (Mr. Mayes,) are very far from proving the proposition he assumes. As I stated before, the accused has but a poor chance against the commonwealth, with the advantages it has on its side. He is compelled to rebut as far as possible the popular prejudices which the very fact that he is charged with crime excites against him before he can have a fair trial. The commonwealth should stand as the protector of the accused and stand between him and the popular prejudice, rather than in the attitude of seeking to urge him to the sacrifice without an opportunity to defend himself. The gentleman tells us that he is a prosecuting attorney, and that because he has discovered that errors have crept into our criminal system, he desires this amendment. And he tells us that gentlemen of the bar are deeply interested in protecting the accused. Are not commonwealth attorneys deeply concerned in convicting the accused.

Mr. MAYES. The gentleman is mistaken if he supposes I learned the facts I stated only during an experience as commonwealth attorney.

Mr. DIXON. I have no doubt but that gentleman has learned it by experience, but the question is whether he has been rightly taught or not. The school in which he was taught was that of prosecuting the accused, and what prosecuting attorney does not come forward with a determination that the culprit should be convicted whether he is guilty or not; and then if the jury happen to differ with him, what is his opinion? Why that there is a great defect in the criminal jurisprudence of the state, and that it ought to be remedied. Of course there is no man who defends the accused, but who believes if he is found not guilty the verdict is right. The one is a fair set off for the other. The rich and the powerful can protect themselves; but who shall shield the poor and the impotent from the storm of popular prejudice when it is excited against him. Would the gentleman break down the great barriers to this prejudice which the law has thrown around the weak and the defenceless. And yet to get at the rich and powerful, you must strike down all the poor and powerless. That is the argument, and I do not assent to it. The most powerful talents are brought to assist the rich and powerful, while the poor devil who comes into court with suspicion upon him, if he has no money in his pocket, will find it difficult to array this talent in his defence. And when the suspicions of the moment have excited the popular prejudices against him, under these circumstances, would you take from him the little protection the law has extended to him in the right to challenge those who are prejudiced against him, or give to the commonwealth the right to challenge the few who might be disposed to do him justice? This is the whole sum and substance of the proposition. I am not for that, for I well know how difficult it is sometimes for men to get even a show of justice.

I was once engaged in the county of Hopkins in the case of a miserable negro, who was charged with breaking open a house, with the intention to commit a felony. There were two counts in the indictment,—one charging him with intention to commit a rape, and the other with intention to commit a theft. Under one of these counts, of course he could not be punished other than by stripes, because the crime would not constitute a felony; but the intent to commit a rape was a felony, for which the punishment was death. The suspicion however went forth, that he intended to commit a rape on the lady of the house, though her husband was in bed with her at the time, and the excitement ran so high against the accused, that when a jury came to be called up the pannel was exhausted as well as the crowd outside; for the reply to the usual question put to jurors on such occasions, was almost invariably that they had made up their minds, and that was that the negro ought to be hung. It was an honest and a generous feeling which impelled the people—it was a desire for the safety of the commonwealth; but in this case it was mislead, misdirected, by passion. We labored for a long while in securing a jury; and such was the influence of this feeling upon them that they could not agree; and another jury had to be called, when the same difficulties of empannelling one were encountered. At last one was formed, and they came to the conclusion that the man was not guilty, and acquitted him. What chance had he under that state of facts with the commonwealth? Had he any power to pack a jury? None. Nothing but the justice of his cause and the shield of the law had he, to save him from the sacrifice demanded by the passion-led and excited multitude. I am not therefore for wresting from the accused the only chance which the law gives him of securing a fair and impartial trial. And I tell gentlemen that if bribery and corruption is to be brought to bear, that if they do give the commonwealth the right to challenge four or five of the jurors, it will not deprive the rich and powerful of the means to exercise it. But you take from the poor man the protection which the law throws around him with a view of securing him a fair and impartial trial. I would not extend the power the commonwealth now has, when it can array whatever talents it may desire to prosecute any man who may be accused and bring him to conviction, even when not guilty. It has been said here that the cry comes up from all parts of Kentucky, that the guilty are allowed to escape from the punishment due their crimes. Has it not been complained of also, that men have been sacrificed to the popular fury and excitement of the moment.

Have we not recently heard of two negroes who were charged with killing their master, and who without trial, upon the mere charge, were burned at the stake? It was against these popular excitements this right of challenge was designed to protect the accused, and to secure him a fair trial. Let justice then be administered without prejudice, and in the spirit of mercy, and not of revenge. If a victim has to be offered up to justice in her high place, let mercy and pity be allowed to drop a tear on the sacrifice. Do not give all these things to the wild and mad fury, gotten up to reflect the feelings and passions of the multitude. Give the accused a fair opportunity of being heard, and then if he is convicted, let him suffer the penalty of his crime. But I would not give to the commonwealth any more power than it has. The chained and trembling culprit stands at the august bar of the commonwealth, with all her strength and power around him, and she has but to speak the word, and he dies. And yet gentlemen desire to increase that power, and it is sought to deprive the miserable accused of the chance of warding off the influence that the prejudices and excitement of the community may bring to bear against him. I am for striking out the section altogether.

Mr. HARDIN. There is a great deal of very fine declamation in what the gentleman has said, but he does not meet the question fairly. The proposition is this: the accused may challenge for cause, if he can show any cause which is known to the law as good ground for challenge, and in addition to that, he can challenge twenty without showing any cause. That is the situation of the accused at this time. The commonwealth can challenge for cause, and I need not enumerate all the causes that exist and are known to the law. The cause of complaint is this: the commonwealth has no right to challenge, without showing cause, the men who are brought forward and hired to come to the court house to get on the jury after the regular pannel has been exhausted, with a view of saving the prisoner, who will always swear that they have not made up an opinion, and then the commonwealth is obliged to take them. I recollect very well hearing judge Buckner say that he had tried a man who lived in Jefferson county, some six miles from Louisville on the Bardstown road, some half a dozen times or more, for either counterfeiting bank notes or passing those which were counterfeit, and he never could convict him, because he had a great many strikers unknown to the body of the people, who hung about the court house and contrived to get on the jury, and thus managed to hang the jury. I recollect the case of a man by the name of Carter, who murdered another on a boat on the Ohio river. The victim was a man of money, who came up to buy a load of lime, and Carter murdered him and sold the boat and the lime and pocketed the money. It was as clear a case of guilt, I reckon, as any man ever saw or read of. Carter had some funds, together with the money of the murdered man, and I was one of the two or three lawyers who defended him. And without our knowing anything about it, or having a chance to know, except to guess, some man hung about the court house, and hung the jury for him. And so for four successive trials, on each occasion, one man hung the jury, until at last, a jury could not be got in the county. He laid there in the Brandenburg jail for three years without a jury being procured, and the judge and officers were obliged, at last, to declare that the whole county had made up their opinion, and that no trial could be had, and governor Metcalfe was obliged to let him out. And yet perhaps, a more guilty man never lived. He told his wife, I think, of his guilt, for he was married to a very respectable woman who lived in Mason county; for when I took the pardon to her in New Albany, Indiana, she staid and made him up some clothes, and when she handed them to him, she told him to go away from her, she never wanted to see him again. Four times this man, without the knowledge of his lawyers, succeeded in securing one man on the jury, and thus avoided a conviction.

I believe the eloquence of the gentleman from Henderson to have been entirely misdirected. What is the proposition? Is it to restrict the challenges of the accused? No. Whenever they show cause they may challenge, and when they cannot, they still may challenge twenty. But I would give to the commonwealth the right of challenging one-quarter of the number allowed the accused. That is all. Now a man may kill my father, son, or relation, and have I not the right to see that justice is done upon him; and when the law in such a case, should allow me only four challenges, does it take away a single right that the accused has? No; it is only to give the government the right to get clear of the men who come to the court house prepared to go on the jury.

The gentleman from Henderson has said that a man who has been a long time a commonwealth's attorney, is apt to run off too much against the accused, I suppose upon the same principle that in England they would not let a butcher serve on a jury. But at the same time, is there not a danger of gentlemen who have never prosecuted, but have always defended, of running off too far in favor of the accused? I hope we shall give the government this right to a mere one-fourth of the number of challenges allowed to the accused. We know that there is no protection to a man's life in this country, and that the hotspurs of the land are in the habit of walking around and shooting down and stabbing whoever they please, just by way of playing 'big airs.' Take away from a man the protection of the law, and that very instant life is rendered insecure, and men will kill sooner than they ought in self-defence. Whenever you proclaim to the peaceable citizen that his life is not safe, and that upon slight provocation a man may take it, that instant you render him the aggressor in his desire for self-defence. I say, without the fear of contradiction, that already in the case of crimes which cry to heaven for justice, there are too many facilities for the escape of the guilty. Who do they employ to defend them? Why some four or five gentlemen just as eloquent as my friend on the right, (Mr. Dixon.) And who has the commonwealth? Why some little lawyer, who is sometimes called queen's solicitor, and who has got the office by way of charity, and who cannot represent the government at all.

I think I may say that I have defended or prosecuted some one thousand cases of felony and other offences. From 1808 to 1815 I was a public prosecutor, and since then I have alternately prosecuted and defended, but more of the last than the first. I never prosecute a man unless I believe him to be guilty, and then I would just as leave prosecute him as I would a sheep-stealing dog. I recollect very well the case of a man by the name of Spencer, who six or seven years ago was arrested on a charge of killing his stepson, a boy some eight years old, in the most barbarous and cruel manner. The evidence against him was entirely of a circumstantial kind, and it was made up of little scraps of circumstances, but which, when put together, amounted to a demonstration to my mind, at least, of his guilt. The commonwealth's attorney did not view the testimony as I did, and therefore did not push the prosecution with his accustomed energy. I urged him to push it, but he declined, and at last I persuaded him to make an excuse to go to Hodgenville, that the case might fall into my hands. He did so, leaving me to prosecute the case. Spencer was very ably defended, but the jury was not out more than five minutes before they found him guilty, and the court being satisfied, he was condemned. I did not know but that I might be wrong, and I rode over to Elizabeth on the day he was hung, to see whether he would make a confession. I went with the sheriff, a clergyman, and the clerk, and after they had prayed and sang with him for some time, and we were about to go, said the clergyman to him, "Now, Spencer, tell us whether you are guilty or not." Said he, "it is not worth while to go over all the circumstances; I will only say that Mr. Hardin was about right in what he said, except that I killed the boy about half an hour sooner than he said I did." This man was near being cleared merely because the commonwealth's attorney did not view the facts and circumstances as I did, during the examination of witnesses. One thing satisfied me that he was the murderer. This was when the horse came home without the boy, and his mother started to go and seek him, the step-father drove her home and would not let her go. I could name a thousand cases where men have escaped the punishment due their crimes. I know at first there is a strong prejudice against the accused, but is there a lawyer who allows his case to come on for trial at such a time? No; you do not—you get a continuance, and you get one again and again, until at last the people begin to say, "poor fellow, he has suffered enough, God knows. We can't bring the dear man to life again, so let him go."

I recollect the case of a man named Sy. Hults, who shot another, but who, however, did not die. He did not give bail, and I did not want him to do so, preferring that he should remain in jail. For a while, every time that he was brought out, I would always walk with him. I found that there was a strong prejudice against him, rendering it necessary that I should get a continuance. After laying in jail for two winters, and becoming frost bitten, he was brought out in the spring, and as we passed along, I could hear the people saying, "poor Sy. he has suffered enough God knows—and he fought the British too," and similar expressions of commiseration. Said I, "Sy. now is the time, I shall clear you now;" and the suit being brought on, he was cleared in five minutes after the jury retired. There is a prejudice against the accused at first; but lawyers of skill and ingenuity will not let a trial come on until that prejudice shall subside, and the public sympathies become excited in his favor. There will be no right therefore, of which the accused will be deprived, by giving to the commonwealth this privilege to challenge. I know the government has the advantage in what is called the last speech to the jury. But on the other hand, the accused has the benefit of four or five first rate speeches, and by the time you come to the last speech, the jury are in pretty much the same condition we are here sometimes, so tired out, as to feel no desire to listen to the last speech.

As to this proposition to allow an appeal in criminal cases, I am opposed to it. It is said that appeals are only to be taken on questions of law; but cannot an ingenious lawyer make a law point on almost any question that arises? Hardly a question can be suggested, that may not be made one of law. Once a delay of a few months is obtained, a hundred hopes are excited of the escape of the prisoner. He may escape from jail, important witnesses may die off, or be bribed to leave the state. In a word, you would double the chances of the prisoner for escape, and in addition, you greatly increase the expenses of the courts. Now, there is one way in which an appeal may be taken, to which I see no real objection myself, although I am not prepared to go for it. It is the plan proposed in the amendment of my friend from Daviess, (Mr. Triplett,) that provides that whenever the circuit judge entertains doubts on any point of law, in a criminal case, he may refer the case to the court of appeals for their opinion. This too is the plan in England; and it is the only form of an appeal which I could in any way consent to see introduced here. I do not know that I ever saw an innocent man convicted in my life, but I have seen many guilty men acquitted. We come here to make laws for the protection of the commonwealth, of the whole people, and not solely for the accused.

I appeal to gentlemen not to overload this constitution to any greater extent than they have. If they do, I warn them that it will break down before the people by its own weight. The people demand that there shall no longer exist so many facilities for the escape of the guilty from the punishment due their crimes, and I ask gentlemen not to add to these complaints by increasing these facilities. Give to the commonwealth the right of challenge, and you give the people a protection against those who come to the court house for the sole purpose of being hired to go on juries. Give it to them also, if you desire to make friends for your constitution and secure its adoption.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, but Mr. MACHEN claimed the floor, and the main question was not ordered.

Mr. MACHEN. I feel much like the elder gentleman from Nelson, on this matter of making a constitution. I do not wish to burden it, and I expected we should strike out a part of the report of the committee, because I believe it will be oppressive to it when it comes before the country.

What do you propose to do? To give to the commonwealth the right to do—what? Of saying that some of her proud sons are not worthy to sit in a jury box, and not assign a reason for it. I ask where you can place a more damning stain on a man's character, than to deny him the privilege of sitting as a juror in trying the rights, liberties, or life of his fellow citizen? It is this to which I am opposed. I never will, by my vote, sanction any such proceeding. I hold that it is the duty of the commonwealth to look upon all her citizens as true and loyal, till the reverse is proved. But, without proof, there is an attempt to authorize the commonwealth, through her ministerial agents, to say, "you are unworthy of the rights of freemen." I think the commonwealth has nothing to fear, as long as the elder gentleman from Nelson will be able to come to the rescue. How has it been heretofore, when his mind, blessed with intuition, has been brought to bear, and he has had the privilege of coming to the rescue? The guilt of the accused is as clear as the beams of the sun, and nothing but his own power can resist the destructive power of the commonwealth. Again, when he sees he has carried the jest a little too far for the commonwealth, and destruction is about to fall on the man, he interferes, and says, my power has carried you a little astray, and he saves the victim.

I hold that the commonwealth has now power enough in her hands, and there is a vast difference between the right of the accused to challenge, and its being extended peremptorily to the commonwealth. When the man is once arraigned, and on his indictment a true bill is found, declaring him guilty, it is enough to speed, throughout the whole circle of his acquaintance, the impression that he is guilty. Twelve men have pronounced him guilty, on their oaths. His reputation goes abroad, with guilt attached to it, and when he comes up for trial, there is a propriety in giving him the right to challenge peremptorily. Many will come into court with their minds made up, and I ask if he may not exclude these, that justice may be done? I think this is an improper power, to be placed in the constitution.

Mr. TRIPLETT. I have an amendment which I wish to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Mason:

"Whenever the circuit court judge, before whom a criminal or penal prosecution is had, shall entertain doubts on any point of law which shall be decided by him during such trial, he shall have the power of adjourning over such doubtful points of law, to be decided by the court of appeals; and in the meantime, may delay the execution of the sentence in such case, until the court of appeals have decided such doubtful points of law; or the accused may apply to a judge of the court of appeals for a writ of error, [in any criminal or penal prosecution,] which may be granted by him, and shall act as a supersedeas to the judgment of the court in which the trial was had, until the opinion of the court of appeals, on the questions involved, shall be entered in the circuit court, which shall be governed thereby."

I will state the object I have in view, and the reasons for that object. After the most mature examination, I am satisfied that the great body of the argument of the gentleman from Nelson is correct. I have been in the criminal practice for some twenty years, and I am satisfied that there is not one case in twenty, that would not be taken up. But there is another thing which has not attracted the attention of this house. It is a fact that we have not at this day in Kentucky, a settled criminal code, though we have the best civil code in the world. One judge in one circuit is governed by one criminal code and another by another. I could go on from now till midnight, to enumerate differences between the two courts, in which I practice. This ought not to be. The lives and liberties of the people of Kentucky, are too valuable to be sacrificed by judges going too far on the one hand, or not far enough on the other. I would call to my aid, both of the gentlemen from Nelson, and they are both astute lawyers.

The commonwealth has the right to the benefit of their experience. I would like to hear, not only their experience, but the experience of the older delegates, whether the commonwealth ought not to have some means of sending up appeals, where cases have been decided against the commonwealth, improperly. We should have a universal and equal code throughout the commonwealth. But I have not gone so far. I have stated two propositions. First, where the judge doubts upon a point of criminal law, he has the right to test his doubt, and adjourn the case up to the court of appeals. Ought he not to have that right? If it is a matter of property the parties will take it up. But when the judge who sits on the bench, doubts, surely he ought to have the right to send up the case to the court of appeals, where it may be ably and lengthily argued by a court that have time to give it full consideration.

That is one point. The other is this. If the counsel for the accused, or the accused think the judge is prejudiced against him, and he refuses to take an appeal, then the accused has the right to apply to the judge of the court of appeals. And if that judge is willing to take the responsibility, and sees good cause for issuing a supersedeas, he ought to have the benefit of it. I go so far, and if gentlemen say the commonwealth shall also have the right, I am not prepared to say I shall oppose it, for I do know, that I have heard points of law urged against the commonwealth, without any good reason, for the purpose of saving the criminal. From that day forward it is put down in that lawyer's mind, and other lawyers appeal to it, till in some cases, more particularly in cases of burglary, it is impossible to convict a man at all. I do not go so far as that. I leave that matter to other gentlemen, but so far as I do go, I do most sincerely hope the delegates will support me. It is necessary to have a settled criminal code, throughout the state. No danger can arise, for the judge will not send up a case, unless there is a doubt. It has been tried in England, four hundred years, and I have heard of no complaint from lawyers, the bench, or the citizens. Let us at least have as much mercy as they have there.

Mr. RUDD moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered.

Mr. PRICE called for the yeas and nays.

The question was then taken on the substitute of Mr. TRIPLETT for the amendment of Mr. TAYLOR, and it was agreed to—yeas 54, nays 31.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thos. W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—54.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Thomas D. Brown, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfiede, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Mark E. Huston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, John Price, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe—31.

The question recurred on striking out the fifteenth section and substituting the amendment offered by Mr. Triplett.

Mr. GRAY called for a division of the question, so that the vote should first be taken on striking out.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE called for the yeas and nays, and being taken, they were—yeas 42, nays 46.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Jas. P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, Nathan McClure, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe—42.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfiede, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Geo. W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—46.

So the convention refused to strike out the section.

The question was then taken on adopting the fifteenth section. The yeas and nays were called for by Messrs. MITCHELL and BROWN, and resulted as follows—yeas 41, nays 47.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Charles Chambers, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfiede, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—41.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe—47.

So the section was rejected.

Mr. TRIPLETT gave notice that he should move to offer his amendment as an additional section.

Mr. PRICE gave notice that on Wednesday next, he should move a reconsideration of the fourth section of the report of the committee on the court of appeals—fixing the number of judges.

The convention then adjourned.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER, 27, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. G. W. BRUSH.

EXPENSES OF LEGISLATIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the second auditor be requested to report to this convention the annual cost and length of the sessions of the legislature of this commonwealth for the last ten years, including all expenses incident to the same. Also, a comparative statement of the expenses of the sessions of the legislature since the time of meeting was changed to the last day of December; also, a like number of sessions commencing on the first Monday in December, omitting in said report appropriations not connected with the annual expenses of each session, but giving such as are incident to a long or short session."

In a brief conversation between Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. JAMES on the subject of this resolution, its object was stated to be, to ascertain what would be the probable saving of expense by the adoption of biennial sessions.

The resolution was adopted.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That so much of the article on the legislative department, and all amendments proposed to the same, as relates to the subject of the apportionment of representation, be referred to a committee of ten delegates, one to be appointed from each congressional district."

He said there was one question which remained unsettled, and if he could look forward to its speedy settlement, he could fix in his own mind the time when this convention would close its labors. He alluded to the apportionment bill. To that subject his resolution related.

He proposed to raise a committee from each congressional district, to be selected by the presiding officer, to whom that subject may be referred, with the hope that by taking into consideration the various projects, a union may be agreed on which will give the house but little trouble. He did not allude to the basis of representation, but merely to the principle of the apportionment of representation.

Mr. COFFEY moved to amend the resolution by striking out "one," and inserting "two."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE had no particular objection if twenty were considered necessary, but a smaller committee had been thought more likely to lead to harmonious action.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL said the resolution, as it stands, met his entire approbation. He believed that good would grow out of it. If, however, the number should be increased, he feared the action of the committee would be retarded rather than promoted. One member from each district would be amply sufficient, inasmuch as he could, and doubtless would, confer with the other delegates from the same district.

Mr. KELLY moved to strike out "one," and insert "three."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, in answer to a question from Mr. Hardin, again stated the object of the resolution. It was not intended to apportion the representation among the counties, but to settle a principle to regulate the apportionment equally hereafter.

Mr. WALLER said he should like to have the resolution include the basis of representation as well. He was unwilling to settle on any ratio till the basis of representation was settled.

Mr. TURNER hoped the resolution would not be adopted. They had not yet fixed on the basis of representation, and how a committee could arrange the apportionment of representation between the different counties of the state, without knowing what basis they should finally adopt, was to him inexplicable. He was opposed to delegating this power to a committee, and therefore, he desired that the resolution should be laid on the table for the present.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE begged gentlemen to understand, that whether they fixed the basis according to the resolution which the convention had already passed, or whether they retained it as it is in the old constitution, or adopted any other element in the basis of representation, still the question of apportionment of that representation was different, and wholly unconnected with it. It was designed simply to lay down in the constitution a general principle by which, whenever the basis of representation should be fixed, the legislature should apply that principle in assigning the members as equally as they could be assigned by such a rule. And in the appointment of the committee under this resolution, he hoped he should be omitted. He would also suggest the propriety of the delegates from each congressional district, selecting from amongst themselves who should serve on the committee, to be appointed under the resolution.

Mr. TURNER could not see why it was necessary now to raise such a committee. He protested against referring this subject to a committee of ten men, for they should thereby commit themselves to what those ten men might afterwards submit. He more especially objected when there was so great a diversity of opinion on the subject of the basis of representation amongst the delegates from the several congressional districts themselves.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE replied that he did not propose to refer that subject to the committee at all.

Mr. TURNER. Can we build a house without a foundation? What is the principle unless it is the basis of representation? I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. STEVENSON called for the yeas and nays, and being taken they were—yeas 37, nays 54.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, William Cowper, Edward Curd, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, William Hendrix, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Alexander K. Marshall, John H. McHenry, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White—37.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfiede, James H. Garrard, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Mark E. Huston, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—54.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

Mr. MERIWETHER called for a division, so that the vote should first be taken on striking out.

The question was taken on the motion to strike out the word "one," and it was negatived.

The resolution was then adopted.

The PRESIDENT stated that it would be agreeable to him to receive from the delegates from each congressional district, the name of a delegate that they might be desirous to serve on the committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL asked leave of absence for Mr. M. P. Marshall on account of sickness, which was granted.

CIRCUIT COURT.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the joint committee of thirty, concerning circuit courts.

Mr. TRIPLETT. I believe when the house adjourned yesterday evening, I had just offered the following amendment, as an additional section:

"Whenever the circuit court judge, before whom a criminal or penal prosecution is had, shall entertain doubts on any point of law which shall be decided by him during such trial, he shall have the power of adjourning over such doubtful points of law, to be decided by the court of appeals; and in the meantime, may delay the execution of the sentence in such case, until the court of appeals have decided such doubtful points of law; or the accused may apply to a judge of the court of appeals for a writ of error, [in any criminal or penal prosecution,] which may be granted by him, and shall act as a supersedeas to the judgment of the court in which the trial was had, until the opinion of the court of appeals, on the questions involved, shall be entered in the circuit court, which shall be governed thereby."

I was somewhat surprised to find, after the adjournment of the house last evening, that a misapprehension prevailed among members, in reference to the character of my amendment. It contains two propositions, that are perfectly simple in their character. The first is, that when a judge of a circuit court tries a case, and entertains a doubt on a point of law, he may carry the point of law to the court of appeals. Now, what will be the result of that proposition? Where a point of law is such that a judge entertains serious doubts, and is unwilling that the life or liberty of the accused shall be lost, without first having the decision of the court or appeals, he may adjourn the case to that tribunal. One answers, it very seldom happens. If so, then the remedy for the evil is not frequently called into operation. What is the next point? It will immediately strike the mind of every thinking man in this house, that there is a possibility that the counsel for the accused may be satisfied that there ought to be a doubt raised—that the point of law is not well settled. Take, for instance, the case stated here a day or two ago, of one judge having decided that a negro was entitled to benefit of clergy, whilst another judge decided, in a similar case, that he was not. Now, one of them was wrong, and the other right. A case as strong as this I met with myself.

In 1825-6 the legislature of Kentucky passed a law as important as ever was enacted by them, that a jurymen, when called up and examined on his voir dire, whether he had conversed with the witnesses in the case, should be liable to exception. I know, and I so stated at the time, that in two adjoining districts, one circuit judge decided this law to be constitutional, and that it was our duty to obey it, whilst another judge decided it to be unconstitutional and that we ought not to obey it. Is that law important or not? Nothing can be more important than that a man should be tried by an impartial jury, and the question arises, what is that impartiality, while one judge decides one way and another another. If the court of appeals were once to decide that question, it would operate obligatorily upon the circuit judges. I could go on and give instances innumerable, of the uncertainty of the law in such cases. This is enough for the present. What are the benefits to be derived from uniformity of decisions? We may not probably derive any benefit from it, but our children and our grand children may. At the present time, there is no settled criminal jurisprudence in Kentucky; but if my amendment is adopted, it will go far to secure that desirable object. There will grow up, by degrees, a settled, permanent, jurisprudence, arising from the decisions of the court of appeals in this state upon all the important points that will be carried thither, either by the circuit court judges, or by the accused, and thus by and by, we shall have here, what has been the glory and ornament of Great Britain, throughout the whole land. How did her criminal law grow up? Look at her acts of Parliament, all of which may be condensed within one small volume, while her criminal laws are contained in volume upon volume. The law on criminal evidence, since 1776, has been obligatory on the general assembly of this and other states. For a time, the criminal jurisprudence could not even be read in this country. But legislation, like every thing else, is progressive and improving; and five or six years ago, the legislature agreed that they might be read, but must not be authoritative. Now, that is a very nice question. These questions will be settled and made obligatory on our court of appeals, and the circuit courts throughout the state, and then the judges will decide alike, and that will be some consolation to the criminal.

Mr. DAVIS offered the following as a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Daviess.

"The legislature shall pass laws authorizing writs of error, and regulating the right of challenge of jurors in criminal cases."

Mr. HARDIN. I will only remark, that I think the legislature have that right now, unless the constitution prohibits it.

Mr. DAVIS. Not unless it is granted.

Mr. HARDIN. I will waive that for the present. I have not much objection to the first part of the proposition of the gentleman from Daviess; but to the second, I have stronger objections than to any that has been offered.

In England, twelve judges ride the circuits, and if they have doubts on any point of law, they respite the sentence till they get the opinion of the twelve. The part to which I object in the proposition offered is, that a supersedeas may be obtained, on application to any judge of the court of appeals. The trial of criminal cases is generally during the first week of the session of the court. If the man is sent to the penitentiary, he is usually sent off as early as the second week. When is the supersedeas to be applied for? There is no limit. Is it one year, or six months, or three years? When is he to give bail? The sentence or judgment is set aside, or at least suspended so as to take bail, if it is a bailable offence. Who is to take bail? Is it the keeper of the penitentiary? The circuit court has adjourned, and if he gets bail, do you think he will ever appear? He will be out bushwhacking, and if the court of appeals decides against him, he will not appear.

I will repeat, there are too many means for criminals to escape, for the good of the great body of the community, and I do hope they will not be increased. I hope the second member of the proposition will be withdrawn. There is no demand in public sentiment for carrying criminal cases to the court of appeals. I will ask gentlemen if they have heard of any such demand. I have heard no man make such a claim, except some of our profession. Nobody has the right of appeal but the accused. Government does not have it. I never saw an innocent man convicted, while I have seen a thousand guilty escape.

Mr. DAVIS. If there are any minor provisions of the constitution, in which the people of my section of the country feel a deep interest, it is those provisions which are to regulate the trial of criminal cases. It may be called prejudice, or it may be called cruelty; but whenever a man perpetrates a crime, that strikes at the safety of the citizen, and the general welfare of society, I want him punished. I want him punished for the sake of justice, and especially for the sake of the example, and the security which that example gives to the community.

In regulating the subject of criminal trials, what ought to be the object of this convention, and of all law-makers? It certainly should be that justice should be done, as well to the commonwealth as to the accused; and that such modes of proceeding should be adopted, as would most certainly secure the impartial and enlightened administration of justice. Now sir, is the present mode of trial in criminal cases, so far as it involves the mode of selecting the jury, and especially the right of challenge in favor of the criminal—is it of such a character as to secure the great end—the proper administration of criminal justice? I think not. The right of challenge, as it now exists, is a statutory right, though formerly it was a common-law right. What was the state of criminal jurisprudence, when this right was secured to the accused? The judges were appointed by, and held office during the pleasure of the crown. We all know that a large class of criminal proceedings, involved state criminals, where the minister of the crown took part, and where the crown influence was used to sacrifice the accused; where the king having the power to displace the judge at his pleasure, and appoint a more humble tool to fill the office—when desirous of having a great state criminal convicted—it became a matter of interest in order to secure justice, that the accused should have this peremptory right of challenge. This feature, as to the mode of administering justice, did not exist in this country, and a great blessing it was to our citizens that it did not—nor does it exist now in England. But there were other important features attending the administration of criminal justice, and what were they? The accused was denied, on the merits of his case, the privilege of counsel for his defence. Upon mere collateral questions, he was allowed the benefit of counsel; but upon the general question of guilt or innocence, upon which general question the fate of the accused depended, he was not allowed the benefit of counsel to aid him in making his defence. If such were now unfortunately the condition of persons accused of crime in this country, it is probable that I would be opposed to a change such as I have proposed in the amendment. But no such barbarous principle does prevail in this country.

Well, what are the other important features in the administration of criminal justice? The judge invariably instructs the jury, that the law prefers that ninety nine guilty persons should escape, rather than that one innocent person should be punished; and that if the jury, upon a review of all the facts in the case, entertain a rational doubt, as to the guilt of the accused, they must acquit. Well, now, the principle of law, as it is administered in relation to criminals almost amounts to a total and unconditional immunity to criminals; especially to those who have money, or powerful and influential connexions. But there are some other features in the administration of criminal law. The jury may acquit. If they acquit, there is no new trial granted to the commonwealth against the accused. An acquittal, though it may be against evidence—against law, is final and irreversible in favor of the accused; but on the other hand, if there is a conviction against evidence, where a reasonable doubt prevails, it is not only the privilege of the accused to have, but the duty of the court to grant, a new trial. These being the general features of the administration of criminal law, in the trial of criminals, the question is, whether they are of such a character, as to secure justice as well to the commonwealth as to the accused. The gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) has given us his experience on this subject. I also have had my experience sir, during a period of twenty-five years. I have never been prosecuting attorney, though I have sometimes been engaged to assist the prosecution, but I have generally been engaged for the defence of criminals. And I can say with him, in perfect truth and sincerity, that in twenty five years practice, in which practice I have seen many criminals tried, and have been engaged in the defence of many, I have never known an innocent man to be punished, but I have known very many guilty ones to go unwhipt of justice.

Now, what is the great object that we ought to have in view, when devising a mode of trial in criminal cases? Do you want to create a piece of machinery that shall result inevitably, in nine cases out of ten, or even a majority of cases, in the necessary acquittal of the criminal. Is that the purpose of your legislation? Is that the object that members of this convention have in view when they refuse to incorporate such a principle, as is embodied in my amendment, in the constitution, against the experience of the country, and against the proper administration of justice. Gentlemen say they are for mercy. Sir, I am for mercy; but the best mercy, would be a faithful execution of the criminal law. The best mercy is, for the law to throw its shield as a panoply over the citizen for his protection. That shield is not now interposed between the assassin and his victim. Well what is proposed to be done? Why, that you should allow the legislature to pass laws, regulating the right of peremptory challenge, in criminal cases; and also to authorize the granting of writs of error in the same cases. Criminals now have the right, in cases of high treason, to challenge thirty five jurors, according to the principles of the common law; and in other cases they have the right, by statute law, to challenge twenty. We do not propose to abrogate that right; we do not propose to interfere with it at all; we only say that the commonwealth shall have the right to challenge one-fifth as many as the accused. I say this is right—it is necessary to the impartial administration of justice; and it is demanded at the hands of this convention. What is it that goes to stimulate the perpetration of crime? What is it that induces the murderer to imbrue his hands in his brother's blood? It is the manner in which the criminal justice of this country is administered; it is that when he looks around him, he sees that slaves are punished—that the humble, and the friendless are punished—there is no difficulty in punishing them—but the man who has the benefit of influential connexions—the man who possesses wealth, goes unpunished. Your law is rendered inoperative, so far as regards these—it is but a dead letter—human life becomes cheap under your mode of administration of the criminal law—there is no security—no protection under it. Why sir, within the range of my experience, I could point to cases that have occurred in days gone by, where a large and influential party in the state have committed crime—bold and atrocious crime. They were arraigned and acquitted; whereas, if they had been punished, the example would now operate as a terror to evil doers. This impunity of crime, has emboldened men to commit crimes, at which humanity shudders. A peaceable citizen while walking along the street, is shot down by a man whom he had undesignedly made his enemy; and if a trial be attempted, it is but a solemn mockery—the guilty party is never punished, and it is a consciousness of this that stimulates him to do the deed; whereas, if he knew, that punishment would follow the commission of the crime, it would have the effect of restraining him—his victim would be spared—and a mourning widow and dependent orphans would be saved the direst calamity that could be inflicted upon them.

My purpose is simply not to deprive the accused of any right that he now has, but to give to the commonwealth a right that is essential to the administration of public justice, so far as regards the criminal jurisprudence of the country. I knew of a case in Nicholas county, where a young man, walking up to another in the streets, drew his knife, and stabbed him. The man sunk in his tracks and died, leaving a wife and three children, in a state of penury and want. That man's blood cried aloud from the ground for justice, and the sense of the community demanded it so strongly, that the young man was indicted. I was engaged to aid in the prosecution. The criminal had his friends hovering about the court house, and five of them were put upon the jury. I wanted to set aside the array on that account, but failed. Well sir, the jury were provoked by the motion—I suppose—and they found him guilty of manslaughter only, when the facts made the case one of the most diabolical and outrageous murders that was ever perpetrated. The man was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary; and the judge granted a new trial. Before the time of holding another court, the culprit had given bail and fled. And sir, three of those jurymen, who were packed for his trial, and who prevented him from being sentenced to be hung, were afterwards arraigned for perjury, and sent to the penitentiary. And sir, in the same county, within the last eighteen months, there was a simple hearted fellow, who had $2,200 in his pocket. It became known to a man of desperate character, who enticed him into the sequestered hills of Licking, after night fall, and had him robbed. Well, he was indicted, and arraigned for trial. I was engaged in his prosecution also—and sir, I recognize no difference between lending my assistance in the prosecution of an infamous scoundrel, and the defence of an innocent man who is arraigned for an alleged misdemeanor. Well, I aided in the prosecution of this man for robbery. He had—as in the other case—his friends and supporters, standing around waiting to be summoned upon the jury. We chanced to get one of these men upon the jury—and I knew as well before he was brought to the book, as I did after the trial, that he was predetermined to acquit the culprit. This man hung the jury; and if we had been entitled to the right of challenge, we would have excused him, and a verdict of conviction would have taken place. At the late session of the Nicholas circuit court, this juror was indicted for perjury. There is no lawyer, who has had experience in criminal cases, but knows that such occurrences are frequent. It is to guard against such occurrences—to enable the commonwealth, as well as the accused, to obtain justice, that some such provision is necessary. Is there any thing in this to prevent a fair and impartial jury from being empanelled in the case of the commonwealth against a criminal? Nothing. Then why not allow to the commonwealth the privilege of challenging jurors, to one-fifth the number that the accused may challenge. When the jury is told by the court, that if they entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused, he should be acquitted, and that the law prefers that ninety and nine guilty men should escape, rather than one innocent man should suffer—and when counsel is allowed to the accused to argue the law of the case, in most of the circuits in the state—I ask you, if the commonwealth should not be allowed the privilege of challenging at least five out of twenty. Would it at all prevent a fair and impartial trial between the accused and the commonwealth? Why sir, it is the object, and should be the object of all men, to secure an impartial trial. There lives no man, who does not desire that the commonwealth should have this power at least. Now, unless gentlemen shall satisfy this convention that this innovation upon the right of challenge, will produce such a state of things as will prevent an impartial trial, it seems to me the convention should not hesitate to grant to the commonwealth this right of challenge. It seems to me, that justice should be done, not only to the accused, but to the commonwealth. I will refer to a single passage upon this subject.

"Challenges upon any of the foregoing accounts are styled challenges for cause; which may be without stint in both criminal and civil trials. But in criminal cases, or at least in capital ones, there is, in favorem vite, allowed to the prisoner an arbitrary and capricious species of challenge to a certain number of jurors, without shewing any cause at all; which is called a peremptory challenge; a provision full of that tenderness and humanity to prisoners, for which our English laws are justly famous. This is grounded on two reasons. 1. As every one must be sensible, what sudden impressions and unaccountable prejudices we are apt to conceive upon the bare looks and gestures of another: and how necessary it is, that a prisoner (when put to defend his life) should have a good opinion of his jury, the want of which might totally disconcert him; the law wills not that he should be tried by any one man against whom he has conceived a prejudice, even without being able to assign a reason for such his dislike. 2. Because, upon challenges for cause shewn, if the reason assigned prove insufficient to set aside the juror, perhaps the bare questioning his indifference may sometimes provoke a resentment; to prevent all ill consequences from which, the prisoner is still at liberty, if he pleases, peremptorily to set him aside."

I will also read the law which denies to "the accused, the aid of counsel, in making his defence in chief." When the jury is sworn, if it be a cause of any consequence, the indictment is usually opened, and the evidence marshalled, examined, and enforced by the counsel for the crown, or prosecution. But it is a settled rule at common law, that "no counsel shall be allowed a prisoner upon his trial, upon the general issue, in any capital crime, unless some point of law shall arise proper to be debated."

"The prisoner is not allowed counsel to plead his cause before any jury, in any felony, whether it is capital, within benefit of clergy, or a case of petty larceny. But in misdemeanors the prisoner or the defendant is allowed counsel as in civil actions." 4th Bla. Com. 355.

Now, this examination is begun and conducted by the commonwealth, and its results are such as are indicated here. Is there any such reason existing in this commonwealth at all? Does the convention assembled in the state of Kentucky for the purpose of instituting its fundamental law, and creating a legitimate and important principle by which the government shall be controlled, intend to assume the position that this right of challenge should, in no case, and to no extent, be given to the commonwealth? If it does sir, in my judgment, it lends itself in some degree, to granting to criminals immunity from punishment. They have immunity from punishment now; and this is one of the principal causes why they have such immunity—not the sole cause, but one of the operating causes, and it ought to be removed. Where is the place, except perhaps in Mississippi or Arkansas, where human life is held in so low estimate as it is in Kentucky? Who is there, when he has received an imaginary wrong, who hesitates to assault his adversary? Who is there that fails to strike when passion and vengeance urges him on? There ought to be some stay, some curb, some controlling principle; and the only stay—the only curb—is the seven years' punishment. Yes sir! Blackstone says truly, and with a deep knowledge of human nature, that it is not the sanguinary punishments of the law, but the certainty of punishment, that restrains the criminal, and prevents the perpetration of crime. This certainty does not exist in this country; and it is because it does not exist—it is because those who perpetrate crime know that they have nine chances in ten to escape, that they do commit it. But sir, if you let them know that when they perpetrate crime, punishment will inevitably follow its perpetration, the consequence will be, that crime will decrease. But until you read to them some such salutary lesson, it will go on increasing as it has increased, and there will be no protection—no security for human life. No true liberty can exist where the law does not give this protection. Under the present mode of administration of the criminal law, in the empanelling of the jury, the right of challenge, and the disposition of the judge to allow counsel to argue the law, and the principle which authorizes the jury to give the accused the benefit of a doubt, it amounts to a perfect immunity from punishment. Now, I say, and I say it with the deepest conviction of the importance of the duty resting upon me, and from my knowledge of the great estimation in which such reform is held by my constituency, that some such reform ought to be made.

I do not propose to incorporate in the constitution any specific provision for the regulation of the trial of criminal cases. I do not think it appropriate that the constitution should contain any such details. I merely propose to vest a general power in the legislature to regulate writs of error, and to regulate the subject of the right of challenge. I believe that both these are reforms necessary to the due administration of the law. As the gentleman from Daviess, (Mr. Triplett,) has said, there is no uniform administration of the criminal law of the state, and it results mainly, I believe, from the fact, that there is no revisory power to regulate and establish a code containing the great principles which should guide the action of the judiciary in the exercise of this branch of their duties.

Mr. MAYES. Will it be in order to offer a substitute for both propositions?

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order.

Mr. MAYES. Then I will have it read for the information of the house, and at the proper time will ask a vote upon it. The amendment was then read as follows:

"The legislature shall have the power to pass laws, giving to the commonwealth the right of peremptory challenge in criminal causes."

Mr. STEVENSON. I voted yesterday for striking out the 15th section. I confess I did it with great doubt as to the policy of the step. I was actuated in that vote by being unwilling to engraft into the constitution more details than were absolutely necessary. So far as I have examined the subject, this right of challenge has been incorporated in very few constitutions. I think it is the duty of the convention to avoid details in the constitution. It is not necessary, and it may have the effect, notwithstanding a good constitution may be formed, of increasing the strength which is already arrayed against it. It occurs to me that every detail we put into the constitution furnishes an additional weapon to our opponents. I therefore voted against the section. But I am very happy that the gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis,) has offered this proposition. I think it is a medium ground upon which all can unite. He proposed to leave to the legislature the right to carry out the proposition of the gentleman from Daviess, (Mr. Triplett,) and also to provide against this crying injustice, which has been so eloquently depicted to us in regard to the escape of criminals. If the people demand an appellate jurisdiction, they have but to let their will be known in the legislative halls, and their fiat will be carried out. I suppose that there are very few gentlemen on this floor who deny the propriety of having an appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases, and yet there is scarcely a gentleman who can say that the people demand it. I have seen several efforts made in the legislature to have granted to the court of appeals jurisdiction in criminal cases, and if you refer to the legislative records you will find that bills have been introduced from year to year to give to the court the jurisdiction, and they have been voted down. And those who argue that this is a crying evil that should be remedied, must nevertheless acknowledge that the people have not so received it.

I ask gentlemen then, with this fact before them, not to put into the constitution that which will be an element in the hands of its enemies which may give us more trouble than we anticipate. In regard to the right of challenge in criminal cases, the gentleman's amendment provides for it. And if this crying evil—which I do not so clearly perceive, although I have heard a great deal about it—does really exist, the legislature will have power to remove it, if the popular voice demand that it should be done.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. With my friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) I must beg leave to differ. The right to challenge in criminal trials is taken away from the commonwealth by the constitution, as I understand it; and unless the power is conferred upon the legislature, or incorporated into the constitution about to be made, the right will not exist. I ask gentlemen, who contend that the power under the present constitution may not be exercised by the legislature, to explain to me the meaning of this provision: "That the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate." Was the right of challenge extended to the crown? All admit that it was not; it was alone extended to the criminal. If then it could not be exercised by the crown, and that mode of trial is to be held sacred, the legislature in my judgment cannot extend it to the commonwealth. If that section of our constitution means any thing, I care not how loudly public sentiment and public justice may demand it, the legislature is disarmed of all power on that subject, unless we here provide for it. Does public sentiment and the due administration of the criminal laws of our country call for this provision? From my limited experience and observation, I would say that it was imperiously demanded in some form.

I would greatly prefer a provision securing to the commonwealth a right to at least one-fourth of the challenges. As this could not be done, as was shown by the striking out of the 15th section of the report, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis,) I am disposed to favor, as the best that is now offered. Upon what ground is it that gentlemen oppose the exercise of this power? Sympathy. And for whom? The murderer, the assassin, the felon, the violator of the public peace, the wanton invader of private rights. Such as these, Mr. President, their sympathies cluster around, with a devotion worthy of a better object. The blood of him who has fallen by the hands of the assassin, cries aloud to the violated laws of society, the laws of his country—not for vengeance, but for the due enforcement of the criminal law; and how is this responded to? Gentlemen tell me, let him be tried, let a jury be called. It comes, and what is the result? The whole array, if they are composed of the intelligent and most respectable citizens of the vicinage, are turned off. Who comes in their stead? Stool-pigeons, that hang around and about the court house! You know them,—can point them out. They are called into the box; the culprit quietly whispers into the ear of his counsel, "he will do, take him." The judge upon the bench, the prosecuting attorney, the friends of the murdered man know him. The commonwealth has no challenge, and he is thus firmly fixed on the jury; and one after another is brought to the book, until the panel is filled; the trial proceeds; the jury retire; and in a few minutes they return with their verdict. What is that verdict? "Not guilty!" The murderer is turned loose upon society, to repeat the hellish deed again. And for such as these the gentlemen have the tenderest sympathies. Give to the commonwealth the right of challenge, and their sense of justice is most awfully shocked! Mr. President, it is but the form of a trial, a mere mockery, a mere farce. I trust the good sense of the delegates will see that something is called for. The other branch of the amendment, I am equally sure should be adopted. My friend from Kenton, (Mr. Stevenson,) I think is mistaken, if he supposes the legislature will pass a law authorising writs of error in criminal cases. I had the honor of introducing a proposition of that kind in the legislature, and urged the propriety of such a law with all the force I could command; but it failed, not because it was not demanded or called for, but because it was introduced by a young lawyer, although advocated by nearly all the legal gentlemen in the legislature. I therefore hope the amendment will not prevail; strike out the word "shall" and insert "may," and you defeat the object all have in view. Uniformity of decision is all important in criminal trials. We should have some rules, some land-marks, to govern the profession in Kentucky. We have none. Allow writs of error, and in a few years, what is law in one circuit, will be law over the entire commonwealth. You have heard upon this floor—in truth, sir, it is a part of the history of this commonwealth—that in the lower part of this state, in one circuit, by the decision of one judge, a murderer had extended to him the benefit of clergy, and he went free. Shortly after, in another circuit, it was refused, and the murderer was hanged. Sir, this is not right; it should be remedied; and it can only be done by allowing writs of error. In the circuits in which I practice, I know different rules of decision obtain. A remedy is called for, it must be corrected, and it can only be done in this way.

Mr. DIXON. I am not particularly averse to the proposition of my friend from Bourbon, and with a little modification so as not to make it imperative, but leave it discretionary with the legislature, and I believe I am willing to give it my support. But I must confess that I think it unnecessary, because I believe that under the constitution of the commonwealth, as it now exists, the power does reside in the legislature, to regulate this matter of challenging jurors in criminal cases; and if I understand the proposition, it goes to that extent only.

In 1796, the legislature passed an act reducing the number of challenges on the part of the accused to twenty four in the case of treason, and to twenty in the case of murder or felony. The section of the act to which I allude is in these words: "No person arraigned for treason shall be admitted to a peremptory challenge above the number of twenty four, nor shall any person arraigned for murder or felony be admitted to a peremptory challenge above the number of twenty." This act, it is true, was passed under the old constitution; but I believe the provisions of the old constitution, so far as it regards the power of the legislature to pass the act, are similar to those contained in the existing constitution of the state. Now, it is very clear, I apprehend, that it was believed by the legislature that passed this act, that the power to pass it did exist, and that it was not violating any constitutional principle. Here is also a decision of the court of appeals, to which I will call the gentleman's attention; it is found in J. J. Marshall's reports, 3d vol. folio 138. It does not determine the question as to the power to pass the law, but it recognizes the existence and validity of the law, which amounts to the same thing.

I have said that, at the common law, the party accused had the right to challenge thirty five jurors, and it is clear that the statute which reduces it in the case of treason to twenty four, and of murder and other felonies to twenty, is in derogation of this right; still it was done, and has been for years past, acquiesced in as the law of the land. As the gentleman seems to think, however, that it is doubtful whether this power, without the section which he has offered, can, under the new constitution, be exercised by the legislature, I am willing to vote for his proposition if he will so change it as to leave some discretion with the legislature as to the propriety of exercising the power he would confer; not that I believe the legislature will ever exercise such a power, or at least to the extent of giving the state the right of peremptory challenge of jurors against the accused, because it would, to some extent, impair the right of trial by jury, which, of all things, should be held most sacred by the people of every free government. If the power which is proposed to be conferred is only to regulate the right of challenge, and not to deprive the accused of it, or to confer upon the state the power of challenging, which she does not now possess, there can certainly be no objection to it; and I suppose the legislature will construe it to mean, as its language purports, merely to regulate.

Mr. DAVIS. I merely desire to satisfy my friend from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon), that the legislature under the present constitution have not the power to act on the subject. That instrument provides that the right and mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred and inviolate. If a proposition was brought into the legislature to take from criminals the right of peremptory challenge, would it not strike at that principle of the constitution? That tests the question of power whether the legislature may act upon the subject of controlling the peremptory right of challenge or not. Such a law, if passed, would be null and void, and of no effect. In the case referred to by the gentleman, that question was not decided. It was the case of a prosecution against a man for keeping a gaming house. His counsel made the point, that he had the same right to challenge as the accused, for felony, and the question was, whether he should challenge six or twenty. The court of appeals decided that as a writ of error is given in all cases in Kentucky, in the prosecution of a misdemeanor, the right of challenge does not and cannot apply, and therefore he had the right to challenge.

but four and not twenty. Here is the power. I read from 3 J. J. Mar. 137:

"By the common law, the prisoner has a right, in all prosecutions for felony, to challenge thirty five jurors, peremptorily: but by the statute, 22d Hen. 8th c. 14. s. 57, made perpetual by that of 32 Hen. 8th, c. 3, this right of challenge was restricted to twenty, in all felonies except high treason; and by the 33d Hen. 8th, c. 23 s. 3, the same restrictions applied to high treason. But the statute of 1 and 2 Ph. and M. c. 10, revised the common law as to challenges, in cases for treason, and consequently, in those cases, extended the challenge to thirty five."

"By the 19th section of an act of the legislature of this state, (December 17, 1796,) entitled, 'an act to reduce into one the several acts concerning the examination and trial of criminals, grand and petit jurors, venuries, and for other purposes,' it is enacted that 'no person arraigned for treason shall be admitted to a peremptory challenge above the number of twenty four; nor shall any person arraigned for murder or felony, be admitted to a peremptory challenge, above the number of twenty.' 1 Dig. 438.

I admit that on the question of the right of challenge in cases of treason, there is a conflict between the law of England and the act of 1796, and it never has been decided in this country which law prevails. But whenever the question shall be made under that law, our courts will decide that the common law stands supreme in this case, and that persons charged with treason have the right to thirty five peremptory challenges, and that the act of 1796 in that respect is unconstitutional, because it does infringe upon the right of trial by jury, one of the most important essences of which, being this right of challenge. If the legislature may restrict the number of challenges to which the accused is entitled, to a dozen, it may restrict it wholly. I maintain that they have no right to legislate on the subject at all, because it would be in derogation of the ancient mode of trial by jury.

In explanation of the case to which I referred in Nicholas county, I will state, that it was a prosecution for murder. Eight or nine of the jury were for convicting the criminal for murder, but being out six, eight, or ten days, they were at length worried into a compromise, and induced to bring in a verdict of manslaughter, and consign him to the penitentiary rather than to the gallows. And such cases often occur in civil and criminal causes, both. There was scarcely ever a court held in any county in Kentucky, where juries were empaneled that such compromises did not take place. The other case put, was that of a man charged with robbery, and one of his accomplices being smuggled into the jury box, hung the jury. And now he stands indicted, and I trust, he will be convicted of perjury, in swearing that he had neither formed or expressed an opinion as to the question of the man's guilt at the time he was empaneled a juror. It is to sweep such men from the juries and to prevent them from polluting the pure streams of justice, and prostrating the criminal laws of the country, that I desire the adoption of such a principle as my amendment contemplates.

Mr BROWN. I find the amendment of the gentleman from Bourbon, too imperative in its direction to the legislature. I move to strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. STEVENSON. I rose for the same purpose. I had supposed the word "may" was used instead of "shall" and based my remarks on that supposition.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I desire that it shall be made imperative on the legislature to do what we require of them. If it is left discretionary with them, they may not do it. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. DIXON. If it is a fact, as the gentleman says, that under the old constitution, it would be unconstitutional to pass such a law, then I do not want now, to make it imperative on the legislature to pass a law under the new constitution which would be in violation of the great right of trial by jury. I prefer permitting the legislature on this question to think for themselves.

Mr. DAVIS. Was not the number of challenges allowed to the accused reduced by the act of 1796 from thirty-five to twenty.

Mr. DIXON. I think so.

Mr. DAVIS. If the legislature has the power to make this reduction, what is to prevent them from taking the whole right away?

Mr. DIXON. I think they have the power to take it away. There we differ. The gentleman believes that power does not exist, and he is for providing in the constitution that it shall. I believe that it does exist, and am opposed to giving the power if it does not. If it does not exist, I will never consent to give to any body, the right to act in derogation of the right of trial by jury. If the commonwealth already has that power, let it be exercised, when the occasion shall require it—I would not compel its exercise, when it was not required. I am willing to go this far, but I will never consent to do any thing in derogation of the right of trial by jury. I am willing that it shall be protected as it now is, but I am not willing to deprive the accused of any right the constitution now secures to them.

Mr. GEOLSON. I hope that the word "shall" will not be stricken out. If gentlemen desire to accomplish the object my friend from Henderson seems to have so much at heart, let them vote to put in the word "not" after "shall." The legislature had disregarded for the last fifty years a positive command that they should provide a manner in which suits should be brought against the commonwealth, and therefore gentlemen need not be afraid that they will be too anxious to obey this injunction. I never was more astonished at any thing than at the course of the gentleman from Henderson on this occasion. Why, I have known in my county, and there are gentlemen here cognizant of the facts, the most cold blooded, deliberate crimes to have been committed that ever disgraced human nature, and the perpetrators to escape by this diabolical plan, through the bribery of a juror, of hanging a jury. And the gentleman appeals to the mercy of this convention to allow such a state of things to continue. It is not proposed to array a single right of the accused, but only in some small degree to place the commonwealth on a footing of equality with him.

Mr. PROCTOR moved the previous question and it was ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may" by yeas and nays, on the call of Mr. W. C. MARSHALL, and it was agreed to, yeas 57 nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Mark E. Huston, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—57.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, Francis M. Bristow, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, James M. Lackey, Alex. K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, J. L. Waller, Robert N. Wickliffe, G. W. Williams, Silas Woodson—35.

The question was then taken on the substitute in lieu of the section as proposed by Mr. TRIPLETT, and it was adopted, the yeas and nays being called for by Mr. KAVANAUGH, yeas 83, nays 9, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—83.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, Beverly L. Clarke, Vincent S. Hay, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Taylor, Philip Triplett—9.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the amendment as a section of the article, and it was agreed to, the yeas and nays being called for by Mr. MITCHELL—yeas 85, nays 7, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, Jas. H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Wm. Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thos. J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, Thos. James, William Johnson, Geo. W. Johnston, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—85.

NAYS—James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore—7.

Mr. T. J. HOOD. I desire to supply what I conceive to be an omission in the fourth section of the report. The increase in the business of some of the districts, may render it necessary and desirable that the labors should be further divided, although, taking the whole twelve districts together, the judges may be able to attend very easily to the whole of the business. The amendment is designed to obviate this difficulty, and to allow the legislature to make such changes in the districts, whenever it shall be desirable. The amendment is as follows:

"The general assembly shall, after the first division of the state into twelve circuit court districts, at their session next preceding the regular election of circuit judges, thereafter so change and regulate said districts, as to equalize, as near as may be, the labors in the several districts then in being, having due regard to the number of appearances, and to population and territory."

Mr. HARDIN moved to strike out the word "shall," and insert the word "may" in lieu thereof.

This motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. Believing that the additional section proposed by the gentleman but reiterates a part of the fourth section of the article, and agreeing with him in the end he seeks to attain, I offer the following as a substitute for his amendment:

"SEC. —. The judicial districts and circuits of this state shall not be changed, save at the first session after every enumeration, unless when new districts may be established."

Mr. PRESTON'S amendment was then adopted in lieu of that offered by Mr. T. J. HOOD.

Mr. BROWN. This proposed amendment is but a reiteration, in my opinion, of what is already provided for in this report. I am opposed to putting any thing in this constitution that is not absolutely required, and shall, therefore, vote against this amendment. If the constitution is rejected by the people, it will certainly not be because there is too little provided for in it, but because there is too much.

The question being taken, the amendment was adopted as an additional section of the article.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. I offer the following as an additional section to the report of the committee:

"SEC. 16. In regulating the right of challenge of jurors in criminal cases, the general assembly shall never give the commonwealth more than one-fifth the number of peremptory challenges which may be allowed the accused."

I deem it unnecessary to add any thing to the full discussion which has already been had on this subject. The sense of the convention yesterday, however, seemed to be against giving the right of peremptory challenge to the commonwealth, in criminal cases; and to-day, by the section just adopted, as to regulating the right of challenge, and appeals, and writs of error in such cases, we have given the whole power over this subject to the legislature. I, myself, voted against the section, in all its stages.

By the old constitution, the legislature had the power to regulate appeals and writs of error in criminal cases, but they have never exercised it. This, to my mind, is strong evidence that it is not now demanded by public sentiment. If it is, the legislature could give the right of appeal under the new constitution, as well without the section we have adopted as with it.

The present constitution provides that the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred. The same provision is substantially contained in the constitution of the United States, and in most, if not all, the states in the union. This ancient mode of trial by jury, has been construed by our courts to mean, such right of trial by jury as existed at the time of the adoption of the constitution. At that time, the accused had the right of peremptory challenge, to the number of twenty; while the commonwealth had no right to challenge, peremptorily, a single juror. In my opinion, the legislature had no power under the old constitution to interfere with the right of challenge thus given. But on this point there seems to be some difference of opinion. Be this as it may, the legislature has never interfered with the right, and never would interfere with it, under a constitution having the provision on that subject contained in the present one. But, by the section just adopted, full power is given the legislature over the whole subject. That body may not only give the commonwealth the right of challenge, but may give it to the same extent with the accused. It may even take the right from the defendant altogether, and give it to the commonwealth to any extent. Why, sir, a day or two ago, we were throwing every kind of restriction around the legislature; now, we are giving them almost unlimited power as to the right of trial by jury—a right held sacred by the people. They have demanded no change on this subject—they did not expect it at the hands of the convention. In my section of country, the ancient mode of trial by jury was to be held sacred, and I greatly doubt if the question were directly made before the people, as to giving the commonwealth the right of challenge, without cause, whether it would be sanctioned.

The section which I have offered only provides that the legislature in regulating the right of challenging jurors in criminal cases shall never give the commonwealth more than one-fifth the number which may be given to the defendant. It is designed as some limit to the power of that body over the subject. This power may never be abused—it is probable it never will—but the ancient mode of trial by jury should be held sacred, and the power to infringe it ought not, in my opinion, to be placed in the hands of any body of men whatever; for this reason among others I voted against any change on this subject, and have now offered the section as a restriction upon the legislature, and am of opinion that it should pass. As this subject, however, has already been discussed at some length, any further remarks are deemed unnecessary.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel disposed to claim the indulgence of the house for a short time, while I endeavor to set myself right before my constituents, with reference to the vote I gave this morning. I rise with no expectation of making any impression on the convention, or of changing the deliberate vote which has been given, but simply to state the reasons, very briefly, which influenced me in pursuing the course that I did. I have always regarded the ancient mode of trial by jury as a tower of strength to the citizen, and I have always looked on it as a feature in our judicial system which should be preserved inviolate. I should approach it with great apprehension of doing mischief, even if I were to abstract a single brick or stone from the massive pile, and should be apprehensive that to disturb it in the least, would threaten the whole structure.

This convention is called to frame a constitution. Future conventions may be called, and will look to the action of this convention as sanctioning their action. If we now commence the work of innovation, I am at a loss to see to what extent in future times it may be carried. It is urged that the necessities of the country require it; that crime goes unwhipt of justice, and hence some modification of this ancient system is necessary. Some future convention, influenced by the same motive, may carry the matter still further; it may be urged as necessary not only to regulate the right of challenge but they may go further and say that a concurrence of the peers of the accused shall not be necessary for his conviction. They may say that a majority of the jury shall be sufficient to authorize conviction and death. When innovation once commences we know not at what point it will stop. We are told that to regulate the right of challenge is perhaps not to impugn the ancient trial by jury. It seems to me to attack it in a vital point, if the accused has not the right of peremptory challenge: if that right is abridged, then the ancient right of trial does not remain inviolate. When we come to that portion of the old constitution which declares that the ancient mode of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, there will have to be an alteration. We cannot make the same declaration. We have placed within the grasp of the legislature a power very materially to modify the ancient trial by jury. We have given them a discretion which in my judgment may be more dangerous than the proposition contained in the report. There they were limited to one-fourth. Here there is no limit. They may extend a right of peremptory challenge to the commonwealth equal to that given to the accused; nay, they may go further and give the commonwealth the right to challenge more than the accused. This is extending discretion much beyond what the original proposition contemplated. The reasons which have been assigned for doing this—for obliterating this ancient land-mark—have not been satisfactory to my mind. We have been told that it is necessary for the accomplishment of the ends of justice.

My observation has taught me that justice is fully executed in Kentucky. There is perhaps an exception as to one class of cases, that of homicide. There has not been meted out the punishment which in the minds of just men is deemed to be due to that offence. Does this originate in any defect in our judicial system? Does it not rather originate in public opinion, and is it not subject to the control of that all powerful influence? The same system prevails here now which prevailed in England when her tribunals were drenched in blood, when the temple of justice was converted into shambles, and the ermine foully stained with the blood of innocence. The same provision, in this respect, obtained there as here; the same right on the part of the accused, when that right could not be exercised on the part of the government.

I think this exemption from punishment originates in public sentiment, and cannot be controlled by legislative enactment, which rises above the law itself. The citizen of this commonwealth seems to reserve for himself the privilege of righting the "wrong where'er 'tis given," he metes out, in dispensing justice, that measure to others which he claims for himself. If the same want of justice in the execution of the laws were observable throughout the whole series of criminal offences, that argument might be deduced to show the insufficiency of the system. But when it is confessedly confined to one description of crime, we must look for the evil—if there be an evil—in the force of public opinion, acting on and modifying the laws of the country and regulating their execution.

We have heard it read here to day, that this right of peremptory challenge originated in that great principle in favor of human life—which should distinguish every system of jurisprudence—that it was given to the accused in tenderness—in favorem vite. Will you give it to the commonwealth in favorem mortis, to favor execution, to favor condign punishment? The individual who comes into a court of justice charged with crime, comes with the stamp of suspicion upon him; he is prima facie guilty, notwithstanding the maxim of the law, that every man shall be deemed innocent 'till his guilt is proved. He has undergone an examination in the county, or the charge has been passed upon by a grand jury, and he stands as one with the impress of guilt upon him. Prima facie he is guilty. Give him then the privilege of some share in selecting his jury, the poor privilege in this struggle for life, of acting without a reason—let him not go to the scaffold under the conviction that he has been sent thither by his enemy—let not this cloud darken his dying hour; but let not the commonwealth enjoy the same privilege; for she should never act without a reason; let not the commonwealth stultify her own citizens, and not without a sufficient reason say, "Sir, you are unworthy to serve upon a jury—you bear on your face the stamp of degradation—you have achieved for yourself a character that excludes you from a service of this kind."

It does seem to me that by some provision of law, the matter can be regulated without taking away this ancient land mark. Let the sheriff be required, in summoning jurors, to exclude from the panel those hanging about the courts of justice; let those who thrust themselves in the way, in order to be placed on the jury, be excluded. Let proof of such conduct be good cause for rejection; but never let the commonwealth, actuated by a spirit of vengeance, and lest she should be foiled of her prey, without reason, exclude her citizens, and declare them unworthy of sitting on the jury. I am opposed to the whole matter. I am opposed to the introduction of such a provision into the constitution; but if we must have it, let us have the restriction of my friend from Anderson.

Mr. GHOLSON moved the previous question and the main question was ordered.

The yeas and nays were demanded on the amendment, and being taken they were—yeas 30, nays 55.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William Chennault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, William Cowper, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas James, George W. Kavanough, Charles C. Kelly, Willis B. Machen, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Rogers, John W. Stevenson, William R. Thompson, Andrew S. White, Chas. A. Wickliffe—30.

<sup>1</sup>NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, Jas. H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Mark E. Huston, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Geo. W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, William Preston, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

COUNTY COURTS.

The convention continued the consideration of the report of the joint committee of thirty, the article concerning county courts being the next in order.

Mr. MERIWETHER sent to the secretary's desk to be read, the following substitute for the entire article, which he intended, when the proper time came to offer:

ARTICLE —.

"SEC. 1. There shall be established in each county now, or which may hereafter be erected in this commonwealth, a county court, to consist of a presiding judge, and the several justices of the peace of the county.

"SEC. 2. The presiding judge shall be elected by the qualified voters of each county, for the term of four years, and until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified, and shall, from time to time, receive for his services such compensation as may be fixed by law, to be paid by fees, or out of the county revenue.

"SEC. 3. No person shall be eligible to the office of presiding judge of the county court, unless he be a citizen of the United States, over twenty one years of age, and a resident in the county in which he shall be elected, one year next preceding his election.

"SEC. 4. The presiding judges of the county courts shall be sole probate judges for their respective counties, with testamentary and such other jurisdiction as may, from time to time, be given by law.

"SEC. 5. The jurisdiction of the county court shall be regulated by law; and, until changed, shall be the same now vested in the county courts of this state, except as herein provided.

"SEC. 6. The several counties in this state shall be laid off into districts of convenient size, as the general assembly may, from time to time, direct. Two justices of the peace, and one constable, shall be elected in each district by the qualified voters therein. The jurisdiction of said officers shall be co-extensive with the county. Justices of the peace shall be elected for the term of four years, and constables for the term of two years; they shall be citizens of the United States, twenty one years of age, and shall have resided six months in the district in which they may be elected, next preceding their election.

"SEC. 7. Presiding judges of the county court, and justices of the peace, shall be conservators of the peace, and shall be commissioned by the governor. County and district officers shall vacate their offices by removal from the district or county in which they shall be appointed. The legislature shall provide, by law, for the mode and manner of conducting and making due returns of all elections of presiding judges of the county court, justices of the peace, and constables, and for determining contested elections, and also provide the mode of filling vacancies in these offices.

"SEC. 8. Presiding judges of the county courts, justices of the peace, and constables, shall be subject to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to appeal to the court of appeals; and, upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant."

The first section was then read, as follows:

"SEC. 1. There shall be established in each county now, or which may hereafter be erected within this commonwealth, a county court, to consist of a presiding judge and two associate judges, any two of whom shall constitute a court for the transaction of business."

Mr. LISLE. I desire to say only a few words on this county court system, as recommended by the committee, and also on the proposition of the gentleman from Jefferson. This is an important court, and the subject is one, in my opinion, that is deserving of a great deal of consideration. I know the difficulty under which a man labors, when he attempts to resist a proposition which is presented to the house in the attitude and under the circumstances as the one now before it. The proposition of the county court committee was referred to the committee of thirty, and they have re-adopted the plan as recommended by the original committee, with some slight modifications. In the committee of thirty, I offered a substitute, which—if I knew exactly when to offer—I would present again. Now, I hold it to be a correct principle, that no important change should be made in the fundamental law of Kentucky, unless there was a strong reason to suppose it would be for the benefit of the people. I suppose this proposition will not be denied by any man. From the examination I have given the subject, I entertain the opinion that we shall be no better off if we accept the plan presented, than we should be by adopting a system of laying off the several counties into districts, and giving the people the right to elect their magistrates to hold court. I know there is a great deal of objection to the county court system; and, I am aware it has been attacked all over the commonwealth; but the complaint has not been greater against the county.

court than the court of appeals and the circuit court. You propose to remedy the defects in the court of appeals and the circuit court, by electing the judges for a limited time. Why not, then, carry out the principle in respect to the county court? By the first section of this bill, you propose to impose, permanently and irrevocably, upon the commonwealth, the burden of supporting three hundred additional salaried officers. Besides that, you have added a judge to your appellate court. I know not how it may be with other gentlemen, but I came not here to add to the expenses of the government, unless circumstances rendered it imperatively necessary. Now, what reason have we to suppose, that by the proposed new system, recommended by the committee, men of better standing and qualifications will be obtained, than by laying off the counties into districts, and electing magistrates to hold court, as heretofore?

You propose, in the report of the committee, that the salaries shall be paid as provided for by law. I ask gentlemen who advocate this plan, whether there is to be a general law, operating alike on all these judges and the associate judges throughout the state? Are their salaries to be uniform? Is there to be a large salary allowed the judges in all the large counties, as in Jefferson and Fayette? or are the salaries to be fixed and graded according to the size of the county? It is probable that the legislature will provide for the payment of the salaries out of the county levies. How is that to be regulated? I understand that one of the principal objects in calling this convention, is to cut off the excessive legislation that has existed in this commonwealth for many years past. But here you propose to organize the county court in such a manner as must necessarily produce much legislation. Does any gentleman here pretend to say that these judges are to be paid large salaries? They will not venture to say that. Gentlemen talk about procuring the best men in the state. Now, what motive, what reason is held out, to show that such men are to be had? I have heard it said the salary of each will not amount to more than thirty, forty, or fifty dollars. And suppose you pay a man fifty dollars—and there is no magistrate whose fees would not amount to more than that sum—then, as there will be three hundred officers employed, the aggregate amount will be fifteen thousand dollars. Suppose the salary of each to amount to one hundred dollars, then there would be an expense incurred to the state of thirty thousand dollars—a larger sum than is paid to the whole of the circuit judges.

Another objection I have to the organization of the court, as proposed by the committee, is, that it is to be held by a judge and two associates. They also propose that the magistrates shall convene, and assist in laying the county levy. Now, this court not only possesses judicial, but legislative functions. It is to have the power of taxation, which is one of the highest attributes of sovereignty. I am opposed, if it can be avoided, confiding this power to so few hands. But I ask gentlemen, if the magistrates are to be consulted when debts are contracted for which the county is bound? No. These justices of the peace are not to be consulted when the debts are contracted, but they are to be called upon only when you lay a levy and make an appropriation to pay the debt. Now, I ask if the object that the gentlemen have in view is accomplished by it? Suppose the judge and his two associates contract debts, one on account of building a bridge, another for improving a road, and another in relation to the clerk's office, the county is bound to pay them. The justices are only to come in and levy the money. I want the county represented when the debt is contracted. I know there is a strong objection to the county courts. It will be urged they have been universally repudiated. I admit they have been regarded as objectionable. I know it is said a change was required. What was it? The people required that the mode of appointing the magistrates should be changed, and that they should be elected for a limited term; and, by the plan I propose, these two changes will be effected.

But there is another objection I have to this article. And it is with great reluctance and regret I shall oppose the plan recommended by the committee. Now, these three judges will be selected from about the cities and towns, and in all probability with a view to the influence they can bring to bear upon certain improvements. And if so, your county improvements will be partial, and that portion of a county thinly populated will be imposed upon. The people will be taxed by these men, for the purpose of making improvements in the more densely populated parts of the county. Your circuit judges, senators, and members of congress, are elected from the districts, and your members of the legislature from the different counties. And why is that? In order that every part of the state may be represented. Is it not important that this principle should be carried out in the county court system? I do not propose to fix it permanently in the constitution, but that these justices of the peace shall hold the court until otherwise directed by law. I want to give the legislature the power to remedy it, if it should be found not to operate well. I do not wish every thing fixed and tied up. We have been told that this court is to be a very important one; and that a large amount of the business now done in the circuit court will ultimately be transferred to it. If this be done, it will require judges who are well qualified, to whom good salaries will have to be paid, and thus our expenses will be increased, to which I am opposed.

I will thank the secretary to read my substitute, for the information of the convention.

The SECRETARY read the following substitute for the report of the committee.

"ARTICLE —.

"SEC. 1. There shall be established in each county which now is, or may hereafter be erected within this commonwealth, a county court, which shall consist of justices of the peace, until otherwise directed by law.

"SEC. 2. The several counties in this state shall be laid off into districts of convenient size, as the general assembly may, from time to time, direct. Justices of the peace shall be elected in each district, by the qualified voters therein, for the term of four years, whose jurisdiction shall be co-extensive with the county.

"SEC. 3. Justices of the peace shall be conservators of the peace. They shall be commissioned by the governor. The legislature shall provide, by law, the mode and manner of conducting and making due returns of all elections of justices of the peace, and for determining contested elections, and for filling vacancies in their offices."

"SEC. 4. The jurisdiction of the county court, and of justices of the peace, shall be regulated by law, and until changed, shall remain the same that it now is."

"SEC. 5. Justices of the peace shall be subject to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to an appeal to the court of appeals, and upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant."

MR. BRISTOW. I am gratified that gentlemen have presented what they consider a complete system for the county courts. This is the best way to furnish the whole plan, and if the delegates prefer one to the other, they can have a view of the whole. I cannot say that I am particularly wedded to the plan recommended by the committee. In the committee we compared our views. Some were in favor of one plan, and some of another. But we came to the conclusion that the best we could adopt, was the one we reported, and which has been but slightly modified by the committee of thirty. In the first place, we thought a county court should be more permanent than it would be if left to the action of the legislature. We therefore made a constitutional provision for the county court as necessary in every government.

I think it is a serious objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Green, (Mr. Lisle,) that he leaves it to the legislature to repeal and alter when they please. There should be some county tribunal to discharge the duties required of them by the county. In addition, it will be required of them to try many little matters between individuals, such as county courts have been in the habit of trying. But their important duty is, to attend to county business, and we concluded to present the simple machinery of three individuals, elected by the county. Why not select one only? We thought the responsibility too great. All counties are interested in the duties to be discharged, and indeed we thought the taxing power should not be confined to one. We thought three would do it, and less than three we thought could not do it, and more than that number we thought would be too expensive. He says the salaries of three judges for each county would amount to $15,000. I suppose the magistrates would not be less than twelve in each county, according to his plan. They would cost $60,000 then by the same rule. The gentleman seems to suppose the magistrates can do the business without pay. If the county think the magistrates can do the business, we allow them to do it, and if the gentleman thinks there is something about the magistrates which prepares them above all others for the business, the people have the right to choose them.

It seems to me my friend lost some of the modesty which I gave him credit for when he published to the world that three hundred salaried officers were to be made at once by this report. We put no salary in the report. We simply allow the county to select individuals to do the duty. His system allows the county to select, and if there are more, of course the expense will be more. The gentleman need not tell us that magistrates, because they are magistrates, will discharge the duties for nothing. I suppose the court will require pay; but if you can find persons who will discharge the duties better without pay, choose them. The gentleman thinks three not enough to lay the levy and taxes. Three men can control the county courts generally, and we supposed it best to throw the business on individuals selected to discharge the duties. They will be more prompt, and they are the men to be complained of. We give them no scape-goats to carry off their sins. Let them be accountable for the county court.

The gentleman says the magistrates can do the business. I have a high respect for the county court, such as I propose, but not for such a one as he proposes. And it grows out of the nature of things. Men will not prepare themselves for the duties, unless they have a motive. If there is any one tribunal unpopular it is the county court, and gentlemen need not try to hide behind the mode of appointment to account for this. It is a court of individuals got up in the county, and in some cases, wholly unqualified to discharge the duties. There are neighborhoods where there are no individuals qualified to be a judge of any sort. They get no compensation, they have no motive, and it is difficult to get them to hold a court—you must hunt them down through the court yard to get them to do it. When you get them, sometimes they are excellent men and do well, but frequently they do not. I know much can be said on this subject; and as we are in the habit of having what we say put in books, I will not make remarks about particular cases. Every gentleman knows that the court is unwieldy. This court is to lay taxes it is said; and we must have many to do that. Are we ready to appoint men to tax us whom we do not elect? The district cannot be composed of the same number of individuals. Territory must control districts, and what follows? In some districts there will be twenty men, and in some five hundred. Should there be that difference between representation and taxation? Is it not right that all should have something to do in selecting the men who are to tax them? The gentleman says we elect judges by districts. We elect them as judges, not to lay taxes. Again, he says we elect representatives by counties, and not by the general vote of the state. There is a necessity for this. We are not acquainted with individuals all over the state, while we are acquainted in the county and can select for it. But, says the gentleman, they will all be confined to one spot. Let him remedy that by saying that no two shall be chosen from the same district. These judges elected by counties will be superior to some of the men in districts, and you need to get the best men if you can. I would remark here, that any man who is twenty one years of age, and has the requisite qualifications, may be elected. This is the only tribunal which is stripped of lawyers. This court then may be composed of just such men as I would select of all others—men of sound minds and high reputation. Whether they ever saw a novel would be of little importance. It is true, if the court is to assume the dignity which some suppose, a different class of men may be required; but in my opinion, the best selection now would be the men that I have named. I prefer that the county should elect three men belonging to the county. My friend says that no reasons are given for this change. I suppose the county court will be changed entirely. The selection of magistrates will be changed. Having been heretofore self-constituted, they will, I presume, be elected by districts. Let the old magistrates go on and hold courts; the people will elect them if they choose. We only change the mode of appointing, and we say three shall discharge all the duties, believing they will do so better than a greater number. We have supposed it was the cheapest system that could be adopted. Surely we would not impose duties on the judges without compensation. In Tennessee they get a per diem allowance for holding the court, and I presume that is what the legislature will do here. If this is allowed, I know it will amount to a great deal; but surely in any county where there are duties to be performed, the people will be willing to pay them. The gentleman might as well say that because the fees of the justices of the peace amount to fifty dollars a year; therefore, we are creating an immense number of salaried officers. I know not how they will be paid. We contemplate that the presiding judge will discharge many duties—for instance, such as that of the probate judge, and such as have been discharged by the commissioners, and many others for which the legislature may allow him fees. It was our duty only to provide for a good court. As to the mode of payment, and as to jurisdiction, we left that to the legislature, presuming it will be the same as that which the county court now exercises. My friend thinks the whole matter should be left to the legislature. If so, we had better only say there shall be such a court, and leave the legislature to form it.

My objections to the magistrates holding the court have been given. First, they will not be qualified; second, it is not proper that representation and taxation shall be unequal. If three men are not enough, take more; if too many, select fewer. If Kentucky were divided into towns, then the gentleman's plan might be proper and right, but we make our appropriations and levies by counties, and it is a common burden on the county. Then I hold that any one county shall elect the men to do this, because it will be convenient for them to do it.

I have said all I wished to say. I hope not much time will be spent on this subject, though it is a matter which requires all the light we have. It will be seen that we provide that, if the legislature think it will be right and proper, that the magistrates should come together, they may do it. The gentleman complains that the magistrates are not allowed to come together when the debts are contracted. The levy is made and the amount assessed in the same court. That being the case, they will be present and agree on the debts they will pay, and the amount which shall be levied on the towns.

Mr. PROCTOR offered the following amendment, viz:

"Provided, That the general assembly shall have power, whenever it shall be deemed expedient, to abolish the offices of the associate judges, and in that case, the presiding judge shall be vested with the same power and jurisdiction now given to the three judges."

Mr. President, I have offered this amendment, believing that it will compromise the different interests which divide this convention. While I am in favor of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Jefferson, and prefer one judge to three, still sir, I am utterly opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Green, and prefer even the report of the committee. But it does seem to me, Mr. President, that mine is a proposition upon which all gentlemen may unite, for I propose to leave to the legislature, the question whether there shall be one or three judges in each county, and by doing this sir, you give to the people of each county the power of instructing their representatives, as to whether they will have one or three judges, and you also leave to the people the question of deciding whether the magistrates elected in the county shall compose and constitute a part of the court or not. For my part, I have no objections to the justices of the peace elected in each county, sitting and holding court in connection with the presiding judge, when laying the county levy and making changes in the public roads, and appropriations of money for county purposes, but I am utterly opposed to giving to these justices the power of sitting and determining upon appeals and questions of law. Sir, I differ with my friend from Green, when he says that the decision of these courts and their manner of administering the law has not been complained of by the people. That gentleman seems to think that the mode of appointment of these officers alone was complained of by the people. My experience and my judgment teach me sir, that if there was any system of our government which was odious to the people of Kentucky, and which called for redress at the hands of this convention, it is the county court system of the state. It is not my intention, Mr. President, to enter into an investigation of the errors and corruptions of this system; they are familiar to the people and known to all. But one great reason, Mr. President, which I have against creating a court, to be composed of all the justices of the peace to be elected in each county, and of investing that court with the power of trying appeals, and other questions of law, is, that under such a system, there would be no uniformity of decision, and no certainty of obtaining justice. As the court would be composed of a large number of individuals, you would divide the responsibility of their decisions among the different members of the court, and whenever you divide responsibility, there will not be that correct and deliberate consideration given to any question that there would be if all the responsibility of a decision were thrown on one man; neither will there be that uniformity of decision which is so necessary to the equal administration of justice, and the protection of the rights of all.

Why sir, in the county which I represent, in a contest before a justice of the peace, where the plaintiff claimed five pounds in his warrant, the justice of the peace rendered judgment against the defendant for a less sum than 25 shillings. From this judgment the defendant appealed to the county court. Upon the trial of the appeal, the plaintiff moved the court to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction in the court to try the cause, but the court overruled the motion, and tried the cause. At a subsequent term of the court an appeal was taken in a case precisely similar, and another court, composed of different members, decided that the defendant was not entitled to an appeal where the judgment against him was less than 25 shillings, and in my judgment they decided correctly. In this case they dismissed the appeal for want of jurisdiction.

Now sir, it is to guard against this instability and uncertainty of decision that I will oppose the revival of that old system. Under that system our county courts became a bye-word and a reproach,—they were composed of men, many of whom were incompetent to discharge the duties of their office, and to seek justice before such a tribunal is about as uncertain as a game of chance.

But I repeat, I do not intend to enter into an elaborate description of the errors of this system, as it has heretofore existed in Kentucky; but I will say that if there is any one thing that has been loudly called for by the people of Kentucky, it is that the present county court system shall be abolished.

I will here remark sir, that while I am satisfied with the substitute as offered by the gentleman from Jefferson, I prefer that we should have but one judge to do all the probate business of the county and to try appeals; and when the levy is to be laid and appropriations to be made that the justices of the county shall sit with him. Yet sir, I have offered my proposition, leaving it to the people of each county to decide whether they will have a court composed of one or three judges. By this plan the whole of the subject will be left in the hands of the people; and it seems to me that this is a compromise ground, upon which all parties and all interests in this house can unite. But if my amendment should not prevail, I will support the proposition of the gentleman from Jefferson.

The convention then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. G. W. BRUSH.

DAY OF THANKSGIVING.

Mr. MAYES. Mr. President, to-morrow is the day recommended by the executive of the state to be set apart as a day of thanksgiving and prayer; and to test the sense of the house whether we shall observe that day, I offer the following resolution:

“Resolved, That when this convention shall adjourn this day, it will adjourn until the 30th inst.”

The yeas and nays were called for, and being taken, were—yeas 60, nays 23.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McNery, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Jas. Rudd, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—60.

NAYS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Cud, James Dudley, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, James M. Lackey, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Hugh Newell, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, Howard Todd, Squire Turner—23.

So the resolution was adopted.

APPELLATE JUDGES.

Mr. PRICE, in accordance with notice which he gave on Monday last, moved a reconsideration of the vote adopting the fourth section of the article on the court of appeals, which fixes the number of judges of the appellate court at four. On that motion he called for the yeas and nays, and being taken they were—yeas 41, nays 47.

At a subsequent part of the day Messrs. CHENAULT and KELLY obtained permission to record their votes in the affirmative, and Messrs. JAMES and MITCHELL in the negative, and the result was then, yeas 43, nays 49.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Jas. P. Hamilton, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, John Wheeler—43.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Ap-

person, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Mark E. Huston, Thomas James, George W. Johnston, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—49.

So the convention refused to reconsider.

BASIS OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. WOODSON moved to take up for consideration a resolution offered by him on Friday last, and on his motion laid upon the table, on the subject of basis of representation.

The motion was not agreed to.

COUNTY COURTS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the article in relation to county courts.

At the adjournment yesterday the first section was under consideration, to which Mr. PROCTOR had offered an amendment.

Mr. MERIWETHER sent up a series of amendments which he desired, at the proper time, to offer; the first of which he submitted as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Lewis.

A brief conversation in relation to this amendment ensued between Messrs. MERIWETHER, CHAMBERS, W. C. MARSHALL, BRISTOW, and others.

Mr. TURNER. I am in favor of having the county court formed by the constitution. The idea of having a court that is partly constitutional and partly legislative, I am opposed to. If you give to the legislature the power to add to, and diminish the number of judges at pleasure, there will be no stability—they will be constantly pulling down and building up. I have an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time, and which I think is preferable to either of the propositions before the convention. It seems to me it will be a proper compromise between the extremes of all parties upon this matter. I am not in favor of magistrates holding court altogether, according to the plan suggested by the gentleman from Green, (Mr. Lisle)—nor am I in favor of the plans suggested by the gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor) nor that of the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Meriwether.) I am in favor of having the court held by one judge at all times, except when there are county debts to be contracted, when there are expenditures to be authorized, and when the county levy is to be laid; then I want the magistrates of the county to come in, and constitute a part of the court. It has been said that the magistrates are not the representatives of the county at large, for they are to be elected by districts, and some of the districts may be smaller than others. It strikes me that the magistrates when elected under the plan proposed to be adopted in the constitution, will be the representatives of the county, in like manner as are the representatives in the legislature; and coming from different parts of the county, the court, when assembled, will be acquainted with the wants of the whole county. They will be well informed upon all subjects demanding their attention as legislators for the county; and will not represent sectional interests merely, as would be the case if you constitute this court with but three permanent judges. The body of the magistracy thus elected by districts, will better represent the wishes of the people, than the old self-constituted court, which we are about to dispense with. In regard to the judicial business of the county, it appears to me that it can be done as well by one judge, as the business of the circuit court can; for the power that is given to the judge of the county court is not so extensive as that which the judge of the circuit court exercises. The county court does not adjudicate upon questions affecting life and liberty, and its decisions are not final. You can appeal from its decisions to the circuit court, or to the court of appeals. If you extend the number of judges to three, unless you give them such amount of salary as the people would be unwilling to pay, you will not be able to procure three men who will take the trouble to qualify themselves in all those matters which appertain to that court, and which require a good deal of study and reflection.

I practiced a little while under the assistant judge system, where there was one principal judge, learned in the law, who received a competent salary; and two assistant judges, who received two dollars per day each for their services. I recollect the assistant judges were in the habit of coming in and directing the clerk to enter their names as being present so as to entitle them to receive their two dollars; in five minutes afterwards they were gone. They knew they were of no service. The legislature found they were only an expense, and removed them. I am satisfied that one judge, with the assistance of the magistrates, as occasion may require, will do the business much better than three permanent judges. I shall therefore, if the pending amendment should fail, offer my proposition to strike out the words "two assistant judges," and add in substance these words: "which court shall be holden by a presiding judge, except at the term at which the county levy shall be laid and county debts contracted; at which term in each year, the county magistrates shall be assistant judges of the court, and magistrates, together with the presiding judge, shall be required to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business." If necessary, there might be two such terms holden in each year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the convention proceeds to take a vote upon the proposition to amend, I will be extremely glad if gentlemen will reflect upon the consequences which are to flow from striking out the three judges and substituting one. In the fifth section of the report, it will be found that "the jurisdiction of the county court shall be regulated by law, and until changed shall be the same now vested in the county courts of this state."

I hope gentlemen will reflect what an immense power the county court, as now organized in this commonwealth, possesses. Suppose it be desired to establish a road through my land—I obtain a writ of ad quod damnum, and the jury give me $1200 for the injury I sustain by the location of the road across my farm. The county court, with the jurisdiction they now possess, either consent that I shall have the $1200 or not. It is a matter within their discretion; and if they do not choose to pay me the damages that have been assessed by the jury, they have only to issue another writ of ad quod damnum, and have the damages again assessed by another jury; and so on until they come down to what they consider the proper sum to be paid. If there is any one thing more than another, that touches the interests of the people, it is the right to take private property for public use; and, sir, never—never would I trust a power of that sort to any one man. What else, sir. The county court in my county, before they had authority given to them by the legislature of the state, to take stock in the Lexington and Maysville turnpike road, had as much right to go into partnership with a banker and raise funds by a county levy, and place them in the hands of the banker for the purpose of accumulation by illegal interest, as they had to take stock in that road. But the act was sanctified—if I may use the term—by subsequent legislation. Suppose you have a court house to build, or a bridge to construct; it is in the discretion of the court, whether these works shall be authorized or not. Just look at it. The very safety of the country requires that these powers should not be delegated to one man; that one man should not be allowed to run the county in debt, ad libitum. But these magistrates, the gentleman says, are to come in from all parts of the country, and form a court, to do what? Why, just to examine the accounts—to ascertain to what extent this one man power has run the county in debt—and to say that the county levy shall be so much—for so much is required on account of this debt. Thank God, the levy cannot go beyond $1 50.

Now I ask if we are going to trust this immense power to one man? What security is there, that the country will not be so involved, as to be unable to discharge her obligations? We are told that the magistrates will come in and assist in laying the county levy. There is no security in that. The evil has been done—the obligations have been incurred—the honor of the county is at stake, and the debts must be paid. What else? I know the old county court has been a most objectionable system—a perfect eyesore. I know it has done more to bring about the meeting of this convention than any other one thing. The court has been, like the fabled bird, that is said to reproduce itself. A friend near me remarks, that the reproduction generally have longer ears than the original stock have.

Now the danger is this. They want to boil the county court down, in some sort of conventional cauldron, and have the court consist of but one man. God forbid! It is not always the case, with the county court, that in a multitude of counsellors there is wisdom, but let us cling to the old maxim still.

I can assure gentlemen of one thing, that if you have but one judge, you cannot get a man of talents and acquirements, you cannot get a man who will fill the bench as it ought to be filled—you cannot get a man to take upon himself the responsible duties that will be imposed upon him—you will find few men, willing to undertake the office, who are qualified to discharge the duties. I am opposed to striking out three, and making it incumbent on the magistrates, that they shall assist, at certain terms of the court. I want three judges. Suppose now, in my city, that they elect this one judge, and clothe him with all this power—there has been a good deal said about the influence of cities, stretching out like Briaricus, their hundred hands to clutch all the power in the state—suppose the election of one judge be authorized as contemplated by this report, he can be triumphantly elected by the city, and he will most assuredly subserve the interests of those who elected him. But if there be three judges to be elected, no such operation can take place; and you will bring to the discharge of these important duties, three men in whose actions the people will have more confidence than they would in the action of a single man. I hope and trust, that gentlemen will put on their thinking caps, and reflect upon this subject—and I think they will come to the same conclusion at which I have arrived.

Mr. MERIWETHER. As the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor) has been modified, so as to suit the views—as I understand—of the honorable Chairman of the committee, by leaving it to the legislature to determine whether there shall be assistant judges or not, I will withdraw the amendment I offered. But I will remark to my friend, that there is another amendment proposed that will, perhaps, obviate his objections. The legislature must convene, before this court can go into operation; and they may provide that whenever any indebtedness is to be created on the part of the county, the magistrates shall come in and act as a portion of the court.

My friend from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) seems to think, that if but one Judge is to constitute this court, too much power would be placed in his hands. The power now possessed by the court, is either to confirm or set aside the finding of the jury, and it is easy to provide, that in cases where the property of an individual is concerned, a concurrence of a majority of the magistrates shall be required. I think this will obviate the objection of the gentleman.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire, when it shall be in order, to offer the substitute that was proposed by the gentleman from Green, (Mr. Lisle.) It takes the old county court system, with the exception of the manner in which that court was constituted.

I have no recollection, during the whole canvass of last summer, or during the agitation of the convention question throughout the state, of having heard any complaint made as to the number of judges of the county court; nor any complaints in regard to the county court at all, save and except, as to the manner of appointment of the judges of that court—the self-constituting and self-making power they possessed—and the further fact that the senior magistrate receives the office of sheriff, by virtue of his seniority.

Some of the amendments propose to constitute one judge for this court, and some three. There will be a very radical change made in the whole system, and as we are making a number of very radical changes, I apprehend it will be safer for us to consider whether or not, we are called upon by our constituents to make any change in relation to that court, save the change proposed by the gentleman from Green, which I desire shall be substituted.

Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON. I understand that to be a substitute for the whole report; and it will be in order first to perfect the report. I have a plan for constituting this county court, which I think will meet the views of a majority of the members of this house, and it corresponds to some extent, with that proposed by the gentleman from Green (Mr. Lisle). I will offer my substitute, and ask the yeas and nays upon it.

Strike out all that part of the section after the word "judge," in the third line, and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"and the justices of the peace in commission in each county. The presiding judge and two justices of the peace, or any three of the justices of the peace, shall constitute a court for the transaction of business, except at the court of claims, when the presiding judge and a majority of the justices shall be required to constitute the court."

Mr. HARGIS. When this subject was under consideration in the committee of thirty, I understood that this proposition was offered, together with a good many of similar nature. I do not believe we could establish a better principle than that agreed upon by the committee. I should be opposed to the county court being held by one judge. It is a court that is important to the interests of the people. They are all interested in the proper discharge of the duties devolving upon that court, and the rights of the people, it seems to me, will be better represented by having the court composed of three judges, than if you have but one.

Mr. DAVIS. I think this building up of inferior courts is no easy task. It is not like a tailor fashioning a suit of clothes. I think on the contrary, that much reflection, time, and experience would be required to enable us to establish inferior courts—especially courts for counties. We all know, that in attending to the civil business of the state, the inferior court system began with a court of quarter sessions; this was afterwards superseded by the circuit court. Our system of inferior courts has grown into disfavor, to some extent, and is to be modified. The county court system would have fallen long ago, before the system of experiment and improvement, if it had not been a constitutional court. It seems to me, it would be an erroneous mode of proceeding to encumber the constitution with many details. The best plan will be to establish a few general principles, and leave the details to be regulated from time to time, by legislative action, as experiment and experience shall instruct us. I think myself that a provision of this kind would be the best thing that we could adopt, in relation to county courts.

"In addition to circuit courts, the general assembly shall constitute such other inferior courts, justices of the peace, and other magistrates, as may be necessary and proper, to be elected by popular vote."

If you intend to establish in the constitution a frame work for a county court system, you may establish such a system as will not work well. It may become objectionable to public sentiment, and whether it shall be wrong in truth and fact, or only in public sentiment, the consequences are practically the same. I think the constitution ought merely to provide a few general terms, and that the legislature should have power to establish such inferior courts as the people shall, from time to time, require; and then if the system be found not to work well, instead of resorting to a convention to remodel the law, all you would have to do would be, when enlightened by experience, to refer the necessary changes to legislative action. In this mode, I think the system would work much more to the convenience and satisfaction of the people; and that the necessary changes would be much more easily and readily made than if you incorporate a system in the constitution, and make it the fixed and irrevocable law of the land. I am pretty much a looker on this morning, and I merely make these suggestions as a matter of counsel—as a sort of amicus conventionis—a friend to the convention. If the suggestions are not agreeable, I have not a word to say in their advocacy. If they meet with favor, I shall be satisfied—if with disfavor, I shall not be dissatisfied. When the other amendments are disposed of so as to make this in order, I will offer it.

Mr. NESBITT. If there is any court that I know any thing about, it is the county court. I have had some experience in it, and I have reaped some of its benefits. I have been elected county attorney for eight consecutive years, and I believe I never absented myself but one term, and we have twelve terms a year. One term I served twelve days consecutively. I believe, sir, the report of the committee presents the best foundation for the county court that can be adopted by the convention; and if I had from now until the end of the session to prepare a report, I do not believe I could find a solitary point, as far as regards the general principle, to amend, except one. I would give to the presiding judge the power to hold the court, which this article proposes as the foundation for the legislature to build upon. I do not agree with some gentlemen here, that we should fix the jurisdiction of the court. That is a matter to be left entirely with the legislature. When we have this foundation, giving the presiding judge the power to hold court, what will the legislature do? My opinion is, they will invest the presiding judges with power in probate alone—with power to receive and take proof of wills—appoint guardians—executors—take bonds from commissioners, and such like. I suppose we would have to invest power in somebody, and the convenience of the thing demanded that one man should have the power to hold court. In some counties, it is necessary that the court should be held every month in the year, and in others not quite so often. The law provides, furthermore, that there shall be appointed, by each county court in the state, three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to settle with executors, guardians, and administrators. It is the easiest thing in the world for the legislature to say that the associate judges of the court, together with the presiding judge, if necessary, shall exercise the power of county commissioners.

It is required that each county court shall appoint various appraisers, whose duty it is to take charge of matters out of doors. Well, how easy it would be that the legislature should send two associate judges to perform this duty. It is objected that the power of this court would be too great. I am not like some gentlemen, who think this court has no virtues. I think there are some good points about it, and some bad ones. But the principal grievance the people have labored under, is the manner in which the court is constituted. There should be I think no alteration except as to the court of claims—and I ask it as a matter of right—that the people of the whole county shall be represented in that court if it should become necessary. I suppose all that is desired can be obtained, by giving the power to the presiding judge to hold the court. But my opinion is, that it would be a little more harmonious, if the power be left to the legislature to make the necessary provision. I am satisfied with the report as it is. It is true, we had a great deal of talk about it in committee, and we finally settled down on the plan reported, and I hope that plan will be adopted.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I would not trouble the convention at this time with any remarks, but that I was a member of the committee which reported this bill, and it seems to be expected that each member of that committee should give his views upon the subject.

The remarks that were made by the gentleman on my right, (Mr. Davis,) who seemed to have a fatherly feeling for the people, were certainly conceived in a kindly spirit. He expects to do nothing himself, but expects that all that is done should be done under his supervision and discretion. I know his kindly feelings, and I appreciate his motives. What does he propose? After the committee had spent days in preparing this report, after the question had been presented in various phases to this house, he comes in and tells us it is all wrong, and that we ought to allow the provisions in the old constitution to remain and allow the legislature—that body which is always composed of the best materials—to concoct a court; and that this convention, composed as it is of combustible materials, is incapable of deciding what would be a proper court. I confess this is a subject, as has been remarked, of more importance to the counties than either the circuit court or the court of appeals. It is a court in which the people of the various counties feel a deep, essential, and more abiding interest, than they do in the circuit court. It is a matter which is brought to their houses and their firesides. It is brought down to the every day intercourse which subsists between men; and when you talk about interfering with the county court, the people will, in the language of the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) regard your action with jealousy, and look upon it with suspicion. It has hitherto been a self-constituted body, and in the language of my eloquent friend from Mason the reproduction always has longer ears than the original. I trust in God they may have longer years.

What other objection was made to this county court? It was claimed that the people should say who should constitute the court. This right we are about to give them. Do they claim anything further? They object—I only speak of the region of country from whence I came—that the members of the court will be too numerous if all the magistracy be included. That the machinery would be cumbersome—that the number would be too large. Well this may be remedied by the legislature if the community do not require it. One of the objects of calling a convention was, that the counties might be laid off into districts; and that this self-creating court should be differently constituted. How do you propose to remedy the evils that have been complained of? In the first place, you give to the people the election of judges; and then it is proposed by some that they shall have but one judge, and by others that they shall have a full bench of magistrates. It appears to me, there is safety in a medium course. The committee having heard various projects, decided upon the one now substituted in their report. I ask gentlemen who have advocated the associations of magistrates, how they are to procure an attendance—what inducement will this hold out to insure an attendance? It is very rarely that you can get a majority of the magistrates to go upon the bench, because there is no inducement for them to go there, except, perhaps, the sheriffalty to which they are looking forward. Do you propose to give them compensation? If you do, you will place a load upon the treasury that will make it stagger. How many districts will a county compose? Some sixteen or eighteen, I suppose. The improvement that will have to be made, according to the views of the gentleman, will compel them to put their hands deeply into the pockets of the people, and on these occasions, all these little municipalities are to be represented; and how often must they come together? If a road is required to be opened, you must call them together. Whenever an appropriation is to be made, the whole of them must come in; and if it becomes necessary to hold these terms four or five times a year, and give them two dollars a day, the expense will amount—as you will find—to between $75,000 and $100,000. You cannot get men to do business unless you pay them. What does the bill provide? That the legislature shall be clothed with power to make such change as the people may hereafter demand. This is the power I am willing to concede to the people. I wish to see the report stand precisely as it does, and if the people hereafter demand a change, the legislature will be ready and willing to carry it out.

What is the objection to the three judges? It is that a large power will be vested in the hands of three individuals. But in what manner are they to be invested with this power? They are to be elected by the people of the county at large; and they will therefore represent the whole county. But the gentleman from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) says it is necessary to have them represent these distinct municipalities; and that the wants of the whole community will by that means be best represented. But mark my words; they will come up with narrow and selfish feelings, and when appealed to for an appropriation to erect a bridge across a stream, or for some other object in which a portion of the country may be interested; each one will be prepared to say, it shall not be granted, because my particular section is not to be benefited by it. Here is an extreme power to be exerted upon the people of the county, while a large portion of them have had no voice in the election of those, by whose action their interests are to be affected. Sir, give the power to three judges. They will give their attention to the interests of the whole county. They will discharge their duties with a due regard to their responsibility. He who is unwilling to assume responsibility, is unfit to hold any public office. Give us three judges, and my word for it, the country will be satisfied.

The gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor,) has offered a proposition, to which I have not much objection, for I find that it corresponds almost entirely with my own views. But, it appears to me that the report of the committee, as it stands, is the best plan that we can adopt. Since it was reported by the committee, I have communicated with my constituents, and they have expressed themselves satisfied with it; and have directed me, as far as practicable, to carry it out. Hence I am inclined to sustain the report of the committee.

Mr. TURNER. I shall vote for almost any proposition that may be submitted, in preference to that of the gentleman from Shelby, (Mr. Johnston.) I believe it to propose the worst course we could adopt. I shall offer another amendment if his shall be voted down.

Mr. KELLY. As it is fashionable so to do here, I wish to define my position. I was a member of both the county court committee, and the committee of thirty, and voted against almost every proposition in the report; and although voted down, I reserved to myself the right to oppose it in convention. This I shall do by my vote.

Mr. BRADLEY. I am a member of the committee on county courts, and as such voted for the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Green, (Mr. Lisle,) and I prefer it now. I am opposed to the constitution of three judges. The suggestion of the gentleman from Green as to the expense this system would devolve upon the state, led me to reflect somewhat on the subject, and to arrive at the conclusion that it would be even more expensive than the circuit courts. The country, I am satisfied, will be astounded and dissatisfied if we present them with any system of that kind. Let us examine this matter a little. The circuit court, it is proposed, shall consist of twelve judges, and if the legislature should fix their salary at $1,600, which is here suggested as a minimum, it will amount to $19,200. Add to that the salaries of twelve commonwealth's attorneys, at $300 each, and it will amount to $3,600. This would make the whole cost of the system amount to $22,800. This report proposes to create three hundred new and salaried officers, in the shape of three county court judges for each county. Of course if they are to be men qualified and learned in the law, they are to be paid for their services, and if they are not to be such men what will the country gain by the change in the system? Can men possessing the proper qualifications, and to whom the people would be willing to confide the whole taxing and appropriating power of the county, be secured for less than $50 per annum? I think myself they cannot be procured at less than $100. But take them at $50 each, and three hundred of them would amount to $15,000. Then there are 100 county court attorneys to be provided for. Allowing for their services $100 each, which I think is as little as they can be obtained for, and you have an additional item of $10,000. The cost of the system then would be $25,000 per annum, exceeding the whole charge and expense of the circuit court system. I do not believe the people are prepared for such a proposition. The complaint against these courts grows out of the manner of their appointment, and the neglect and dereliction of duty consequent upon its being in fact a self-constituted tribunal. The people, at least in my county, would be satisfied with some system under which the counties would be divided into districts, and the magistrates elected for a limited period of time. Another objection I have, is to the vesting of the power of county taxation and appropriation in a court constituted as this report provides. These three judges would generally be three young lawyers living about the town, and but little conversant with the general interests of the county. Would this be a safer depository of this power of taxation and appropriation than a tribunal composed of men selected in the several neighborhoods, and understanding and representing fully the interests of each district? In my judgment it would not. I am therefore against the three judges, and shall vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Green. If, however, that substitute shall fail, then I shall go for the smallest number of judges in addition to the magistracy.

Mr. MAYES. If any department of our government has met the unqualified condemnation of the country it has been the existing system of county courts, and the question now is how shall it be changed. The gentleman from Bourbon desires to leave it to the legislature to establish a system. This is the very thing to which the people object, at least in my section of the country. They desire that the convention shall provide in the constitution for a system, and the plan reported by the committee is very much in accordance with that discussed and desired by them. The present constitution, in declaring that there shall be established in each county a county court, gave the legislature full power over this subject, and yet for fifty years they have not thought proper to change or mould the court so as to conform to the public desire. And yet all admit that the system as it exists has been condemned by the people, and a change demanded. As far as the expense of the system proposed by the committee is concerned, I suppose each would gladly pay the expense requisite to secure a court in which they might repose full confidence. The matter of compensation is very properly left to the legislature. Men of sound sense and integrity, I suppose, could be secured ata per diem of two dollars. Supposing the court to hold twelve terms a year, and to be able to get through with them, as is the case in my county, with a population of seventeen hundred, in a day or two, the cost would be only about $30 or $40 per year for the judges. But, it was said that county attorneys were to cost $100 per year. Not so, their compensation would be left to be regulated by law, as is the case at present, Mr. BRADLEY. What is the usual compensation allowed them?

Mr. MAYES. In my county it is $60, and in others it is higher and lower. So under this report, the county court as the representatives of the people, could allow the attorney only ten dollars, if they thought that was all his services deserved. How would it happen, as the gentleman seems to apprehend that all these judges would be selected from men in the towns? The selection has to be made by the free voice and votes of the people of the whole county, and they would certainly understand their own interests sufficiently to guard against the contingency the gentleman predicts. Satisfied that the people never will be satisfied with a constitution continuing the present system of county courts, and that if left to the legislature the desired reforms will never be obtained, and believing the plan reported by the committee to meet the approbation of those I represent, I shall therefore give it my support.

Mr. LISLE. My proposition has been opposed in the debate here, by arguments directly the opposite of each other. It has been urged here, as one objection, that the court thus constituted, would represent conflicting interests and render it difficult to arrive at correct conclusions. Another objection urged is, that in some neighborhoods a man could not be obtained qualified for the magistracy. I do not think that there is any such neighborhood in any county. Another gentleman says that under the committee's system, the cost will be but forty dollars a year.

Mr. MAYES. I said I supposed the judges would probably be allowed a per diem of two dollars.

Mr. LISLE. Now I want to know upon what principle it is expected to get men better qualified at that compensation, than are the present justices of the peace? Their fees would amount to that much. I would give the legislature the power to increase the fees of the justices; to exempt them from working on roads, and from jury duty, &c., in order to compensate them for the loss of the sheriffalty. But if we take from them the right of holding a court, it will detract from their dignity and destroy their character; and to do this merely to create a new set of officers, it seems to me is entirely uncalled for.

Mr. HAMILTON. It seems to be a settled question that the report of this great joint committee is to be sustained in every particular, and as they have said that we shall have three county judges, perhaps it is useless to contend against it. I should have been afraid to say a word against it, had not its members differed among themselves on the subject. It is a great pity perhaps that the grand committee had not been charged with the duty of framing the whole constitution, and the balance of us gone home. I concede that there has been a great deal of complaint among the people in regard to the county court, and though I have been of it, I have ever regarded it as a rotten concern, which ought to be reformed. The great objection, however, has been to the manner of its appointment, and also of its exercise of its own appointing power. They appointed men of their own political views, and I have known a county not far from where I live, where, with very few exceptions, every magistrate had a son or a son-in-law riding under him. In that case, if a constable should not pay over, and a motion should be made against him, it would be the father who decides upon his son. This is one of the greatest objections to the system, and which the people desire to see remedied. The objection urged by gentlemen in regard to the frequency of appeals I think is not well founded. At all events it will apply with equal force to the three judges proposed, for they certainly will not be so much abler and wiser than the present court, that their decisions will never be appealed from. They were not to receive any more compensation than the present magistrates; and I know from experience that the fees they receive are far from fairly compensating them. They do a great deal of labor, nearly half of which they do not receive any compensation for. I know of a case which came before me, where I had to write a warrant, in the first instance, and sixteen summonses, and then had to continue the case, and then wrote sixteen or seventeen more subpoenas. Then I had to sit humped up and listen while four or five lawyers plead the cause, and after it was decided, to write some ten or fifteen certificates. If a clerk had had the thing to do, it would have amounted to at least fifteen or twenty dollars, and my fees were only some twelve and a half cents. (Laughter.) Pay the magistrates what is reasonable for their services, and they will attend to the county court. As it is now, magistrates only attend there who may be brought to town in discharge of their own business, and yet the courts were generally very well attended to. But gentlemen say that they want qualified men, and how do they expect to get them? They say by the election of these judges by the people! Are not the magistrates also to be elected by the people, and will not the chances for getting good men be as strong in the one case as in the other? The gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor,) says his county court decided that a man had no right to take an appeal under five pounds. I did not think there was a county court in Kentucky, where the magistrates and the lawyers about it, did not know the difference between twenty five shillings and five pounds, and if such a county does exist, I say it becomes a question whether it ought not to be dissolved, and thrown back upon its original elements. (Laughter.) The gentleman from Bracken, (Mr. W. C. Marshall,) said that the magistrates were too much under the influence of the people, and therefore he wanted these three judges to come in, like so many Julius Cæsars, to tax the people whether they wanted it or not. I believe there is no necessity for the three, and that the people will be satisfied with the election of magistrates by districts, who shall form the county court, and will not tax the people contrary to their will.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. PROCTOR, and it was rejected.

The PRESIDENT announced the question then to be on the proposition of Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON, to strike out the original section, and substitute his amendment in lieu thereof.

Mr. GHOLSON. I move to strike out the provision for two justices in the amendment. My object is to make it conform to the proposition of the gentleman from Madison, (Mr. Turner.) I think there is no necessity for the justices to be associated with the judges, except in cases where they sit on questions of claims and roads.

The amendment of Mr. GHOLSON was rejected.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays on Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON'S amendment.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL asked for a division of the question, so that the vote could be taken first on striking out.

The question being then taken, the convention agreed to strike out—yeas 56, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, Jas. S. Crisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—56.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, William Cowper, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Mark E. Huston, Thomas James, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, Ira Root, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—36.

Mr. TURNER. I offer my proposition as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Shelby. I suppose that those who sustained the report will now go for my proposition as being nearer to it than any that has been proposed.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. As one of those who sustained the report, I shall be prepared to vote for all, if I cannot get the three judges.

Mr. MACHEN. Does the gentleman propose in his amendment to make it imperative on the legislature to require the magistrates to come in?

Mr. TURNER. I desire that the direction shall be imperative on the legislature to prescribe it. I should like to have the support of the gentleman from Bracken, (Mr. W. C. Marshall,) but at any rate, unless I am mistaken, there will be a majority for the proposition without his vote.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. It will not be the first time that the gentleman has been mistaken in his life. Many of his propositions have been rejected here, of course not because they were wrong, but because the obtuseness of the house was too great to comprehend their beauties. This one judge system, this lawyer operation, this business of fixing up little pettifoggers to act as a court, seems to be a favorite notion of the gentleman, but I can tell him that if it goes forth to the people as the concoction of the brain of one of the most distinguished lawyers in the state, they will be very apt to regard it as a lawyer project, and to look upon it with abhorrence. I believed the plan of three judges would give more satisfaction to the people and the better accord with their views. It having been rejected, I prefer to let all the magistrates come in, and shall vote against the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. MACHEN. There are insuperable difficulties which present themselves to my mind as likely to arise under the propositions either of the gentleman from Green or Madison. We are taking away from the magistracy the only stimulus we have heretofore presented to them to come on the county court bench. There are very few men so devoted to their country as to be utterly devoid of selfishness. Men will not work efficiently in any department of government without being paid for it. It is proposed now to require the magistrates to act in the court when claims are disposed of, and I ask you, by what power you will bring them to the bench? Can you by any other than that of remuneration? I believe nothing less will draw them to the bench. No man will otherwise assume the great responsibility of levying and appropriating the funds of the county. If we direct the legislature to require a man to come on the bench, and he refuses, they will have no power to compel him. Remuneration for his services is the only inducement that will secure him. Is the court, then, in such a case, not to be holden at all? It does seem to me, that the proposition will result in that. I am willing to go so far as to say, that the legislature may have the power to authorize a majority of the magistracy to sit on the bench, but I am opposed to making it imperative on them. I never heard, during the canvass, a dissenting voice to the proposition of establishing the court of three judges of some character, and since the report of the committee has been introduced, I have heard only the highest approbation awarded to it by my people. I certainly prefer it to any that has been introduced here.

Mr. GARFIELDE. As a member of the committee, I took pains, after the report was introduced, to ascertain the public feeling in my own county in regard to it, and I find it meets with the unqualified approbation of my constituents. And although I am not a lawyer, and consequently do not know as much about what should be its practical workings, perhaps, as some other gentlemen, yet it has been a favorite scheme with me. It is said, in making this constitution, we should be governed by a spirit of compromise upon these numerous questions of detail where a difference of opinion exists. To that spirit I have endeavored to conform, and I have compromised one thing after another until now nearly every original view I had has been abandoned. I have met members fairly in this matter, and yet I have always found myself in a minority. Be it so. I had hoped, however, that the report of the committee, meeting the approbation of the people as it has, would have received also the approbation of the convention. I find it has not, and as the next best proposition I shall go for that of the gentleman from Bourbon (Mr. Davis.) It seems to me a very serious matter to impose the county business upon one individual. It was suggested to the committee, and opposed on the very grounds stated by one gentleman (Mr. Bradley) here, that the selection would be probably that of a lawyer residing at the county seat who could know but very little, and might care less, about the interests of the whole people of the county. I therefore proposed to add two other magistrates to the court, who could understand and represent the farming interests. This having been rejected, I now prefer leaving the whole subject to the legislature, believing that they will, in their wisdom, devise some system by which all the various interests of the country will be promoted.

Mr. CHRISMAN. By the rejection of this first section, I deem the whole report to have been rejected. This is an important subject, upon which due time should be had for consideration, and I therefore move an adjournment.

The motion was negatived.

Mr. NESBITT. The vote just given to strike out the first section, makes it necessary for some of us to define our position in regard to the report. It will be recollected that in the early part of the session I offered a resolution providing for a single probate judge. It was the mere beginning, so far as I was concerned, of a system. Upon that subject I appeared before the committee, and introduced such arguments as I was then prepared with, but they disagreed with me, and reported three judges for the court. Then the whole matter being referred to the joint committee, it gave me some time to send the report to my county, and write letters to divers individuals for their opinions upon it. In return I have received the strongest assurances that the report of the committee is universally approved. In view of that fact, although it is in direct conflict with the resolution I offered, I voted against striking out. I prefer, and would risk more to carry out the will of the people I represent, than my own views, let them be what they might. Their opinions have had a fair test before the convention, and this body has decided against them. What will be the action hereafter, I cannot pretend to say, but after having voted once to carry into effect the will of my people on the subject, I am now left to act for myself, and I shall now fall back upon my original proposition, and go for one judge, giving the power to the legislature to call other justices on to the bench at any time they may see proper, but preferring to have it imperative when the court is considering claims.

EVENING SESSION.

LEGISLATIVE EXPENSES.

The PRESIDENT announced that he had been furnished by the Second Auditor with a table of the expenses of the legislature for a series of years, in compliance with a resolution heretofore adopted, on the motion of the gentleman from Bullitt, (Mr. Thompson), which he now presented to the convention.

COUNTY COURTS.

The convention then resumed the consideration of the report on county courts.

Mr. TURNER said he had been authorized by the gentleman from Shelby, to withdraw that gentleman's amendment, which was pending when the convention took a recess, and also desired to withdraw his own proposition, and to offer a proposition as a compromise, which met the approbation of himself, the gentleman from Shelby, (Mr. G. W. Johnston,) the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Meriwether,) and some others. It was as follows:

"And all the justices of the peace in each county: Provided, That the general assembly shall have the power, from time to time, to provide by law, what part of the business of said court shall be transacted by the presiding judge, and what portion by said judge and one or more of the justices of the peace, and what justice shall act as presiding judge during a vacancy in that office, or in the absence of the presiding judge."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE reminded the convention of the position of the question, a vote having been taken on striking out, and hence he questioned the propriety of the course suggested.

The PRESIDENT stated that the substitution could be made with the general assent of the convention.

Objections were made.

Mr. JOHNSTON enquired if he could not accept that proposition for the one which he had before submitted.

The PRESIDENT replied that he could not without general consent, inasmuch as his proposition was in possession of the convention, and had been voted upon. If, however, it was desired, he would put the question to the convention, on granting leave.

Mr. GRAY said, he desired to vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Madison. If that gentleman had withdrawn it he would himself again present it to the convention, for it came up to what he thought a county court should be.

Mr. TURNER said he preferred his own to any other proposition, but still it would be found necessary to make concessions all around.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the gentleman will not take the expression he has received from a few members around him, as the full sense of this house, upon a question of this character. I do not think we ought to proceed in this manner, for it is not calculated to accelerate our progress. It is easy to take a vote upon the proposition; it will not take us long; and if the majority favor it let us adopt it, but if they vote against it, then we can take the proposition of the gentleman from Madison and take the sense of the convention. In my opinion it comes up to the manner in which we are called upon, as I believe, by the people, to establish the county court. It is easier to pay one judge than three, and one can do all the business that is assigned him by the amendment which the gentleman offered before the convention took a recess. What is the business he will have to transact? To probate wills, to manage estates, to appoint guardians, and all matters of this sort, which are now entrusted to the county court; and from its decisions we have a right to appeal to the circuit court, and there one judge decides. Why cannot one judge also decide in a county court? And why not one man as well as three? Indeed, it is admitted that one able and intelligent man will do equally as well as three, in the decision and settlement of private rights in dispute between individuals and the community. I ask if we cannot afford to pay one man better than three? Now this is a matter, it strikes me, in which the community at large have an interest, especially in all that relates to the imposition of taxes, the laying of levies, the changing of roads, the erection of bridges, and all expenses which the people of the county will have to defray. The amendment of the gentleman from Madison provides that a majority of the magistrates, who are elected, shall be called up and consulted on all such subjects in connection with the judge elected by the people at large. Now, does that not give the county an opportunity of being fairly represented as the people are represented in the legislature, when they impose taxes on the state at large? But the gentleman objects that some of the divisions are larger than others, and says there is something unequal in it. There is nothing in the objection; it makes no more discrimination than in the legislature. All parts of the county are represented, and we do not leave it to one man to say what the balance shall do. And if they cannot get a majority, I take it for granted it ought not to be passed. It is as fair a representation as you can get in any other way. I think if the judges are elected the county will be better represented, if those who lay the levy are from the county at large. Here we divide it into sections, and each section has its voice and is heard.

Now, for these reasons, I think that would be the best plan. But gentlemen say, if we adopt the one judge plan, that it is "a lawyer project." That is an extraordinary way of killing off a proposition, because if you use the word lawyer among the people, they will think it is all wrong. But I do not think we should be frightened from a good project because a lawyer happened to introduce it; almost all the amendments introduced have been by lawyers. I am opposed to killing off a project in this manner, if there be merit in it. If it be right, equal and just, I will support it with as much zeal and sincerity, whether it comes from a lawyer, or a farmer, or a man of any other vocation. Does not the report of the committee provide the same thing, that there shall be a presiding judge? Yes, the people there are to elect a lawyer. Is it not as much of a lawyer project, as if one judge and two associate judges were to sit on the bench? The gentleman says it is necessary that a man should have some legal ability. If you put two farmers, or men of no legal ability on the bench, do they constitute an efficient court? I suppose the two farmers are to sit and "guess," and if they "guess" wrong, why the third judge, if he is to be a lawyer, would be overruled in his decision. This is an objection, I think, to these two associates. The people elect whom they please. I care not whether he be a lawyer or a farmer, I believe they will elect a man who is better qualified to discharge the duties of a judge than if three men were to preside, as is proposed. You can pay a competent man much better, if he is able to do all the duties, than you can three men, in proportion to their respective services. Thus you will save the expense incurred by employing two associate judges, and the business of the court will be infinitely better performed. If not, why do not gentlemen propose to put two associates with the circuit judge? Because it is the same kind of business, these judges are called upon to transact. On all subjects you can take an appeal from the circuit court. In all matters that concern the counties at large, as the laying of levies, and the opening of roads. I think it would be better to leave it to the magistrates. Let it be designated on what terms they shall come.— That, however, is a subject for legislation. You can pay them by the day to do the business. It will only take them a day or two. The gentleman from Caldwell says you have no means of bringing them up. We have the same power to bring up all that you have to bring up the presiding judge, and his two associates. If you are going to pay him, you will pay them. They will come for one dollar a day, and we can impose penalties for failing to do it. We have required the county court to do this business without compensation. It seems to me we can have no difficulty in it. The plan proposed by the gentleman from Madison is the cheapest, the best, and the most certain and safe, and will meet with the most favor among the people. If you do not choose to adopt it, I will agree to the one the chairman of the committee has proposed. But I think we had better fix it with one judge, to determine all these matters. We must acknowledge he is as competent to do it, as with two associates. We can leave the laying of the levy and taxation to the justices of the peace.

Mr. ROOT. I am in favor of the report of the committee, and it strikes me, if the friends of that report will hold to that a little, the gentlemen who have presented various propositions, will finally abandon them, and agree on the report of this committee. The project of electing one judge is spoken of, and of bringing up the old system of the county court, which caused the magistrates once in a month to come up to the county seat. If there is any one part of the old order of things objectionable in my county it is the county court system. Not only the number of the county courts, but the manner of appointment, and the length of time they were held were strong objections to it. If the people imagine that the old form or shape of the court is again to exist in my county, it will induce many to vote against the constitution. On what ground is it that we shall resort partially to the old system? Is it on the score of economy? Let us see how it will stand.

Is it to be supposed the magistrates will come up and hold courts, and transact business for the county without pay? That they will be so generous as to give their services without any compensation? Why was it, that under the old system, men of ordinary intelligence could be induced to ride up to the county seat in heat and cold, summer and winter, in dry and wet weather, without compensation? It was because they held on to the office with the hope of one day becoming sheriff. That feature of the system will be cut off. Suppose the favorite proposition of some gentlemen succeeds, and we incorporate in the constitution a provision, which requires twelve or fifteen magistrates to come up periodically, to transact the business of the county. If they are paid one dollar per day and meet one day in a month, there will be an annual expense to the state of $14,400. Suppose we adopt the report of the committee and appoint three persons under the dignified term of judges, giving to the presiding judge, and associate judges two dollars per day; we shall thereby save to the state, $7,200 annually, and do away with the prejudice which has heretofore existed against the county court.

It has not been the court of appeals nor the circuit court, which has induced the people to rise en masse and call a convention. It has been the court before their eyes, the ignorance of the magistracy, and the tenure by which they held their office. It has been their constables and other officers of the county, and not the higher officers about whom the people knew little, and cared less.

If we wish to add strength to this new constitution, we must set about suiting it to the prejudices of the people at home, and on the county court rests much with respect to the favor with which the new constitution will be received. If gentlemen wish to save money, the adoption of the report of the committee will be the means of doing it, as contrasted with the other proposition; for in the one case we propose to pay three judges instead of twelve.

It has been said, that if three judges are placed on the bench, certain sections of the county may be overlooked. In order to obviate that, the county may be districted, and the judge may be instructed by the people to execute their wishes. The original convention men, when they raised their voice for the measure, attacked most zealously the county court, and from this subject drew their weapons and their ammunition, and if it is suffered to appear again with some of the former obnoxious features it will destroy the constitution.

There is another reason why the long courts should not be permitted to appear again. Where there are many men engaged in the same cases, every man is disposed to throw the responsibility on his neighbor. The act which the people condemn, cannot be settled and fixed on any one in particular. Each fixes it on his neighbor; but if there are three only you can tell who is responsible, and there will be a unity of action, and the people will be better satisfied, for their business will be better done.

I say then to the friends of the report of the committee of thirty, that after a little more breath has been spent, they will be able to carry it; because I believe the great body of the delegates know it is nearest the thing which the people want.

Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON. I have been somewhat surprised at the debate on this report. Gentlemen seem, in their anxiety to make a county court, to have forgotten that we are to have a body of magistracy, to whom is to be given an important jurisdiction. I look on that office as next in importance to that of the county court. They have jurisdiction to the amount of $50. It is important that they should be qualified for this office. Do gentlemen suppose they will get men to discharge the duties of this office, if you say they are unfit to sit on the bench of the county court? I want this court kept up by men as well qualified to sit on the bench of the county court, as they have been heretofore. How it may be in other counties, I do not know, but in Shelby they are as well qualified as any county court in Kentucky. I do not expect to find persons better qualified for the office than the justices of the peace in Shelby. There is not a man on the bench who is not well qualified to discharge all the duties which will be imposed on this court.

The plan of the committee was to dispense with the services of the magistracy, and substitute three judges. I have been all the time opposed to that plan. The amendment which I proposed and the vote of the convention cuts off the three judges, and I believe, taking that vote as the sense of the majority of the convention, it is intended to substitute the magistrates of the county for the three judges. The proposition of the gentleman from Madison goes to that extent, and further, and I like it better on that account. It proposes to have a presiding judge, as a sort of head to this court, and to have the magistrates assist him. But it goes further, and gives the legislature the power to confer on the presiding judge, the probate jurisdiction in each county. That, I know, is a favorite project of many on this floor. They will be able to accomplish their wishes through the legislature. This goes further and designates what number of magistrates, with the presiding judge, shall have jurisdiction in the county, giving power to the legislature to call in the whole or a part of the magistrates, when business of importance is to come before them, covering my proposition, and going further. I prefer it, and in giving my vote, I shall do it to reach the proposition or the gentleman from Madison. I have no idea it will suit those who still hold on to the three judges and the report of the committee, but it seems to me to cover all the ground taken by the different delegates, and I believe will meet the wishes of the majority.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. I ask the indulgence of the convention, to offer a remark or two only, on the subject under consideration. To my mind, the mode of organizing a county court system, is of more importance to the people generally, than the subjects either of the circuit courts, or of the court of appeals. True, the subject of county courts is not one on which such high sounding speeches may be made, as on that of these other courts; yet the people feel much more deeply interested in it. The county court has heretofore possessed multifarious and extensive powers, and this must be the case with that court hereafter, whatever its form may be. Of this the convention is fully sensible; hence the interest I am gratified to see manifested relative to the proper organization of this court.

One of the most important powers which it has heretofore possessed, and which it will hereafter possess, is the right of taxation. This power, when exercised by the legislature, has ever been closely and jealously watched, and much has been said in this state concerning it, while the power of these courts on this subject, has been exercised without attracting as much of the attention of the people as it should have done. I would therefore remind the convention, that the county courts of this state, taken altogether, have annually levied and collected, in the form of county revenue, nearly as much money from the people as the legislature itself; and we are now to organize a tribunal for the exercise of the same power. The report of the committee, and the several amendments which have been offered, present the question, whether this right of taxation shall be given to a county judge and two associates, or whether it shall be given to all the magistrates, each elected by a separate district, and thus representing every part of the county. The vote already taken, by which the two associate justices have been stricken out, is something indicative of the sense of the convention in favor of the latter mode. That mode it seems to me, would be most apt to give satisfaction to the people. Every part of the county would then be represented by a justice, elected by the people themselves, in all matters relative to raising and appropriating county revenue.

The amendment first offered by the gentleman from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) contemplates associating the justices of a county with the presiding judge, at such terms as may be prescribed by law, for the purpose of laying and appropriating the county levy, and of establishing and altering roads. This amendment meets my approbation. In the first place, these are perhaps, the only cases in which a popular or representative court is necessary.

The other duties conferred on the court, are of a character which can be performed more expeditiously, more conveniently, and more satisfactorily, by a single judge, than by any multitudinous assembly of justices which can be brought together. Why require more than one in any other case? Is there any other case where more than one is necessary? What will be the jurisdiction of the court, besides such as it may have over roads and county levies? It will, in the first place, have such jurisdiction as usually appertains to a court of probate, as admitting wills to record, granting letters of administration, appointing guardians, settling with administrators, executors, guardians, and the like. It may also appoint commissioners to assign, dower, divide lands, &c., and it may hear and determine appeals from justices of the peace in certain cases. Is more than one judge required for the discharge of all these duties?

For myself, I would always prefer a single justice of the peace in such cases. One acting by himself, in these cases, will always get on better than all the magistrates of a county taken together. I would greatly prefer risking his decisions alone. Bring them altogether for such purposes, and it usually results in "confusion worse confounded." I agree with the gentleman from Campbell, (Mr. Root,) that the complaints of the people were long and loud against our county court system. If any one thing was more complained of than another, it was that. If any one thing more than another accelerated the call of the convention, it was that. And I verily believe that we, to-day, would not have been here forming a constitution, but for the universal dissatisfaction felt against our county courts. I am not making these remarks to throw odium on that body. The very nature of its organization, no matter who its members might be, was such as to bring it down in the estimation of the country. Its mode of appointment was not its only objectionable feature. It was too numerous—a sort of multitudinous assembly, totally unfit for the discharge of its duties. Any other court, of like numbers, will fail to give satisfaction. The people desire a change in this feature of the court; and unless it be made, they will, in my humble opinion, be disappointed in their expectations at the hands of the convention. But while I am in favor of the convention. But while I am in favor of a single judge for the transaction of county court business, yet when it comes to levying, collecting, and appropriating taxes, I am for associating the justices with the county judge, that every part of the county may be represented; nor would I permit magistrates to be multiplied at pleasure as formerly; and I take this occasion to call the attention of the convention to this point, for I have been much gratified to see special legislation taken away in a number of cases. I hope the convention will apply the same rule to this thing of increasing justices by special acts, and will provide that each county shall be districted, and be entitled to justices according to its population. Each district would then have a fair and equal voice in laying a county levy, and applying the money.

Mr. President, I regretted to hear gentlemen in favor of three judges, announce the one judge plan as a lawyer project. I imagine, however, that this will have no influence here, nor before the people. They further insist that the associate judges are necessary to represent the farming interest. But sir, this court is not a representative body, except in the cases already alluded to. In those cases, I would have the farming interests represented by all the justices, coming from every part of the county. If, however, they are to form the court in all cases, as well as on all occasions, when the question of taxation is not involved, as when it is, then I am against it, and in preference, will go for the report of the committee. The gentleman from Campbell invokes this committee of thirty, to come to the rescue; I was sorry to hear it, for that power has already been often enough appealed to. It was called up in aid of putting four judges on the court of appeals bench, and succeeded when I believe a majority of the convention was originally against it. I hope then, that hereafter every question will stand or fall on its own merits, and not according to compromises in committee rooms; and that this will be the case with the report now before the house.

It is further insisted that this county judge plan, will be expensive. I think not. Sir, why is it that your county courts now appoint commissioners to settle with guardians, executors, &c. It is because the court itself is too multitudinous and unwieldy for the transaction of such business. This would not be so of a single judge. These commissioners might then be dispensed with, and their fees go towards paying a county judge. I only mention this as one item among many.

MR. CHAMBERS. The views and sentiments of the distinguished gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis,) as indicated by the amendment which he has offered, and the remarks which he has made upon the subject of the county courts, are those which I entertained and expressed during my canvass for a seat in this body, and up to the time of my arrival here. I went further—before my constituents I opposed the establishment of any court by constitutional provision—except the supreme appellate court, supposing that it would be sufficient and best to delegate the power for the creation of all others, to the legislature. The uncertainty whether these institutions would work well in practice, and the difficulty of altering them if they should not, were sufficient reasons, if no others existed, to induce such a course; but in addition to these, experience in the case of the county courts, had already taught us the impropriety of making these inferior tribunals, constitutional fixtures. But, sir, I had not been here long, before I ascertained to my entire satisfaction—or rather dissatisfaction—that such was not the pleasure of this convention, and that not only the circuit but the county courts were to become creatures of the constitution. I then, in common with the other members of the committee to whom this subject was referred, labored to present the best system that we could devise, and the report now before the house is the result of our counsels. I regret that it should have been met at the very threshold, by the onset of the gentleman from Green, and that its success should be jeopardized by the accidental junction of those who favor one justice, and those who go for the whole body of the magistracy. But with the gentleman from Campbell, I do not regard this vote as a true indication of the intentions of this house; it is the meeting of two extremes which can never be made to harmonize, except upon the middle ground of this report.

Sir, let us examine this subject with some care and attention, and let us find our true course, as judges sometimes find out the meaning of a penal statute—that is by considering the old law, the mischief, and the remedy. The old law, constitutional—provides, that “there shall be established within each county, now or which may hereafter be erected within this commonwealth, a county court,” it also provides that “a competent number of justices of the peace shall be appointed in each county,” and lodges the power of appointment in their own hands, making them a self-perpetuating body. The old law statutory declares, that these justices of the peace shall compose the county court; and confers upon it, jurisdiction over very important and multifarious subjects. The mischief, or mischiefs growing out of this organization of our county courts, and out of its administration of the matters committed to it, are almost as numerous as the subjects of its jurisdiction. Gentlemen need not tell me that the only things complained of were the mode of appointment and tenure of office. These it is true were seriously objected to, but so were others—its numbers are too great for a judicial body; it is an unwieldy, inconvenient, and disorderly court. It is frequently a difficult matter to get the justices upon the bench, and keep them there throughout the hearing of a cause. Instances are known of those justices who had heard the evidence on the one side having left the bench, and the cause being decided by those who had heard but a part of the evidence. Many subjects now require a majority of the justices in commission to be present at the time of their adjudication. This is a source of much trouble and disappointment, and I am inclined to think, that these laws requiring a majority, should all be repealed. They were not enacted because a majority would do the business any better than three, but as a kind of restraint on that kind of business, and their only effect is to put the party wanting this kind of business attended to, to a great deal of very unnecessary trouble.

There is no one who would not prefer applying to the court, in any kind of case whatever, when three or four of the most intelligent members are present, to an application when the bench is full, and consisting of from twelve to twenty members. But the most objectionable thing about the county court, is its politico judicial character. Many of the duties of this court, are of an executive and ministerial, rather than judicial nature, and if you would see a strict adherence to political party, go into your county courts when engaged in these executive or ministerial duties.

Sir, political bias should never be permitted to enter our courts of justice. But organized as these county courts now are, or as they will be if the whole elected magistracy forms the court, it can never be kept out. No, it will be vastly increased by electing the magistrates until your county courts will become nothing but political arenas. Do gentlemen expect that the quality of the magistracy will be improved by electing them. If they do, they will find themselves mistaken—it will, unless I am deceived, be greatly deteriorated. The chance of becoming sheriff is taken away, and no inducements to take so troublesome an office is left. Many of the districts will have no one residing within them, qualified to make a good justice, and men will not be voted for on account of their qualifications, to act as judge, or justice of the county court, but because of some personal or political predilection. Besides sir, it is rather singular that we should choose men because of their qualifications to make good country justices, and then throw upon them as an incident and adjunct of their office, the far more important and responsible duties of county court judge. In this way the responsibility of the judge is too indirect and too much divided even to operate well.

We shall take away from the county courts most of their executive and ministerial duties, and we ought to create a court purely judicial, and with practical responsibility. This never can be the case, so long as all the justices in commission are, ex officio, members of the court. Now sir, I have spoken of the old law, and of a part—but a very small part—of the mischiefs arising out of the organization and administration of our county courts; and what is the remedy proposed? So far as the appointment and tenure of office are concerned our duty is plain. We give one to the people, and limit the other to a term of years, and this will perhaps stop complaints upon these two subjects; but it will not correct the evils, nor redress the grievances of a badly constructed court. This can only be done by electing suitable persons directly into the office of county court judge, and making them immediately responsible for the faithful discharge of its duties. Then the question comes up, of how many members should this court be made to consist. This question was fully debated and considered, both in the committee on county courts, and in the committee of thirty. The single judge, the whole body of the county magistracy, and the three judge system, each had its advocate, and the last was adopted as uniting in itself, all the benefits, and being free from the objections of both the others.

I have already shown some of the reasons why the whole corps of justices of the peace should not come upon the bench of the county; it would not be hard to state many others, and good ones; but one is sufficient, and I think ought to be conclusive. The people have demanded an entire change in this court. I came here the mere agent of my constituents, and I intend to try to conform to their behest. They required something more than a mere change in the mode of appointment, and the tenure of office; they want a radical, thorough change in the organization of this court. They do not object to its retaining its name, and jurisdiction; but they want new incumbents, chosen with a view to the duties of this office, and nothing else. It will not be hard to show that three judges, any two of whom shall hold the court, will do better than one. The remarks of my friend from Mason (Mr. Taylor) on this subject, are entitled to great weight. The county courts in this commonwealth have a very extensive jurisdiction; it embraces a great variety and number of interesting subjects, and creates such an amount of responsibility, that no one man would like to incur it. Part of its business affects the whole county, and every individual in it; such, for instance, as laying the levy, altering, establishing, and working the roads, the administration of the poor laws, and appointing officers of elections. Another portion of its business, and a very large one, concerns individuals directly, and the public incidentally; such, for instance, as the probate of wills, and administration of estates, guardians and wards, apprentices, approving securities and taking bonds from all the officers of the county, establishing ferries, taverns, and fixing their rates, bastardy, settlements with sheriffs, commissioners, division and partition of lands and slaves, assignment of dower, awarding writs of ad quod damnum, and levying the damages assessed, which involves the power of taking private property for public use, with a thousand other important duties and responsibilities; too much to be incurred by any one man. Moreover, this is to be a monthly court, and to insure its regular sitting, it is better to have three judges. One might have business before the court that would make it improper that he should act, or he might be absent or sick. It is not intended to have a presiding judge and two stuffed paddies, as some have supposed. No, the judges will be equal in power and authority, and for aught I know, the associate may often be superior in capacity to the president; but it is necessary to have one of them designated as presiding justice, for the certification of records, deeds, and powers of attorney, under the requirements of the acts of congress and the laws of sister states. Nor is it intended, as some have suggested, that the office of judge of the county court is to be filled by the little pettifogging lawyers of our villages and county towns. I know not how it may be in the counties of those who urge such an objection; but in my county it will be any body else. This is the only judgeship which is not exclusively appropriated to the lawyers by the provisions of the article on the judiciary, and in my county we have experienced and intelligent farmers, men who have already been presiding justices and sheriffs, intelligent and well qualified mechanics, retired lawyers, clerks, and others well qualified to become county judges, and who would accept of that office, but who could not be induced to be elected a justice of the peace.

Next, sir, we will consider the expense and economy of this court, and here my friend from Green rushes upon us with the startling cry of three hundred new salaried officers. But what does he propose as a substitute? Why, sir, a plan offering us at least one thousand or twelve hundred new salaried officers. That gentleman should reflect that we have taken from the justices of the peace the little bonus of expectancy upon the sheriffalty which they formerly had; and however inferior and indifferent their qualifications for and services upon the bench may be, we cannot expect and should not want them for nothing. Allowing then, that each justice of the peace is to have one dollar per day for his services as county court judge, and supposing there are one hundred counties, averaging twelve justices to the county, and that only half these justices attend to hold the monthly courts, then we shall have to pay for the services of one half of the magistrates, as county court judges, the sum of seven thousand two hundred dollars per annum to have our business very badly done, whilst if we elect three county court judges in each county and suppose that all three attend each court at a per diem pay of two dollars each, it would cost but six thousand dollars to the state, and the business would be well done. These county judges, it is expected, will be paid out of the county revenue, and they will not cost each county over one hundred dollars. And in my opinion it is destined to become the most popular, useful, cheap, and convenient court in our state.

To meet the wishes of those who wish the justices from all parts of the county occasionally to come upon the bench, we have added a section allowing the justices of the peace to attend the court of claims and assist in making appropriations and laying the levy.

If this court be established as reported, I verily believe its jurisdiction, now great, will be vastly increased in a few years. There are many subjects now given to our circuit courts that could be more conveniently attended to by the county courts; and as we have (as I think very unwisely) limited the number of circuits to twelve, and are about to try the working facilities of our judges to their utmost extent, the transfer of such matters to the county courts is still more desirable.

Mr. President, in what I have said, I am actuated by no personal considerations. I have no grievances of that kind to complain of. The justices of the peace in my county will compare very advantageously with those of any other county. They are all men of good character, fair capacity, and sound integrity, and some of them will no doubt be found upon the county court bench, if this report be adopted. But I have objections to the existing county court system, arising from its inherent defects, which can only be obviated by the election of suitable persons for the express purpose of holding these courts.

And then the convention adjourned.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. WARDER.

LEGISLATIVE EXPENSES.

On the motion of Mr. JAMES, the report of the second auditor in answer to a resolution adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Bullitt, (Mr. Thompson) showing the expenses of a series of sessions of the legislature, was ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

On the motion of Mr. TRIPLETT, the rules were so amended as to provide that a motion to strike out, and insert, is indivisible.

COUNTY COURTS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the article concerning county courts.

The first section was under consideration in these words:

"SEC. 1. There shall be established in each county now, or which may hereafter be erected within this commonwealth, a county court, to consist of a presiding judge, and two associate judges, any two of whom shall constitute a court for the transaction of business."

To this, Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON, on Wednesday, moved the following amendment:

Strike out all after the words "presiding judge," and insert "and the justices of the peace in commission in each county. The presiding judge, and two justices of the peace, or any three of the justices of the peace, shall constitute a court for the transaction of business, except at the court of claims, or when debts are contracted, when the presiding judge and a majority of the justices shall be required to constitute the court."

A division of the question was called for, and the convention agreed to strike out.

Mr. TURNER then moved to amend the portion proposed to be inserted, by substituting the following:

"And all the justices of the peace in each county: Provided, That the general assembly shall have the power, from time to time, to provide by law what part of the business of said court shall be transacted by the presiding judge, and what portion, by said judge and one or more of the justices of the peace, and what justice shall act as presiding judge during a vacancy in that office, or in the absence of the presiding judge."

In this state the question stood at the last adjournment, and the question now came up on the adoption of the substitute of the gentleman from Madison.

The question was taken and the substitute rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. G. W. JOHNSTON.

Mr. JOHNSTON, by general consent, modified his substitute, by inserting the words, "or when debts are contracted"—which form part of the amendment as given above.

Mr. GRAY moved, as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Shelby, the following, which was offered on Wednesday, and afterwards withdrawn, by Mr. TURNER:

"Which court shall be holden by said judge, except at such times as may be prescribed by law, at which the county levy is to be laid, debts upon the county contracted, or roads opened or established, altered or discontinued, in which case a majority of the justices in commission in each county, shall be associated with the presiding judge, for the transaction of such business, under such rules and regulations as the general assembly may direct."

Mr. JAMES called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the substitute, and they were taken, and were—yeas 26, nays 51.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) John L. Ballinger, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Thomas J. Hood, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, George W. Williams—26.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question again recurred on the amendment of the gentleman from Shelby.

Mr. McHENRY called for the yeas and nays, and being taken, they were yeas 18, nays 63.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James P. Hamilton, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Peter Lashbrooke, Johnson Price, John T. Rogers, Michael L. Stoner, Wesley J. Wright—18.

NAYS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Procter, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, James Rudd, Ign. A. Spalding, Jas. W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the convention had stricken out that portion of the section relating to the associate justices.

Mr. GARRARD moved that the rule be dispensed with, which requires a motion to reconsider to lie over.

The motion was agreed to, and the rule was dispensed with.

The question recurred on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GARRARD. I think it has been fully determined by the action of the convention, that there is no one proposition which has been before it, that can command a majority in favor of it, except the report of the committee. I am of opinion the report of the committee is better than anything else we can possibly adopt. My residence is in that portion of the commonwealth where the hope of the office of sheriff has been the sole inducement to those who hold the office of magistrate, and it will be recollected that according to the report of the committee, no gentleman will have that inducement before him as a reason for holding the office of a justice of the peace. I am satisfied that the office will not be filled by men of so much experience, whose judgment and character will have so much weight in the community, as if they were elected solely for the purpose of performing the duties of the county court. On this subject we must make some compromise, and endeavor to obtain that which comes nearest to our united opinions. During the canvass in my county, last summer, I proposed to my constituents, that the magistrates should be paid out of the county levies, and not a single individual objected to the adoption of that course. I hope the house will agree to the motion to reconsider. And if it agrees to do so, I am sure we can get through the report in a few hours.

Mr. HARDIN. The gentleman has said what I was about to say. The bill as reported, I thought was the best we could get, and I did not anticipate any trouble in carrying it through. We took away from the magistracy the office of sheriff, and allow the people to select whom they please. Heretofore we could not get one magistrate to sit long enough to finish one appeal, and that made me abjure the county court system forty three years ago. The old court of quartersessions did a great deal of small business, and sat about three days at a term. I want this court so organized that it may take the small business, the trash, as we call the last hogshead, in separating the different sorts of tobacco. With regard to expense, I do not think the salary of each magistrate will amount to more than thirty six dollars, which will make the whole expense $10,800. I can go for the report, with a small alteration respecting indictment for wilful neglect of duty.

Mr. ROGERS. I have had little to say on this subject, and would not now say anything if the county court had not been made the scapegoat for others' sins. It seems to me the great reason for opposition to this court was because the judges held their office during good behavior, and because there was no responsibility. My people thought, if we could make them responsible by appointing them for a term of years, they would do well. There was as much objection to the circuit as to the county court. To be sure, in legal ability this court was not equal to the higher court. They lay the taxes and disburse the money, and I would be glad to have the magistrates act in this business with the presiding judge. I should be unwilling to have three men do the whole. You might as well appoint three men to lay the tax for the state. If they are expected to be the "trash hogshead," according to the gentleman from Nelson, and to do the "trash business," I presume they will take the "trash" fees also. I think it will be better to have one judge, to act with the justices, and then give the legislature the power to say what business shall be given to the judge and what to the justices. I have an abiding faith that those who come after us will have as much patriotism if not as much ability as we have. If we constitute all the patriotism, when we are gone, woe will come on the country. I would be willing to adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Bourbon—just say there shall be a county court and leave the whole arrangement of it to the legislature, or I would take the proposition of the gentleman from Green.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is said that to win the world's esteem we must walk side by side with it, and yield to its caprices. I am willing to yield to the report of the committee, but I cannot help thinking of the case of a witness, who was called to swear to the identity of a hog after it was dressed. He saw the hog hanging up with a cob in its mouth, and its bristles off; and, said he, "I cannot swear to it, but I'll be cust if its face is not mighty familiar." This court, I think, will look mighty familiar to the people. All the difference will be as in the case of the hog; the one had the bristles on, and the other had them off, and a cob in its mouth.

Mr. RUDD. There seems to be great objection on the part of some gentlemen, to the bill reported by the committee, chiefly on account of the great expense they suppose will be entailed on the people, by the organization of the county courts, on the plan proposed. I do not entertain that opinion. I think the expense of the system will not be so great as gentlemen imagine, inasmuch as power is conferred upon the legislature to regulate the duties of the judges and magistrates, elected in the several counties, and to fix their fees. I believe the legislature will do what is right and just in the matter, and not lose sight of the fact that the magistracy will have no chance for the sheriffalty under the proposed new system. They will, no doubt, raise the fees from twelve and a half cents to twenty five, and upwards.

No difficulty will be found in obtaining good and competent men to fill the office, by raising the fees to double what the county commissioners now receive. Looking to all the propositions that have been introduced, and some of them are very excellent, still I think, as a whole, that the bill reported by the committee is preferable to any of them.

Mr. BRISTOW. Much of the discussion that has arisen on this subject, has been in consequence of the desire of a few men to amend some of the sections. I desire that the result of our labors on this subject should go to the people recommended by the fact that it is not only the best but the cheapest system we could adopt. It is a simple proposition if we could divest ourselves of the prejudice we may have in regard to the justices of the peace. I heard this remark from some one: "I am not willing to cut off so large and respectable a body of men as the magistracy." Does that apply to what we are doing? Surely not. We cut off all alike. All will have to obtain their offices under the new constitution, and all offices will be open to be contended for.

The simple inquiry is, how shall we provide a tribunal to do the business of the county; and the proposition in the report is, that the county may select three men to do it. Some say, let there be one man. I am utterly opposed to that. Can one man settle all the questions which may come up? Surely not. Three is a compromise between extremes. Gentlemen say three is not enough to lay the levy. We provide that the legislature may call a court to do this. As to the expense, I think three men can be found in each county who will serve in this court for nothing. There are men who would serve voluntarily in transacting the business of the county court, who would not act as magistrates. There are men on this floor who will do the business, and do it well, without compensation.

It is said by some, that the nomination will be made by a clique about the towns for the purpose of securing the offices. Their compensation will not be very high, if they are paid at all, and of course there will be little inducement held out to such men as would compose the cliques referred to. If there is danger that the towns will have all the offices, let the county be divided into districts, and require that no two shall be from the same district. We shall save money to the counties by the organization of the court, as recommended by the committee. Heretofore individuals of the magistracy looked forward to the sheriffalty as a compensation for their services, and often paid $500 for the office. If he could afford to give that to get the office, he can afford to do the work for that amount less than heretofore. We shall save then, upon an average $500 to each county. That being the case, can we be complained of for establishing a costly tribunal?

The people will not complain if the number we fix upon is right, while we leave the selection of the men to them. The number three is the one to which they are accustomed, and the election of that number will not add to the expense. The county will simply say what three persons shall do the business.

I will take occasion to say that the magistrates court is one that cannot be improved, but that they should necessarily form a court for the county, is very strange. The bill provides for the appointment of magistrates in different districts in the county. We do not limit the number, and that has been a cause of complaint. It is difficult to do it. There is so much difference in the population and territory of the different counties. If the number of districts in a county is limited, there will be some inducement to be a magistrate. I have examined this subject with much attention, and can come to no other conclusion than that which I have given. I cannot agree to say that a hundred men in the legislature shall appoint these officers. We know that the legislature is composed of young men. Would it be right to leave this subject with the boys who may come up here to the legislature because we cannot get just what we want? I hope we shall go on and get through with all our business before christmas.

After a few words from Mr. COFFEY, Mr. HARDIN moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered. The yeas and nays were called for, on the motion to reconsider, and being taken they were yeas 49, nays 34.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie), Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Archibald Dixon, Chas-teen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben.

Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Procter, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—49.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, George W. Williams—34.

So the motion was reconsidered.

The question recurred on striking out, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON then moved to amend the section by striking out all after the words "county court," and insert the following:

"The legislature shall regulate by law, the number of judges, their duty and salary."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. T. J. HOOD moved to amend by adding the following by way of compromise:

"Provided, the general assembly may, at any time, abolish the office of associate judges whenever it shall be deemed expedient, and may also associate with said court any or all of the justices of the peace for the transaction of any business."

Mr. WOODSON moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered.

The amendment of the gentleman from Carter was then adopted.

Mr. TALBOTT desired to offer the following as a substitute for the entire section:

"There shall be established in each county now, or which hereafter may be erected in this commonwealth, a county court, to consist of all the magistrates in each county, any three of whom may constitute a court for the transaction of business, subject to such modifications and regulations as the general assembly may, from time to time, deem necessary."

The President ruled it out of order, the main question having been ordered.

The section, as amended, was then adopted, yeas 63, nays 22.

YEAS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Jas. H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Wm. C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, L. J. Procter, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Jas. Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Phillip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Jno. Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—63.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Silas Woodson—22.

The second, third, fourth, and fifth sections were adopted without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The judges of the county court shall be elected by the qualified voters in each county, for the term of four years, and shall continue in office until their successors shall be duly qualified, and shall receive such compensation for their services as may be provided by law."

"SEC. 3. At the first election after the adoption of this constitution, the three judges shall be elected at the same time, but the associate judges, first elected, shall hold their offices for only two years, so that, thereafter, the election of the presiding judge, and that of the associate judges, will not occur at the same time."

"SEC. 4. No person shall be eligible to the office of presiding or associate judge of the county court, unless he be a citizen of the United States, over twenty one years of age, and a resident of the county in which he shall be chosen, one year next preceding the election."

"SEC. 5. The jurisdiction of the county court shall be regulated by law; and, until changed, shall be the same now vested in the county courts of this state."

The sixth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The several counties in the state shall be laid off into districts of convenient size, as the general assembly may, from time to time, direct. Two justices of the peace shall be elected in each district, by the qualified voters therein, for the term of four years each, whose jurisdiction shall be co-extensive with the county; no person shall be eligible as a justice of the peace unless he be a citizen of the United States, twenty one years of age, and a resident of the district in which he may be a candidate."

Mr. IRWIN moved to strike out "four" and insert "two," as the number of years for which the justices of the peace shall be elected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAVANAUGH moved to amend the section by inserting the following proviso:

"Provided, That no county shall have less than six, nor more than twelve justices, exclusive of cities."

After a few words in explanation from Messrs. KAVANAUGH, McHENRY, C. A. WICKLIFFE, WOODSON, and CHAMBERS—

Mr. PROCTOR moved the previous question, under the operation of which the amendment was rejected, and the section adopted.

The seventh section was adopted as follows, without amendment:

"Sec. 7. Judges of the county court, and justices of the peace, shall be conservators of the peace. They shall be commissioned by the governor. County and district officers shall vacate their offices by removal from the district or county in which they shall be appointed. The legislature shall provide, by law, the mode and manner of conducting and making due returns of all elections of judges of the county court and justices of the peace, and for determining contested elections, and provide the mode of filling vacancies in these offices."

The eighth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 8. Judges of the county courts and justices of the peace shall be subject to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to appeal to the court of appeals; and, upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant."

Mr. HARDIN moved to amend by inserting after "misfeasance," in the third line, "or wilful neglect in the discharge of their official duties."

After a brief explanation, in which Messrs. HARDIN, BRISTOW, DAVIS, and C. A. WICKLIFFE, took part, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GHOLSON moved to strike out the words "to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to appeal to the court of appeals; and, upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant," and insert the following: "To be removed from office by a resolution of the general assembly, passed by two thirds of each house. The cause or causes for such removal shall be entered at large upon the journal of each house."

He said the section as it now stood created unjust and invidious distinctions between the circuit and county judges, and he for one would never tolerate it by his vote.

The judges of the county courts and justices of the peace, he presumed, would be as high-minded and as honorable gentlemen as the circuit judges. Their characters, at least, it would be admitted, were as dear to them as that of the circuit judges or any other men. It was argued that the circuit judges were subject to indictment—that they would be liable to petty annoyances from malevolent persons. If this was an argument against allowing the circuit judge to be indicted at home, did it not operate with tenfold force against the indictment of an ignorant justice of the peace? A provision had just been adopted allowing them, in effect, to be indicted for their ignorance. He regarded the sending of a circuit judge off to Frankfort, away from both the witnesses and the injured party to be tried, while the humble individual, as a justice of the peace, was forced into a trial within the reach, perhaps at the door, of both. It is an outrageous and invidious distinction.

Again, he repeated, he wanted all to stand upon a level; and in behalf of his constituents, he protested against unjust, unreasonable, and anti-republican distinctions between the judicial officers of the country.

Mr. THOMPSON said he would vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Ballard, because he thought the judges of the court of appeals and the circuit court ought to be removed in the same way as the report of the committee recommended in reference to the county court judges, for dereliction of duty. He would be even willing to extend the report of the committee so as to cover the whole ground.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE would vote for the amendment to save the judges of the county courts from the annoyance to which they would otherwise be subjected.

Mr. MAYES said he would vote against the amendment, because he did not like the idea of having a judge brought all the way to Frankfort, to answer for any dereliction of duty that he might be charged with.

Mr. DUNAVAN moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered.

The yeas and nays were called for on the adoption of the amendment, and being taken were, yeas 25, nays 55.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Benjamin Copelin, Milford Elliott, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, James M. Lackey, John H. McHenry, Thos. P. Moore, Elijah F. Nuttall, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Squire Turner, Jno. L. Waller, Jno. Wheeler, C. A. Wickliffe, Robt. N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—25.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, Alfred Boyd, Thos. D. Brown, Charles Chambers, Wm. Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Green Forrest, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thos. J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The ninth section was read and adopted as follows:

"Sec. 9. The general assembly may provide, by law, that the justices of the peace in each county shall sit at the court of claims and assist in laying the county levy and making appropriations only."

Mr. RUDD offered the following as an additional section:

"Sec. 10. When any city or town shall have a separate representation, such city or town, and the county in which it is located, may have such separate municipal courts, and executive and ministerial officers, as the general assembly may, from time to time, provide."

After a few words from Mr. PRESTON, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LISLE now offered his substitute for the entire article as follows:

"ARTICLE —.

"Sec. 1 There shall be established in each county which now is, or may hereafter be erected within this commonwealth, a county court, which shall consist of justices of the peace, until otherwise directed by law."

"Sec. 2. The several counties in this state shall be laid off into districts of convenient size, as the general assembly may, from time to time, direct. Justices of the peace shall be elected in each district, by the qualified voters therein, for the term of four years, whose jurisdiction shall be co-extensive with the county."

"Sec. 3. Justices of the peace shall be conservators of the peace. They shall be commissioned by the governor. The legislature shall provide, by law, the mode and manner of conducting and making due returns of all elections of justices of the peace, and for determining contested elections, and for filling vacancies in their offices."

"Sec. 4. The jurisdiction of the county court, and of justices of the peace, shall be regulated by law, and until changed, shall remain the same that it now is."

"Sec. 5. Justices of the peace shall be subject to indictment or presentment for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, in such mode as may be prescribed by law, subject to an appeal to the court of appeals, and upon conviction, their offices shall become vacant."

Mr. McCLURE called for the yeas and nays, and being taken they were, yeas 33, nays 49.

YEAS.—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas W. Lisle, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Mewcum, Hugh Newell, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael, L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Robert N. Wickliffe—33.

NAYS.—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin

J. Procter, Ira Root, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—49.

So the substitute was rejected.

LOUISVILLE CHANCERY COURT.

On the motion of Mr. HARDIN, the convention resumed the consideration of the section in relation to the Louisville chancery court.

When this section was last before the convention it was amended by the insertion of a proviso to render the marshal ineligible for a succeeding term. It now, therefore, stood as follows:

"Sec. —. The Louisville chancery court shall exist under this constitution, subject to repeal, and its jurisdiction to enlargement and modification by the legislature. The chancellor shall have the same qualifications as a circuit court judge, and the clerk of said court as a clerk of a circuit court, and the marshal of said court as a sheriff; and the legislature shall provide for the election of the chancellor, clerk, and marshal of said court, at the same time that the judge and clerk of the circuit court are elected for the county of Jefferson, and they shall hold their offices for the same time: Provided, That the marshal of said court shall be ineligible for a succeeding term."

Mr. KELLY withdrew a pending amendment which he offered, when the section was last under consideration.

The section was amended on the motion of Mr. THOMPSON, by the insertion of the words "by the qualified voters within its jurisdiction," after the word "election," and before the words "of the chancellor, clerk, and marshal."

The section was adopted without further amendment.

Mr. PRESTON offered an additional section, as follows:

Sec. —. That the city court of Louisville, the Lexington city court, and all other police courts established in any city or town, shall remain until otherwise directed by law, with their present powers and jurisdictions, and the judges, clerks, and marshals of such courts, shall have the same qualifications, and shall be elected by the qualified voters of such cities or towns, at the same time, and in the same manner, and hold their offices for the same term as county judges, clerks, and marshals, respectively, and shall be liable to removal in the same manner.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE moved to amend by adding the following:

"The general assembly may vest judicial powers for police purposes in the mayors of cities and towns."

The amendment was agreed to, and the section, as amended, was adopted.

The articles on the court of appeals, the circuit courts, the county courts, and the Louisville chancery court, were then referred to the committee on revision and arrangement.

COMMITTEE ON APPORTIONMENT.

The President announced the following as the committee on the apportionment, under the resolution adopted a few days since, on the motion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE:

Messrs. Apperson, Garrard, Dixon, Irwin, Desha, G. W. Johnston, Kelly, James, Waller, and Machen.

MORNING, EVENING, AND NIGHT SESSIONS.

Mr. MAYES submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the convention will hereafter hold night sessions, commencing at seven and a half o'clock P. M.

After a brief conversation on the propriety of substituting night sessions for the present evening sessions,

Mr. MACHEN moved to lay the resolution on the table.

The yeas and nays were then called for, and were—yeas 42, nays 39.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, James S. Crisman, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Grey, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—42.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, John D. Morris, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, George W. Williams—39.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

EVENING SESSION.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The convention proceeded to the consideration of the article concerning the executive department.

The first and second sections were adopted without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 1. The supreme executive power of the commonwealth, shall be vested in a chief magistrate, who shall be styled the governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky.

"SEC. 2. The governor shall be elected for the term of four years, by the citizens entitled to suffrage, at the time and places where they shall respectively vote for representatives. The person having the highest number of votes shall be governor; but if two or more shall be equal and highest in votes, the election shall be determined by lot, in such manner as the legislature may direct.

The third section was read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The governor, shall be ineligible for the succeeding four years after the expiration of the term for which he shall have been elected."

Mr. KELLY. As the necessity for ineligibility does not now exist, inasmuch as we have stripped the executive of all patronage, I am willing to give him a chance for a re-election. I therefore move to strike out the section.

The question was taken by yeas and nays, on the call of Mr. PRICE, and the convention refused to strike out—yeas 27, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Hood, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson, John J. Thurman, Robert N. Wickliffe—27.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, William Bradley, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Crisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—53.

The third section was then adopted.

The fourth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 4. He shall be at least thirty five years of age, and a citizen of the United States, and have been an inhabitant of this state at least six years next preceding his election."

Mr. BOYD moved to strike out the word "five" in the first line.

Mr. KELLY called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GAITHER inquired if it would be in order to move "forty five" instead of "thirty five."

The PRESIDENT. Not until the motion to strike out is disposed of.

The question was then taken and the convention refused to strike out; yeas 16, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, William Cowper, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelly, Willis B. Machen, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson—16.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Polard, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—64.

The fourth section was then adopted.

The fifth section was adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 5. He shall commence the execution of his office on the fourth Tuesday succeeding the day of the commencement of the general election on which he shall be chosen, and shall continue in the execution thereof until the end of four weeks next succeeding the election of his successor, and until his successor shall have taken the oaths, or affirmations, prescribed by this constitution."

The sixth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 6. No member of congress, or person holding any office under the United States, nor minister of any religious society, shall be eligible to the office of governor."

Mr. PRICE moved to strike out the words "nor minister of any religious society."

Mr. WALLER asked that the section might be passed over until Monday. He did it at the request of gentlemen who desired to be heard on the subject.

This was agreed to, and the section was passed over.

The seventh, and eighth sections were read and adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 7. The governor shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which he shall have been elected."

"Sec. 8. He shall be commander-in-chief of the army and navy of this commonwealth, and of the militia, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States; but he shall not command personally in the field, unless he shall be advised so to do by a resolution of the general assembly."

The ninth section was read.

"Sec. 9. The governor shall have the power to fill vacancies that may happen by death, resignation, or otherwise, by granting commissions, which shall expire when such vacancies have been filled according to the provisions of this constitution."

Mr. McHENRY moved to insert the word "have" after the word "vacancies" where it occurs for the second time.

This was agreed to and the section was then adopted.

The tenth section was read as follows:

"Sec. 10. He shall have power to remit fines and forfeitures, grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment. In cases of treason, he shall have power to grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the power of pardoning shall be vested. That whenever the governor shall remit a fine or forfeiture, or grant a reprieve or pardon, he shall enter his reasons for doing so on the records of the secretary of state, in a separate book; and on the requisition of either house of the general assembly, the same shall be laid before them, and published if they deem proper."

Mr. T. J. HOOD. I offer the following amendments to this section.

"In the third line after the word 'impeachment,' insert, 'under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law, in relation to the manner of application.'"

"Also, strike out all after the word 'vested,' in the seventh line, and insert in lieu thereof the following: 'Whenever the governor shall grant a reprieve or pardon, he shall enter his reasons for doing so, on the record of the secretary of state, in a separate book; and shall lay the same before the next general assembly, thereafter, together with the name of the convict, the crime, the sentence, and its date; and such other matters connected with the same, as may be required by law.'"

Mr. T. J. HOOD. Some weeks ago I introduced a resolution before this convention, which was adopted, directing the committee on the executive for the state at large, to inquire into the expediency of imposing such checks and restrictions upon the exercise of the pardoning power, as to prevent its abuse by the governor, under partial or false representations to him, by the friends of the convict or otherwise. And I did so from a firm conviction in my own mind, that this power—this high attribute of sovereignty, which should exist in some form or other, in every civilized government, has, under the general provision of our old constitution, been shamefully imposed upon and abused. That instead of having been a mantle in the hands of the executive, to be thrown over the innocent or unfortunate, to shield and protect them from unmerited suffering, it has too frequently been instrumental in rescuing the guilty murderer from that punishment which the malignity of his crime so richly deserved; that instead of operating in particular cases in mitigation of the rigid rules of law, which must be general in its provisions, and may therefore sometimes be oppressive; it has been instrumental in turning lawless felons loose again upon society, to commit even more daring outrages. And thus, as I conceive, this most important power has been shockingly perverted and abused.

Now, I would not be understood, in any remarks I shall make, as designing to cast any imputation upon the distinguished individual who at present occupies the executive chair in Kentucky—nor indeed upon his predecessors. For I know very well, that the present governor of Kentucky, is incapable of knowingly abusing this, or any other delegated power, through any deliberate design of doing wrong. And I am persuaded that its exercise, not only while in his hands, but also of those who have preceded him, has always sprung from the best feelings of our nature; that it has been prompted by the warm and active sympathies of generous and noble hearts, keenly alive to the sufferings of a fellow man; and perhaps in most instances, the facts and circumstances connected with the case, as laid before the governor, would seem to have warranted his interposition. But while I am ready to concede this much, no gentleman upon this floor I presume, will deny that this high power has been most egregiously imposed upon and abused. And how has this been done? Every delegate here is familiar with the manner in which pardons are procured. No sooner is the sentence of the law pronounced upon an individual—it matters not how horrible may have been the crime—how conclusive the testimony—how honest the jury, or how just the sentence—than we see petitions, with long ex parte statements of the case, circulated by the friends of the convict, for subscribers. This is almost universally the case; unless, indeed, the person be some poor miserable creature, whose poverty or obscurity in life, have drawn around him no prominent or influential friends. And how are signatures to these petitions, filled with exaggerated, and sometimes false statements, procured. One signs it to accommodate a friend; a second, after continued importunity; a third through sympathy; a fourth carelessly, because forsooth, it costs nothing; and others have signed it, a fifth—the wily and desining politician or demagogue—for the purpose of attaching to himself the friends and relations of the convict, for future political purposes, and so on another and another, and often times too, without so much as reading the statements they certify—until a long list of names are procured. These are all then paraded before the governor, as so many worthy and orderly citizens, living in the very community in which the outrage was committed—yet begging for mercy upon the convict, and representing him in the petition they have signed, more in the light of a persecuted saint, than of a guilty felon. And thus the governor is imposed upon, and seduced into the belief that the penalty is severe and ought not to be executed.

But this is not all. In aid of these partial and highly colored statements, the tears and prayers of disconsolate relatives, of bereaved wives and children, begging the life or liberty of a father, a brother, a husband, or a son; in a word, every manifestation of grief or distress that can awaken the sympathies of a generous heart, are called into requisition. Under the accumulated weight of these favorable representations and absorbing influences, what can a governor do? Sir, the man who can resist the soft entreaties and gentle solicitations of a woman, even with a smile upon her lips, must be made of the sternest material; and the man who can refuse the prayers and importunities of a woman in tears, whose heart is wrung with the deepest anguish, and feel no kind sympathy for the sufferer, must be almost a monster. No wonder then that the governor so often yields to these overwhelming influences, and justified by the representations in the petition, turns the felon loose again, and thus robs justice, and the violated laws of the country, of a most appropriate victim. And all this is done too, sir, frequently, without any information on the part of the friends and relatives of those who have so deeply suffered from the crime, and without any knowledge on the part of the governor of those aggravating facts and circumstances connected with the case, which have induced twelve honest jurors, under the solemn obligations of an oath, to consign the guilty wretch to the penitentiary or the scaffold. Such, sir, have been the operations of this high power under the unrestricted provisions of the old constitution; such have been the delusive representations, and the bewildering influences which, though they in no wise expiate the crime, have yet hurried the governor into an abuse of this power; and such must continue to be the case, unless some wholesome checks and restrictions be thrown around its exercise. But I do not desire wholly to destroy this power, nor indeed to embarrass its just and legitimate exercise; for I regard it as a necessary and important power appertaining to all sovereignty, and one which must be confided to some one department of the government or other; and it cannot, in my opinion, be more safely or appropriately entrusted to any other than to the chief magistrate of the state. The necessity of such a power, in all governments, grows out of the imperfections of all human laws, which, as before remarked, must be general, and cannot be so framed as to meet special or unforeseen cases. Besides, it is founded on principles of justice, as well as humanity. For although its exercise may be in some instances a mere act of mercy to the convict; yet cases may arise in which its interposition would be a matter of right and justice, not only to the individual himself, but also to the community in which he lives; and I need but instance the case where an innocent man is about to become the victim of perjury and corruption. In such a case, justice demands that there should be a strong arm somewhere to rescue the unfortunate sufferer. That power I would not destroy or trammel so as to prevent its healthy, vigorous operation. But I would throw about it those checks and guards that would most effectually prevent its abuse, without impairing its usefulness. This end I conceive will be, in some measure, attained by adopting some such provisions as are indicated in my amendments. But if any gentleman will suggest how this may be more certainly accomplished, I will cheerfully abandon these and acquiesce in his propositions.

By my first amendment, I propose inserting after the word "impeachment," in the second line, these words, viz: "under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law, in relation to the manner of application." My object in this is to empower the legislature, by some general laws, to provide means for giving notice of the application, to the citizens of the county in which the trial was had; and also of securing to the governor the most perfect information in reference to the facts of the case, as developed upon the trial, that can be obtained; and thus guarding, as far as possible, the executive from imposition; and the community from surprise.

In my second amendment, I depart somewhat from the provision, as reported by the committee, in making it incumbent upon the executive, whenever a reprieve or pardon shall have been granted, to lay his reasons therefor, together with the name of the convict, the crime, sentence, &c., before the next legislature. The object of this provision is to guard against any wilful or capricious exercise of this power, should any governor be so disposed, and to restrict it to those cases in which some good and sufficient reason could be assigned for the interposition. Besides, sir, I believe the propriety of requiring the governor to assign his reasons, in such cases, is well founded in principle. What is this power? It is a virtual veto on the adjudications of our criminal courts. It is the right to say to these courts, when they are about inflicting the penalty of the law upon one found guilty of its violation, I forbid. If upon the passage of any law by the general assembly, the governor shall interpose his veto, he is required to render a reason for his dissent. Is it requiring too much then of him, when he assumes the right to dispense with established laws, and defeat their enforcement, to require of him to render a reason? I think not. Under the last clause of this amendment, the legislature may require other matters connected with each case, than those already indicated, to be laid before them. The object of this is to deter men from carelessly and inconsiderately signing false or exaggerated statements to the governor, with the view of procuring a pardon. Let men once understand that their names may be published to the country, as certifying the statements contained in such a petition, and they will be much more cautious how they sign them. The result will be that applications will be less frequent, and the governor himself will not be liable to be imposed upon or misled by them.

Mr. DIXON. When the proposition requiring that the governor should keep a book upon which he should spread his reasons for all the pardons that he might grant, was first presented in the committee, it struck me with much force, and I believe we were unanimous in favor of its adoption. Subsequently, however, our action presented a difference of opinion, and I confess I was among those who came to the conclusion that it was improper to engraft such a requisition upon the executive, in the constitution. I think it would subject the governor to a great deal of inconvenience, and that perhaps it would go very far to defeat the exercise of what was intended to be vested in him, the pardoning power itself. Various descriptions of men, it is to be expected, will be chosen governors of the commonwealth, and some will be weak, vacillating, and timid, and some will not. I desire the governor, in granting pardons, to exercise his discretion with an eye single to the real interests of the country, and the justice of the application, and I do not believe all executives we may have will so exercise it, if they shall be required to spread out on a book, in each case, the reasons which influenced their action. This, it will be seen, is required even where the pardon is for the most trivial offences. In almost every instance where a man is convicted of crime, there are two parties, one for, and the other against him, and in the case of a pardon, the party favoring a conviction are always certain to censure the executive for his exercise of that power. The mere spreading out in a book of his reasons therefor, would never satisfy the party in favor of conviction. That there are cases also, where an executive should interpose his clemency, and where he could give no good reason therefor, I am fully satisfied. Without undertaking to designate such a case, I can well understand how one might arise, where the law exacted the full execution of the penalties upon the unfortunate man, and yet which strongly and deservedly appealed to the clemency of the executive, and of the whole country for mercy. Are such unfortunate men to be sacrificed, or the governor to come before the legislature and perhaps have his motives impugned, and his feelings outraged? Is that the intention of my young friend from Carter.

Mr. T. J. HOOD. The gentleman misunderstands me. I do not propose that the authority to exercise this power shall be subject to the control of the legislature. My amendment has reference only to the mode of making applications for pardon, to the governor, and merely authorizes the legislature to call on him, to lay before them the names of the applicants, and the criminal.

Mr. DIXON. Well, then it is in relation to the manner of making the application. By whom is it to be provided that the application shall be made? I know of but one source to whom it should be left, and that is to those who feel an interest in the unfortunate man for whom the pardon is required. If it was to be left to the judge or the jury with their minds prejudiced against him, or to those who desired to see him sacrificed, then the application would never be made. Would the gentleman debar the unfortunate wife, or the still more unfortunate children, from appealing to the executive clemency in behalf of a husband or a father? And if a governor should yield to such solicitations, would he not find a response in the hearts of the whole people of Kentucky? It was for this, among other purposes, that this power of mercy was vested in the governor, and so long as it is exercised, independent of bribery, corruption, or any improper influences, the people will never complain of it. And to prevent anything of that kind, I am willing to go as far as any gentleman. Yet I have never heard of any complaint on the part of the people in that particular. But when the tears of women and children are brought to operate on an executive, let him have the privilege of bearing himself, at least, as a man should do. For my own part, I do not know how I should act, were I an executive, but I agree with my young friend. I do not know that I could withstand the tears of woman or resist her gentle, but all controlling influence, however exerted: for God knows that when they should appeal to me in behalf of an unfortunate husband, or son, or brother, or any other near and dear relative, I do not know whether I could resist them. I might, or I might not. But whether I did or not, I might be reproached for my want of firmness, but never condemned for a lack of those noble and generous feelings of the heart, which give man his elevation above the brute, and approximate him in his nature to the gods. If the pardoning power is to be exercised at all, and it must be, leave it to the discretion of the executive. Let him exercise it in mercy—uncontrolled and unrestrained by anything save his obligations to his country, to himself, and to the unfortunate victim.

"The quality of mercy is not strained,
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blessed—
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes,
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest,
It is an attribute to God himself—
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice."

Mr. DAVIS. When the subject was in committee, I, myself, was in favor of making this provision a little stronger than it is, if we could have done so with proper respect to the chief executive officer of the government. I will read, before I set down, a proposition which I will offer as an amendment to the section under consideration, whether the amendment proposed by my young friend from Carter, (Mr. T. J. Hood,) be adopted or not. The power we are about to regulate is one of the highest exercised in the government. It is no less than the power to dispense with the criminal and penal laws of the country by the governor. We know—at least I have heard such complaints ever since my boyhood—that the exercise of this power under our constitution, has been subject to some abuse, and some considerable abuse too. I do not know how the present executive has exercised this power to remit fines and forfeitures and to grant pardons, but in a single instance, and that through publications in the newspapers; but for twenty five years I have heard frequent and constant complaints of the abuse of this power, and especially in regard to the remission of fines and forfeitures; and I imagine that no gentleman will contend that in that respect, at least, the power has not been abused and considerably so, within the last twenty five years, in the commonwealth of Kentucky. I suppose it is the business and the duty of every gentleman here to reflect the wishes and feelings of his constituents in relation to constitutional reforms, so far as he can consistently do it. Well, I do know that in my section of country this has been a subject of frequent complaint, and I even heard charges made against successive executives for the free and unnecessary use of this function of remitting fines and forfeitures. I have heard a very strong desire for a remedy that will be efficient in itself, and, at the same time, proper and respectful to the executive; if such an one can be devised, and I consider it the duty of the convention to interpose such a remedy. Now it is the business and the duty of the inferior courts to execute the criminal and penal laws, and when they are in the course of executing these laws, the executive interposes, and of his own will arrests their functions and prevents them. This is a high power, important to the public welfare, and in the proper exercise of which the executive ought to be held to a perfect responsibility. He ought never to interpose this power, in my judgment, without a reason, and a sufficient one; and I think that when he does exercise it, he ought to be required to give his reasons to the court with whose functions he interferes. I propose to add to the end of the section these words:

Amend the tenth section by adding these words: "and the said governor shall state, specifically, and cause to be certified to the court rendering judgment for any fine, forfeiture, or conviction of crime, for which any remission, reprieve, or pardon, the reasons upon which he may have granted such remission, reprieve, or pardon."

When the governor, by the exercise of this constitutional function, interferes, and in fact, says to the inferior court, you shall not execute the criminal law, it seems to me he ought to have a good reason for doing so. And it would be but respectful to the co-ordinate branch of the government, the judiciary, that he should give to them the reasons which induced him so to interpose. Now, my amendment would require the executive to state these reasons at length, and to communicate them to the court. What would be the effect? I take it for granted that no executive of this state, having a due regard to his own self-respect, the high dignity of the station he fills, and the interest of the community, would ever interpose and arrest a judgment, under such circumstances, without sufficient reason, and without being willing to give it to the public. It seems to me, that such a requirement would act as a check upon the free and negligent use of this power. I do not believe it has ever been corruptly exercised in this state, but it has been certainly with great frequency, and without due examination of the facts of the case, by the executive. I think this mode of exercising that power, will be prevented, in some degree at least, if the executive should be required to assign to the courts the reasons for his interposing this extraordinary power. I am not myself opposed to the amendments offered by my talented young friend from Carter, (Mr. T. J. Hood.) I will vote for them, but whether they are adopted or not, it seems to me there ought to be some check at least, upon the power to remit fines and forfeitures, and that the governor ought to be held to some responsibility which would make him more chary in its exercise. I should be gratified if some amendment should be offered, more perfect in itself, and more respectful to the officer, than the one I have indicated.

Mr. HARDIN. I am against the amendment of the gentleman from Carter, as well as against the larger portion of the section itself. What is meant by "such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law, in relation to the manner of application?" The gentleman (Mr. Hood) says, it means only that the legislature shall prescribe that the names of the men who sign the petition shall be published, and he says further, that the governor is frequently imposed upon by the statement of things in those petitions that are not true. The objection I have to the amendment is, that it gives to the legislature the power to take away the right of pardoning entirely, if they choose. Suppose they were to prescribe that the governor never should grant a pardon unless upon the application of the judge who convicted the man, and suppose, by chance, we should get a Jeffries on the bench, who delights in blood; or suppose they should pass a law, that the governor never should pardon a man, unless both the judge and the jury who convicted him, should unanimously sign the petition. Would it not be taking away, to a great extent, the pardoning power? A thousand instances may be enumerated, where circumstances, in the case of a convicted person, address themselves strongly to the clemency and mercy of the executive, which are not and cannot be presented before a court and jury. A youth, for instance, of from twelve to fifteen years of age is persuaded by some one else to commit a crime. Well, you cannot get the evidence of that fact in before a jury, and yet you could before the governor, and it would be a strong appeal to his mercy. Should not the friends of the convicted, in such a case, be permitted to sign a petition for the executive clemency? Suppose a judge and jury are about to hang a man, or send him to the penitentiary, in open and manifest violation of law and fact; is there to be no pardoning power any where? Clearly there should be. Are we not all agreed, that the governor should have this power? Yes. Why then say that the legislature may take it away from him?

My friend, (Mr. Davis,) says in relation to remitting fines and forfeitures, that the governor, out of courtesy, should assign reasons therefor to the court below. A magistrate imposes a fine of one dollar, and the governor, choosing to remit it, must, out of courtesy to that magistrate, lost his dignity should be offended, give him the reasons why! A petty court martial fines a man improperly, and the governor remitting it, why he must certify to them the reasons therefor! What is to grow out of this? Can any action be taken on the subject by the court when they have got the reasons? No. The governor then is to be obliged to write out and furnish them with his reasons, merely as an act of courtesy to the magistrate, and to be put into his pocket, I suppose. I concur with my friend that the governor is too often misled in the exercise of this power, but we must vest this pardoning power somewhere. In the government of the United States it is vested in the president; in the government of each and every state of this Union it is vested in the executive of the state government; in Great Britain, in the king; and in every power in Europe it is in the hands of the executive department of the government. We have left it to the governor from the formation of our constitution down to the present day, and we do not intend to take it away from him. Why then subject him to the humiliation of sending to a little petty court the reasons why he has remitted a fine? A man is fined, for swearing, five shillings an oath, or for any other of the hundred little offences, and the reasons are to be gravely spread out in a book for public inspection or the satisfaction of the courts! I am against such a requirement. What is to grow out of it? Nothing that I can conceive of, except it will, as said by the gentleman from Carter, expose the man who signs the petitions and certifies to a false statement of facts. I acknowledge there is a great deal of sense in that suggestion, but at the same time no good can grow out of it. I am for leaving the power as it existed under the present constitution. And rather than deprive the friends of the convicted of the right to petition, I prefer to submit to occasional abuses of the power, not intentional, on the part of the governor. It is better to submit to that than to degrade and humble that elevated officer.

Mr. NUTTALL. This report is from the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, and I wish to place myself in a proper attitude before the house, having pledged myself to support the reports of committees unless there should be an obvious necessity for departing from them. On the present occasion, however, I shall be prepared to vote against this requirement, that the reasons of the governor shall be spread out in a book. I shall not make any motion to strike out myself, but if it should be made I shall vote for it most cheerfully.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I move to strike out the whole of the latter part of the section.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order until the pending amendments are disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. The reason which induced me to suggest the amendment, was not as a matter of courtesy to the petty tribunals which are authorized by the laws of the land, to impose fines, but that the governor should not exercise the power of remitting fines and forfeitures or pardon without a reason. Now, he may do it with or without a reason. Well, if we require him to assign a reason to the court which has exercised jurisdiction, he must have one upon which he is to act. It is for the purpose of having the security of a reason for his important action in matters of this kind, that I would require him to assign a reason for the act. And I would require it to be transmitted to the court which imposed the fine, or exercised their functions of judicial power, in order that his act of remission or pardon, and reprieve, shall be made public, and not only that, but made public too that he had a reason, and a sufficient one so to act. The effect would be, in my judgment, to make the governor amenable to public opinion and sentiment. I merely want some provision that will require him to act upon a reason, and that a sufficient one. This then would be some restraint upon the abuses of power. The gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) admits that the power has been abused, and if so, I desire a remedy so far as one can be devised which is proper in itself, and the only one I can think of interposing would be to make the governor amenable to public opinion, by having the reason for his action spread before the community. And I think that would be effected by the proposition I have suggested, that he be required to give to the court, the reasons upon which he has acted. Now, I ask my friend from Nelson, if there is not a great difference between a man's doing an act and being clothed with power upon which he may act without reason, and a case where he is required to state the reasons which influenced him? In the latter case would he not be more likely to act upon wise, good, and sufficient reasons than in the former?

Mr. NEWELL. As a member of the committee who made this report, it may be proper for me to say a few words. I am in favor of the report of the committee. I would be as far as any other gentleman in this house from calling upon the executive to do any thing that would be degrading to his station; and I am yet to be convinced that merely calling upon him to give a reason for his action would be degrading him. Now this is a veto power above all vetoes, that you now place in the hands of your executive. It is a veto power over all your courts and their decisions, to be exercised without a why or wherefore. I am willing to confer the power in all its strength, as now, but I have always believed that every man in power ought to be willing to give a reason for his action. It is said that every man ought to be able to give a reason for the hope that is within him. And is it degrading to the executive then, to ask him to give a reason why he reverses the decisions of the courts? I think it would be neither inconvenient nor degrading to that high functionary to give such a reason. And I think it would be a restraint upon the improper or negligent exercise of the power. He would feel it incumbent on him to reflect and to examine, unless there were good reasons to justify him, before he granted a pardon. My friend from Henderson said, if he was an executive, he could not resist a woman any how. I apprehend it would be perfectly satisfactory to the country if he would give that as a reason for his action, and I have no doubt he would be willing to give it. I am for the report just as it stands.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to my friend that I should be very happy to leave it to the community, if I had any such reasons. I repeat, I do not see how I could resist a woman beseeching me and pouring out her tears in behalf of some near and dear relative, unless I had a heart of stone and was less than a man. I might turn away and refuse the pardon if the necessities of justice required it, still I should feel for the unfortunate woman as a man should.

Mr. NEWELL. I do not doubt what the gentleman says, and I think he would be able to justify himself by offering it as a good reason for the exercise of the executive clemency.

Mr. DIXON. If so, then there appears to be no difference between us.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If either of these gentlemen should be governor, from what they have said, we may expect that no married man will be hung or punished in Kentucky, during their continuance in office. I am against the amendment and the whole of the latter clause of the section. The exercise of the pardoning power is a high exercise of sovereignty, for I suppose that all will admit that it is an exercise of sovereign power delegated to the chief magistracy representing the whole state. It is not usual in government to ask the sovereign people to give a reason for their acts. If I could see anything that was to grow out of the requisition that these reasons shall be recorded in the executive office, or reported to the legislature, by which the error the governor had committed was to be corrected, and the man pardoned was to be returned to punishment, then I might be induced, under the apprehensions of abuses that have been or might be practiced, to acquiesce in the necessity of requiring this provision. No such purpose, however, is intended or expected. We delegate to the executive this high sovereign power of pardoning offences, and the very term itself presupposes guilt in the individual pardoned, and the exercise of mercy towards the offender for the violation of the law. And being thus an exercise of mercy, delegated by the sovereign people to their agent, the executive, what better reasons could be given by a governor than to say he exercised it out of mercy to the offender and violator of the law. Suppose a man condemned to be hung, and though his guilt has been admitted, and there is no doubt that the man has forfeited his life under the laws, the executive should say, I pardon him because I think him a fit subject of mercy. Is that not a good reason for the exercise of the pardoning power? What good is there then to result from requiring these reasons to be entered upon an executive journal? What are these reasons, generally speaking? Why, that a man has been justly convicted, but that he has borne a good character, and it is his first offence, or that the collection of the fine would distress his family and ruin him, and that the governor, therefore, believing it to be a case for the exercise of mercy, pardons the offender or remits the fine. I admit there have been some complaints against the exercise of this power.

I have never heard much complaint against any executive for pardoning men condemned to the forfeiture of their lives, or for turning men out of the penitentiary, except recently. That was a case of which I know nothing, of some man who was convicted of negro stealing. We have heard complaints that our penal laws have been somewhat nullified by the executive pardons. If it is wrong, then take away the power altogether; but as an independent co-ordinate branch of the government, if you give him the power at all, leave him to its free exercise, without attempting to alarm him like a scared child, with threats of the influence of public opinion on his acts. Do not deter a man from the exercise of this high and merciful prerogative—yes I call it the heavenly prerogative of government—where his judgment and feeling would prompt him so to do, lest he should be called up by a resolution of a member of the legislature, and his motives arraigned and his feelings insulted. During the short time I was called upon to administer this government as lieutenant governor, I found, I admit, the exercise of this power to be no pleasant task. I know something of the mode and manner in which it is exercised. The most numerous instances of its exercise by myself, was in the case of men just before the expiration of their term of service in the penitentiary, who had given high evidence of reformation. And I have had several instances given to me where such a restoration to the rights of citizenship has proved beneficial to society and to the man himself, and where he has gone home and become a reformed man. If we intend to give to the governor this pardoning power, let him exercise it on the high responsibility he owes to his God and to his country. Do not alarm him by requiring the reasons for his action, to be dragged before the public. I know but two instances where I was called upon to exercise this power, that would have produced any difficulty in my mind. One was a man who was sentenced to be hung for murder, and inasmuch as I believed that the sentence was a harsh one, and that the highest offence for which he ought to have been convicted was manslaughter, I pardoned him. And I only deprived the grave of its victim for a few months, for he died within that time of consumption. The other was the case of a man from the southern part of the state who was sentenced to ten years imprisonment. He served for three or four years, and was lingering with disease, and on a full investigation of the case, being satisfied that the offence was atoned for, even if it was of the degree charged, I pardoned him. These are individual cases. What I object to is, that when you clothe a department of the government with power to act, that there should be any interference with the free exercise of that power. We might just as well require the legislature to spread out upon their journals the reasons for every law that they enact, as to require the executive to spread out the reasons for his action upon his record.

Mr. T. J. HOOD. I do not wish to protract this debate, but it seems to me that both the gentleman from Henderson and the senior gentleman from Nelson, have misconstrued my amendments, and misunderstood my remarks. Those amendments do not contemplate an abridgement of the right of petition as to any one; nor did I advocate any such abridgement in my remarks. For I venture to say that neither of those gentlemen more thoroughly recognizes the sacredness of that right than I do, and I trust it will be guaranteed to every citizen in the country, in a peaceable way, to meet together with his neighbors, and petition for the redress of any grievances. I would not impair that right, but perfect it by subjecting men at the bar of public opinion for its abuse. But the gentleman from Henderson treats the amendment as though every application for a pardon under it, would have to be made in conformity to a special act of the legislature in relation to that particular case. If he will but examine the amendment, he will perceive that nothing of the kind is contemplated, but that it merely confers upon the legislature the power to provide general laws upon the subject, which may be altered or amended from time to time, so as to meet and remedy the evils complained of. Again, both of these gentlemen speak of the amendments as though they contained provisions new and unprecedented in constitutions. If they will but examine the fifth section of the fourth article of the constitution of New York, they will see that the governor's power to grant pardons, &c., is "subject to such regulations as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons." Also, that "he shall annually communicate to the legislature each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, &c." The sixth section of the fifth article of the constitution of Wisconsin authorizes the governor, "to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, relative to the manner of applying for pardons."

Also "he shall annually communicate to the legislature, such cases of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, &c." The thirty third section of the constitution of Maryland, authorizes the governor to grant pardons, &c., "for any crime, except in such cases where the law shall otherwise direct." This is more general, and goes much further than even my amendment. The fourth section of the fourth article of the constitution of Virginia, gives him the same power, except where "the law shall otherwise particularly direct." The eleventh section of the fourth article of the constitution of Alabama qualifies the power by these words: "under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by law." The eleventh section of the third article of the constitution of Florida, qualifies it in the very same words, and the eleventh section of the fifth article of the constitution of Arkansas, also uses the same restrictive words. And it may be that the constitutions of other states use some such qualifications upon the exercise of this power. So, sir, my amendments are neither new in themselves nor unprecedented. And I have yet to learn of any of those hardships or extreme cases, which the gentleman's imagination has conjured up, having actually occurred in any of the above named states.

Mr. BROWN asked for a division of the question on the two amendments.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays on the call of Mr. STEVENSON, on the first amendment of Mr. Hood, and it was rejected, yeas 8, nays 73, as follows:

YEAS—Richard Apperson, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, Richard D. Gholson, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Johnson Price, George W. Williams—8.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbot, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—73.

The question was taken on the second amendment of Mr. Hood, and it also was rejected.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL moved to strike out the last clause of the section as follows:

"That whenever the governor shall remit a fine or forfeiture, or grant a reprieve or pardon, he shall enter his reasons for doing so on the records of the secretary of state, in a separate book; and on the requisition of either house of the general assembly, the same shall be laid before them, and published if they deem proper."

Mr. TRIPLET. I introduced that resolution, and I will give my reasons for doing so; but at the same time I will remark that I do not feel the slightest interest in it. Having been induced to believe, from conversation I had with some elderly gentlemen, that it was important, I proposed it. But while I do not now think it very important, still it ought not to be mutilated. Gentlemen seem to think it was intended as a reflection on the governors. The real object is entirely the reverse. It is for the purpose of giving the governor an opportunity to disabuse himself by giving his reasons. I know an instance now, so far as a man can know what is within the breast of another, where the world is now uninformed, and where if they could be informed, the reasons would be perfectly satisfactory. I understood the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Wickliffe,) to base his argument upon the ground that the pardoning power was a prerogative of the executive.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I said the pardoning power was an attribute of sovereignty, not a prerogative of the governor, for he has none. I deny to the executive any prerogative. Sovereignty is seldom called on for reasons.

Mr. TRIPLET. That is it precisely. Sovereignty is not to be called on for reasons. It is the attribute of the sovereignty of the people in the person of the governor. But sovereignty itself ought to have reasons for its acts. It is a plain proposition, that the pardoning power in the governor is an act of mercy. There is this difference between an act of mercy when exercised by a human being, and the supreme God. The Deity may exercise that mercy, without giving his reasons to man, but tell me what possible reason can be given why the governor, who depends on the public for his office, and who is responsible to them, when a wife kneels to him and asks him to spare the life of a husband, should not state the reason why he exercises mercy, if he does so. Suppose a case comes before him, like the one stated by the gentleman from Nelson, where evidently there has been a hasty or harsh sentence, if the reason is truly made known to the people of Kentucky, will they not sanction his conduct? Is it not placing it on the ground that the governor is more merciful in his conduct than the people are in their feelings? Let the governor enter his true reasons, and the people will not censure him. But it is not necessary that the reason should be printed. They are not universally to be laid before the legislature. It is only when they are called for. It is fair to be presumed the legislature will not call for them, except on extraordinary occasions, and that they will not publish them unless they think them so bad that the people will not approve them. If they are so bad, the people ought to know them.

Mr. HARDIN. I am glad the gentleman from Bracken introduced this amendment. If he had not done it I should. I understand that in a monarchy the power is all in the king, and the people have none except what is ceded, and hence there are frequent controversies. The people claim power as conceded, which the king denies. The king claims his power as a prerogative, for he is the fountain of power, and the people have what he grants and no more. In a republic, the fountain of all power is in the people, and the officers have as much power as the people grant, and no more. What would be a prerogative in the king, is power in the people. The people have chosen to grant the power of mercy to the governor. That prerogative must be some where, either in the legislature, the judiciary, or the executive department. If the people could meet as they did in Athens, when they banished a man, the same power that met to ostracise him could meet and recall him again. But the people cannot meet here. They are obliged to delegate to some one department of the government. The United States government delegates to the executive, and the state governments all do the same. It must be there. Well, if it is there, I want to know why in the name of God you call on a man for reasons when it amounts to nothing. It is enough that he feels he ought to grant it.

My friend, (Mr. Davis,) says the Stuart family, when on the throne of Great Britain, rendered themselves odious by the too frequent use of the pardoning power. That became an abuse in their hands. That is not the fact. James the first, incurred great odium for not pardoning Sir Walter Raleigh. Charles the first was detested for signing the death warrant of his minister, the Earl of Strafford. Charles the second was equally detested because he let Lord Stafford suffer death by the perjuries of Titus Oates, and James the second was equally abhorred because he did not save the life of his deluded nephew, the Duke of Monmouth. The real history of those monarchs is, they were tyrants—unfeeling monsters. Charles the first brought his head to the block because, under the pretence of ship-money, he attempted to dispense with parliament and levy a tax on the people without their consent. James the second was compelled to abdicate his throne and fly his kingdom because he attempted to dispense with acts of parliament.

There was a case of a man who was a moulder in a furnace in Bullitt, charged with robbery. Both the parties were drunk, and the story was, that one knocked down the other and robbed him. My colleague was sitting by and I acted for the defence, and he was satisfied the story was a drunken lie from beginning to end. The judge did not view the case as I did, and he sentenced him to prison.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I recollect that case. The trial and conviction took place a few weeks before I was called upon to administer the government. I saw, and was satisfied, that the offence of which he was charged was the result of a drunken frolic, and the testimony upon which he was convicted was false; he was a poor devil and had no friends, and I exercised an act of mercy in pardoning him. I was not concerned in the cause.

Mr. PROCTOR moved the previous question, and it was ordered.

The yeas and nays being demanded on striking out, they were—yeas 52, nays 30.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chas-teen T. Dunavan, Green Forrest, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—52.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Milford Elliott, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thos. J. Hood, Peter Lashbrooke, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—30.

So the amendment was adopted.

The tenth section, as amended, was then adopted.

The convention then adjourned.

COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. Triplett's remarks on his amendment to the report on the county courts, delivered on Tuesday, the 27th ult., contained some inaccuracies, which we correct, and republish them in their corrected form, as follows:

MR. TRIPLETT. I believe when the house adjourned yesterday evening, I had just offered the following amendment as an additional section:

"Whenever the circuit court judge, before whom a criminal or penal prosecution is had, shall entertain doubts on any point of law which shall be decided by him during such trial, he shall have the power of adjourning over such doubtful points of law, to be decided by the court of appeals, and in the meantime may delay the execution of the sentence in such case, until the court of appeals have decided such doubtful points of law; or the accused may apply to a judge of the court of appeals for a writ of error, (in any criminal or penal prosecution,) which may be granted by him, and shall act as a supersedeas to the judgment of the court in which the trial was had, until the opinion of the court of appeals, on the questions involved, shall be entered in the circuit court, which shall be governed thereby."

I was somewhat surprised to find, after the adjournment of the house last evening, that a misapprehension prevailed among members, in reference to the character of my amendment. It contains two propositions, that are perfectly simple in their character. The first is, that when a judge of a circuit court tries a case, and entertains a doubt on a point of law, he may carry the point of law to the court of appeals. Now, what will be the result of that proposition? Where a point of law is such that a judge entertains serious doubts, and is unwilling that the life or liberty of the accused shall be lost, without first having the decision of the court of appeals, he may adjourn the case to that tribunal. One answers, it very seldom happens. If so, then the remedy for the evil is not frequently called into operation. What is the next point? It will immediately strike the mind of every thinking man in this house, that there is a possibility that the counsel for the accused may be satisfied that there ought to be a doubt raised—that the point of law is not well settled. Take, for instance, the case stated here a day or two ago, of one judge having decided that a negro was entitled to benefit of clergy, whilst another judge decided, in a similar case, that he was not. Now, one of them was wrong, and the other right. A case as strong as this I met with myself.

In 1825-6, the legislature of Kentucky passed a law as important as ever was enacted by them. That it should be no cause of challenge or exception to a venire man, that he had formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, on mere rumor, without having conversed with the parties, or the witnesses. I know, and I so stated at the time, that in two adjoining districts, one circuit judge decided this law to be constitutional, and it was our duty to obey it, while in the other the circuit judge pronounced the law to be unconstitutional, and he would disobey it, and compel us to do so. Is that law important or not? Nothing can be more important than that a man shall be tried by an impartial jury, and the question arises, what constitutes impartiality in a venire man, before he is sworn on the jury? And one circuit court judge decides the question one way, and another a different and directly opposite way. If the court of appeals were once to decide this controverted question, under the plan proposed in my amendment, their decision would be obligatory on all the circuit courts, and we should have uniformity of decision on this vital question throughout the state.

I could go on and give instances innumerable of the uncertainty of the law in criminal cases, in this state, but those that I have enumerated are sufficient to answer my purpose, and show forth the evil I wish to remedy, by obtaining uniformity of decision in criminal cases, as well as correct and legal decisions. We who are now in this hall may not derive any benefit from it, as it must take some years before the present existing evils can be remedied, but our children and our children's children may. At the present time there is no settled criminal jurisprudence in Kentucky; but if my amendment is adopted, it will go far to secure that desirable object. There will grow up by degrees a settled, permanent criminal jurisprudence, arising from the decisions of the court of appeals in this state, on all the important points of criminal law, that will be sent up or carried up, either by the circuit court judges themselves, or the accused—until by and by, we shall have here what has been the glory and honor of England throughout her whole land, a permanent and intelligible criminal code of laws. How did her criminal code grow up? All of her acts of parliament in relation to crimes, now in force, may be condensed in one volume; while the decisions of her courts expounding and explaining these acts of parliament, which form in reality her criminal code, are contained in volume on volume. The criminal law of England, previous to 1776, has been rendered obligatory in this state by acts of assembly, but for a time the decisions of her courts, on criminal as well as civil questions of law, could not be read here.

But legislation, like everything else, is progressive and improving; and five or six years ago the Legislature agreed that they might be read in our courts, but should not be authoritative. Now that is a very nice distinction, I confess; I am anxious that all the controverted and difficult points of criminal law, which from time to time may arise, shall be settled by the court of appeals, and thus be obligatory upon our circuit courts; and compel the judges to decide alike in the different circuits, in all criminal cases; and it will then be some consolation to a criminal to know, if he suffers, that all who commit similar crimes, will suffer a similar punishment.

---

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. WARDER.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

Mr. CLARKE offered the following resolution, with the expression of a wish that he would not be one of the committee to be appointed under it.

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the President to prepare an address to the people, to accompany the new constitution."

The resolution was adopted.

COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. JAMES asked and obtained leave to record his vote on the question taken yesterday on the impeachment of county court officers. He voted against the proposed change.

COMMITTEE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HARDIN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of five delegates be appointed, styled the committee on claims, against the commonwealth, incurred by the present convention."

In support of his resolution, he said the act of the general assembly had made no provision for certain necessary incidental expenses. There were some expenses incurred in taking care of the room in which they met and lighting the fires; also, in connection with the contested election from Henry county, and as they were likely to adjourn in about ten days, a committee should now be appointed to ascertain the amount of claims, that some provision might be made for their payment.

The resolution was adopted, and the President appointed the following delegates the committee: Messrs. Hardin, Lisle, Chambers, Boyd, and Brawner.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the executive department.

The eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth sections were read and adopted, without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 11. He may require information in writing, from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices.

"SEC. 12. He shall, from time to time, give to the general assembly, information of the state of the commonwealth, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient.

"SEC. 13. He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place, if that should have become, since their last adjournment, dangerous from an enemy, or from contagious disorders; and in case of disagreement between the two houses, with respect to the time of adjournment, adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding four months.

"SEC. 14. He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

"SEC. 15. A lieutenant governor shall be chosen at every election for a governor, in the same manner, continue in office for the same time, and possess the same qualifications. In voting for governor and lieutenant governor, the electors shall distinguish whom they vote for as governor, and whom as lieutenant governor.

"SEC. 16. He shall, by virtue of his office, be speaker of the senate, have a right when in committee of the whole, to debate and vote on all subjects, and when the senate are equally divided, to give the casting vote.

The seventeenth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 17. Whenever the office of governor shall become vacant, the lieutenant governor shall discharge the duties of governor until his successor shall have been duly elected; but no new election shall take place to fill such vacancy, unless the same shall have occurred before the first two years of the time shall have expired for which the governor was elected; and if, during the time the lieutenant governor shall fill such vacancy, he shall be impeached, removed from office, refuse to qualify, resign, die, or be absent from the state, the speaker of the senate shall, in like manner, administer the government for the balance of the term."

Mr. MANSFIELD moved to strike out the word "two" and insert "three," so that the new election should not be called, unless the vacancy to be filled occurred during the first three years of the term for which the governor was elected.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE said he saw no necessity for changing from the present article in the old constitution. It had been well settled that upon the death of the governor, or his removal, the lieutenant governor should serve out his term. The people had acquiesced in it.

Mr. NUTTALL stated that a majority of the committee thought it necessary to make this subject plain, in order to prevent any such excitement on the question whether a new election should take place or not, as had occurred in Kentucky. They thought it best to provide that if a governor died before half of his term expired, a new election should be called. He thought two years long enough for any officer.

Mr. DAVIS remarked that he was present at the second meeting of the committee, when this subject was considered, and was in favor of retaining the provision of the present constitution. It was true, that some years ago there was an excitement on this subject, and the provision was considered rather ambiguous, but it was now settled in the minds of the people. He thought the election of the lieutenant governor was made with a view to the succession to the office of governor, in the event of the governor's death. He was of opinion that the lieutenant governor was a proper and safe depository of the powers of the governor in such an event. He did not believe it necessary to put the whole people to the trouble of a general election, to fill such a vacancy. Under the new constitution the duties of the governor would be confined pretty much to filling up militia commissions, remitting fines and forfeitures, and other duties which might be as well performed by the one who should succeed by his death, as by a new officer elected for the purpose. There were already too many elections. The business of life should consist in something besides elections and electioneering.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE would be glad to move to strike out the whole of the section, and insert the sections in the old constitution which relate to the same subject, if an opportunity presented itself.

Mr. NEWELL believed it would be right, in case of the death of the governor in the first two years for which he was elected, that his place should be filled by an election. One consideration that influenced him so to vote in committee was, that in case of a vacancy by any cause, in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, the speaker of the senate would be called on to fill the office. He did not believe the people of Kentucky would be willing to have an individual, chosen by a bare majority of the senate, exercise the office of governor. The people would desire an opportunity to choose for themselves. All the other offices are to be filled by the people, why was this to be made an exception? As to the time spent in elections, they would all be on one day under the new constitution, and the objection on that account was not a good one.

Mr. GAITHER considered it important in the election of the lieutenant governor, to have an eye to the contingency of his succeeding the governor; and without any provision in the constitution to that effect, it had been done, and on one occasion the duty thus devolved had been performed faithfully and ably. He desired to avoid frequent elections, if possible. He would move to strike out the following words:

"But no new election shall take place to fill such vacancy, unless the same shall have occurred before the first two years of the term shall have expired for which the governor was elected."

Mr. MANSFIELD desired to have the vote taken on his motion to strike out "two" and insert "three." He believed such a change would be agreeable to his constituents.

Mr. McCLURE stated that he had offered a resolution early in the session, which required that a new election should be had in case of a vacancy in the office of governor. He was opposed to having the office filled by one who was chosen as lieutenant governor, and still more opposed to having a person chosen by the senate preside as governor.

Mr. NUTTALL cared little about the matter, but he was opposed to having the senate converted into a political electioneering arena. When a governor was about to be appointed to a high office abroad, this had been the case. He agreed in the opinion that the senate should not have the power of making the chief executive officer of the state. He would not vote for a man for one office, with a view to his filling another, in any event. The office of governor it was true, was stripped of much of its importance by the new constitution, but there were still important duties to perform, and he would have the person who filled the office appointed by the people for that special purpose.

Mr. NEWELL called the attention of the house to a case where one lieutenant had been made a captain, in consequence of the provision that when a president leaves his seat vacant the vice president succeeds. They might perhaps remember there was a case not long since, when a president died, and there was a great cry that the vice president was not the choice of the people.

Mr. ANDREW HOOD moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The motion of the gentleman from Allen to strike out "two" and insert "three" was rejected.

The question was then stated to be on the amendment of the gentleman from Adair, to strike out a portion of the section.

The yeas and nays were called for, and being taken, they were yeas 39, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Garrett Davis, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, J. W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, William C. Marshall, John H. McHenry, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—39.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling,

Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Richard D. Gholson, Jas. P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Andrew Hood, Tho. J. Hood, Thos. James, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Tho. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Geo. W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, John Wheeler—41.

So the convention refused to strike out.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the section.

Mr. NUTTALL called for the yeas and nays, and being taken they were yeas 37, nays 40.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, John D. Taylor, Philip Triplett, George W. Williams.—37.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Balingier, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Garrett Davis, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—40.

So the section was rejected.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE then moved to supply the place of the section stricken out, with the eighteenth section of the present constitution, as follows:

"In case of the impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, refusal to qualify, resignation, or absence from the state, the lieutenant governor shall exercise all the power and authority appertaining to the office of governor, until another be duly qualified, or the governor absent or impeached shall return or be acquitted."

On the motion of Mr. TRIPLETT, the words "elected and" were inserted after the words "until another be duly" and before the word "qualified."

The amendment was agreed to, and the section was adopted.

The eighteenth section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 18 Whenever the government shall be administered by the lieutenant governor, or he shall be unable to attend as speaker of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as speaker for the occasion."

Mr. DIXON moved as a substitute for that section, the following:

"Whenever the government shall be administered by the lieutenant governor, or he shall be unable to attend as speaker of the senate, the senators shall elect one of their own members as speaker for that occasion, and if, during the vacancy of the office of governor, the lieutenant governor shall be impeached, removed from office, refuse to qualify, resign, die, or be absent from the state, the speaker of the senate shall in like manner administer the government."

He thought there should be some provision to meet the case of a vacancy during the impeachment of a governor.

Mr. CHAMBERS thought it would be sufficient if they adopted the practice in the United States Senate of electing a president pro tempore, and thus they would avoid the expense of a special session of the senate, to elect a speaker in the event of the lieutenant governor becoming the acting governor.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE thought the matter had better be left as it now stands. The contingency which was to be provided for, was too remote to make it necessary to take it into consideration. The senate would elect their presiding officer with a view to his becoming the governor in case of such vacancies as would require it. If it was made a duty to elect a speaker pro tem. they might be brought into the same difficulty, into which the sister state of Ohio was once brought. They had a practice in Ohio of making the governor a senator in congress. The governor would, therefore, abdicate his office soon after his election, and the lieutenant governor would come in, and after a short time he too would resign. For amusement the senate elected an old gentleman by the name of Kirtland, who was chosen to fill a vacancy, and he was called to fill the office of the governor for three weeks. At the time his term expired he was asked to be again a candidate for the office; to which he replied, that he "had become chagrinated with the office, and had determined to go into a state of retracy among the Abrogans." (Laughter.)

It was not desirable to have such a state of things in Kentucky, and he preferred that in such an emergency the senate should be left to call a special session for the purpose of electing one of their own body to fill the chair for the residue of the term.

Mr. BROWN moved to amend the amendment, by adding the following proviso, and he asked the yeas and nays thereon.

Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of governor, before the first two years of the term shall have expired, a new election for governor shall take place.

Mr. GHOLSON hoped the convention had not deliberately determined to give to a person having one-thirty-eighth part of the power of the senate, the right to administer the government for a great part of a term for which a governor was chosen. The last man whom the people would choose for governor might thus get into the office, and he wanted to provide against the possibility of such an event.

A conversation ensued in which Mr. BROWN, Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, Mr. DIXON, Mr. TALBOTT, and Mr. MACHEN took part, on the question of the admissibility of Mr. Brown's amendment.

Mr. RUDD, to bring the convention to the business before them, moved the previous question.

Mr. TALBOTT remarked that the attendance in the house was not very full, and therefore he desired the roll to be called.

The roll was called accordingly.

The main question was then ordered, and the question was taken on the amendment to the amendment by yeas and nays, and they were, yeas 45 nays 34.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, Jas. S. Chrisman, B. L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, Archibald Dixon, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, T. J. Hood, Thomas James, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Neweum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Thos. Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, John Wheeler—45.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Balinger, William K. Bowling, Charles Chambers, Wm. Chenault, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, William C. Marshall, John D. Morris, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, Jas. Rudd, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—34.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The substitute for the section stricken out, as amended was also adopted.

The nineteenth and twentieth sections were next read and adopted, without amendment as follows:

SEC. 19. The lieutenant governor, while he acts as speaker of the senate, shall receive for his services, the same compensation which shall, for the same period, be allowed to the speaker of the house of representatives, and no more; and during the time he administers the government, as governor, shall receive the same compensation which the governor would have received, and been entitled to, had he been employed in the duties of his office.

SEC. 20. The speaker pro tempore of the senate, during the time he administers the government, shall receive, in like manner, the same compensation which the governor would have received had he been employed in the duties of his office.

The twenty first section was read as follows:

SEC. 21. If the lieutenant governor shall be called upon to administer the government, and shall, while in such administration, resign, die, or be absent from the state during the recess of the general assembly, it shall be the duty of the secretary for the time being, to convene the senate for the purpose of choosing a speaker.

Mr. CHAMBERS moved the following as a substitute for the section:

"At the close of each regular session of the general assembly, a speaker pro tempore of the senate, shall be elected by the senators, who shall continue in office until the next regular biennial meeting of the legislature, unless sooner called upon to administer the government."

Mr. CHAMBERS. This is a point in the executive report, where we may exercise a little saving foresight. If our senate should be required to conform to the practice of the United States senate, and elect a speaker pro tempore, at each session, it would anticipate the contingency upon the happening of which he might be called upon to administer the government, and would save the trouble and expence of convening the senate. Prospectively, in view of the happening of such contingency, an officer may be selected to meet them, as well as after they have occurred, and with considerable saving to the treasury.

Mr. DIXON. But suppose the speaker pro tempore should himself die, what then?

Mr. CHAMBERS. That is another contingency, and too remote to require any precautionary action at our hands.

The amendment was rejected, and the section was adopted.

The twenty second section was read as follows:

"SEC. 22. The governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint a secretary of state, who shall be commissioned during the term for which the governor shall have been elected, if he shall so long behave himself well. He shall keep a fair register, and attest all the official acts of the governor, and shall, when required, lay the same, and all papers, minutes and vouchers, relative thereto, before either house of the general assembly; and shall perform such other duties as may be enjoined on him by law."

Mr. BOYD moved to strike out the words, "the governor shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint a secretary of state, who shall be commissioned," and substitute the following: "A secretary of state shall be elected by the qualified voters of this commonwealth, who shall hold his office."

Mr. THOMPSON moved the following as a substitute for the amendment proposed to be inserted: "a secretary of state shall be elected for four years, by the citizens entitled to suffrage, at the times and places where they shall respectively vote for governor, who shall be commissioned."

Mr. DIXON stated that the committee were unanimous in the opinion that the governor should have the right to appoint his own secretary. That was considered necessary, as the secretary would be the confidential adviser of the governor. Otherwise the committee thought it possible that the people might select a man who was hostile in feeling to the governor, and the interests of the state would suffer in consequence.

Mr. DUDLEY moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. THOMPSON withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLY called for the yeas and nays on the amendment of Mr. BOYD, and being taken, they were yeas 38 and nays 41.

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—38.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Balinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Nathan Gaither, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Wm. Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams,—41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The twenty third, twenty fourth, and twenty fifth sections were read and adopted without amendment as follows:

"SEC. 23. Every bill which shall have passed both houses shall be presented to the governor. If he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it with his objections to the house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large upon their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, a majority of all the members elected to that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent with the objections to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by a majority of all the members elected to that house, it shall be a law; but in such cases, the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journals of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the governor, within ten days (Sundays excepted,) after it shall have been presented to him, it shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly, by their adjournment, prevent its return; in which case it shall be a law, unless sent back within three days after their next meeting.

"SEC. 24. Every order, resolution, or vote, to which the concurrence of both houses may be necessary, except on a question of adjournment, shall be presented to the governor, and before it shall take effect, be approved by him; or being disapproved, shall be re-passed by a majority of all the members elected to both houses, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in case of a bill.

"SEC. 25. Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law."

The twenty sixth section was next read:

"SEC. 26. The legislature shall provide for a term not exceeding two years, for the appointment of treasurer, auditor of public accounts, register of the land office, and such other officers of a public nature as may become necessary, and shall prescribe their duties and responsibilities, and, until otherwise directed by law, such officers shall be elected by the qualified voters of this commonwealth.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE was opposed to leaving this section so that the legislature might prescribe a different mode of appointing the officers named in it. He moved to strike out the words "until otherwise directed by law." His object was to secure the election of these officers by the people.

Mr. DIXON said they would be elected by the people as the section now stood. The object of inserting those words, was to provide for any difficulty that might arise from the election of these officers by the people.

Mr. MANSFIELD hoped the house would sustain the amendment.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I do not think I am mistaken in the effect of this section. If it remains as it is the people will now elect these officers. But it will be in the power of the legislature to prescribe a different mode. Suppose we apply the same expression to all the officers whose election is provided for, they will be elected by the people "until otherwise directed by law." You thereby give the legislative department the power of taking the elections of these officers from the people. I am opposed to that. I think if any should be elected, it is the treasurer. I need not state the reasons why I think the appointing of that officer has not been heretofore beneficial to the state.

Mr. TRIPLETT. It is said that this section gives the people the right to elect their officers. That is true, but this question arises whether the legislature shall have the right to alter that mode of election. I object to their altering the mode of electing the treasurer. That is one of the most important and responsible offices in the state, and one in which the people have felt the greatest interest for a number of years.

Mr. W. JOHNSON. I think the people have the undoubted right to elect all their officers. But while they have this right, there may be certain officers who can be better appointed by an agent than by themselves. If the people think their agents can do the business they desire to have done, or if it is inconvenient for them to meet and do it, I want them to have the right of transferring this power to others to do it for them.

Mr. BRADLEY offered the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Nelson:

"There shall be elected for four years by the qualified voters of the state, an auditor of public accounts, register of the land office, attorney general, and such other officers of a public nature as may be necessary, and the general assembly shall prescribe their duties and responsibilities."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I made the motion which I did to test the sense of the convention upon the question whether the house think these officers should be elected by the people at large. If the vote is taken to strike out the words I have named, it will be in order to insert the amendment of the gentleman from Hopkins. If gentlemen wish to leave the choice of these officers to the legislature they will vote against my amendment; but I ask if when we have made the appellate court elective, and other mere ministerial offices, we shall refuse to the people the power of electing these important officers. No officers are more important than those of the treasurer and auditor of public accounts. If this is left so that the legislature may change the mode, it may be thrown back upon the executive, or the joint vote of the two houses, which is the worst possible appointing power that I can conceive of. I am opposed to leaving so important a duty as the selection of these officers to depend upon the will, the whim, or the caprice of any future legislature.

Mr. NEWELL. I am in favor of this section, and yet I am thought by some to be very radical on that subject; but I should have been glad to see some other provisions of the constitution left as this is. I desire to fix as few subjects in the constitution as the nature of the case will admit of, for it is to be for the present, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, unalterable. I am for trusting generations that may come after us. We have given the power of electing these officers, and then we have given them the power, if a majority of the people wish it, to change the mode of appointment. This will give the constitution stability, if some of these sections are left so that they may be changed; but if we fix all these subjects there will be complaint, and no alteration can be made without calling another convention.

Mr. BRADLEY. I know the section, as it stands, gives to the people the right to elect their officers; but it also gives the legislature the power to take away that right, and to vest it in the executive, or any other branch of the government. I differ from my friend from Harrison, and also with the gentleman from Scott. I desire that all the officers of this government—these as well as others—shall be elected by the people. Suppose we had said the judges may be elected, but that the legislature may change that mode if they think proper, and give the appointing power to the executive, would that have met the public expectation on this subject? I hope the power will not be given to the legislature to change the mode of electing by the people.

Mr. NEWELL. If one legislature changes it, the next can change it back.

Mr. BRADLEY. Yes, and then we might never have a settled system.

Mr. CLARKE. I am inclined to doubt my judgment when I differ with my friend from Harrison in the sentiments he has expressed; but I concur in the amendment of the gentleman from Hopkins. If there were such a provision in every section of the constitution as is proposed to be inserted in this section, we should have no constitution at all. All the power would get into the hands of the legislature, and at one election it would be regarded as constitutional for the people to elect a treasurer, and at the next unconstitutional, and so on, ad infinitum. If we intend to carry out the expectations of the people, we will give the people the right to elect their officers. And, if they do not choose to exercise it, we can, after the constitution shall have been submitted to the people, make such alteration in it as will meet their wishes. This is the very worst possible shape in which these specific amendments can be made. You have said, in so many words, the people shall not elect their treasurer. Why, then, confer upon them the power of electing their judges? Why do you not say to them that they shall not elect their clerks? Why do you, in this particular instance, refuse the people this right? Does any man doubt that they are as anxious to vote for a treasurer as for the judges, or any other officer? I believe it was the universal sentiment of the people, from one end of the state to the other, last summer that the right should not depend upon the whims and caprices of the legislature. There is no more responsible office in Kentucky than that of treasurer, for he holds the purse of the people of the state. I hope the section will be struck out, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Hopkins will be adopted.

Mr. NUTTALL. I see nothing objectionable in this section. These officers are to be elected, "until otherwise directed by law," by the qualified voters of the commonwealth. The qualified voters are the commonwealth, as I understand it. No other persons have a right to control this government, but the qualified voters, through their agents or representatives. I have no idea that when the people once commence electing these officers they will ever change the mode. I think there is no danger in leaving it as it is.

Mr. MAYES. It strikes me we should say that these officers shall be elected, or they shall not. It is true, the power of electing the treasurer and other officers is given for the time being, but the legislature have the power to take away this right. The people of one county may favor the appointment of the treasurer by their representatives, and those of another may choose to vote directly. This will create an interminable confusion in the legislature, and lead to great expense and loss of time in that body.

Mr. HARDIN. The explanation of this section as given by the chairman of the committee (Mr. Dixon) is, that the treasurer and other officers shall be elected by the people, subject to the power of the legislature to change the mode of election. I am opposed to that altogether. I know very well that if you bring a parcel of young men here, many of them smuggled in under the constitutional age, they will take the power into their own hands. Power is uncommonly sweet, and it will be a rich treat to them. We see how much our best governors are in favor of power. If they have to appoint a judge of the court of appeals, they will take him from the bench of the circuit court, and that will make another vacancy to be filled. This power is so sweet, as sure as the Lord lives and our souls live, they will find out some reasons for changing this mode of appointing these officers. I want to have all the officers appointed by the people. The treasurer and auditor are very important officers. Let them all be elected, and let the men throughout Kentucky have a fair chance of the election. If the legislature do it, you will never get to South Frankfort for any of them; they will all be taken from North Frankfort. I am against having the legislature assume the power in any case.

Mr. NEWELL. I hope the house do not understand me as opposing the election of these officers. If any gentleman goes further than I, in favoring the election by the people, he goes a great way. My object in leaving this as it is, is to give the people the right to accomplish a certain thing in either of two ways. I have not so little confidence in the legislature as some gentlemen express. There are eighty-five gentlemen here who have been in the legislature, and when they tell you that the legislature is not to be trusted, they only tell you that they themselves have been unworthy to be trusted.

Mr. CLARKE. The gentleman from Harrison says this is leaving to the people the power of changing the mode of appointment. I cannot agree with him, for I do not recognize the legislature as the people. If he is right, you might as well say the legislature have the right to alter the whole constitution.

Mr. NEWELL. I said it was better to give the people the right to elect their judges and some other officers. But I believe it is best to leave the people to elect some officers, and at the same time give the legislature power to change the mode if it should be found necessary to do it.

Mr. DIXON. I think my friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) is mistaken in saying there is an obscurity in this section. I think it plain and easily to be understood. It provides in the first place, that the officers shall be elected by the people until the people themselves shall direct otherwise. That is the sum and substance of it. Now, I understand the younger gentleman from Nelson to be utterly opposed to taking from the people the power to elect their own officers. Does this section take from the people the power to elect their own officers? In the first place, it gives the power, and in the second, it authorizes the people, when they think proper, to change the mode of appointment. If you give the people a mode of appointment, does it necessarily take away their right of election? Surely it does not. It is said that this is abridging the rights of the people. Now, what is the constitution itself but an abridgment of the natural rights of the people? It is the very object of your organic law to restrain the people lest they should run riot in the exercise of their natural rights. I do not propose to restrain them. I only propose to give them the power which some gentlemen think it would be unsafe to entrust them with. We are not the people; we are but their organs through which they speak in this convention. It is true, we are not under restraints as the legislature is, but we owe obligations to our constituents for the powers we have, which are more unlimited than those vested in the legislature. The power of the people, as spoken through their representatives in the legislature, is limited by the constitution. We propose to reserve to the people the right to speak their will on a particular question; but the gentleman says it is wrong to entrust the people to speak their will. Does the gentleman mean to say that those who come here as representatives of the people, have a right to disregard the wishes of their constituents? The representative is supposed to speak the voice, and feelings, and wishes of those whom he represents. The gentleman asks: why we did not give this right as to all other officers of the government. We did not think any body would be in favor of it, but we thought they might be in favor of electing these particular officers. These are the reasons that influenced us in making our report. If the people think it better to let the legislature act on the subject, they will require them to do it. My friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) thinks that the young members of the legislature will come here and legislate in relation to these officers, right or wrong, regardless of the wishes of the people. I will tell him that they are not apt to do things which the people do not desire, nor are the old representatives. When an important question like this comes up, members will not be found taking ground in opposition to the views and sentiments of their constituents. And, certainly if any man did, he would bring about his own destruction.

Mr. HARDIN. It seems that these officers are to be elected by the people, but the legislature may prescribe another mode if they please. I deny that the legislature is the people. The law making power is the house of representatives, the senate and the governor. The legislature represent the people; they are only one branch of the government. Why was this convention called? It was to prescribe how the officers of this government shall be elected, and when that is done, the legislature cannot touch it. What does the gentleman from Henderson say? That the legislature are the people, and whenever the people choose to act, they can do so in despite of all constitutions. That is exactly the amount of it. Why not say, that since the legislature is the people, they shall prescribe all appointments?

Mr. DIXON. I took the ground that this convention was the representative of the sovereignty of the people of Kentucky. I took the ground that the constitution of Kentucky imposed restraints on the legislature, and that all the powers they exercised are derived from the people and are limited by the constitution.

Mr. HARDIN. There is no great misunderstanding on my part. We know very well that all power is in the people as a reserved power, unless it is delegated to the law-making power, and the legislature may do any thing and every thing that has not been delegated to congress. But that is not the question; and I ask the gentleman, since the legislature is the sovereign people, why not say to them, you may change the mode of electing the governor when you please? Why not give them power to change all the departments of the government? Why, we do not intend to confide to them such important powers. Why not say to them that they shall have all the power of the government—that they shall have power to say how the judges of the court of appeals shall be elected whenever they please, or the judges of the circuit court? Because we will not confide that power to them. And I ask my friend if he will confide to them the power to elect the most important officers for the state at large, when he will take away from them the power to appoint the judge of a district or a justice of a little magistrate's district? If you take away from the legislature the power to appoint a justice of the peace, or as Austin Hubbard used to say, "a piece of a justice," why not take away from them the power to elect a treasurer, an auditor, or a register? I am in favor of the elections remaining with the people, and I wish it to be part of the organic law of Kentucky that the governor and every other officer shall be elected by the people.

As to the secretary of state, I have not said a word about that; for God knows I care nothing about that. I do not care to hear that word again. (Laughter.) I would be the last man in the world to say a word about it.

The effect of the doctrine of the gentleman would be to give the legislature power to alter the mode of appointment entirely with reference to these important officers. Why not say the legislature may have power to set our negroes free? Just because we are unwilling to trust them. And I am as unwilling to trust them with reference to one power as to the other.

I hope that as we came here to change the appointing power, and separate it from every other department of this government, we shall give the power back to the people. The appointing power originally belonged to the people, and to delegate it any where else would be wrong. I came here to give it back where it originally belonged, being unwilling to trust it to any department. I know a little about how things are managed here. We are not made of such stern, obstinate stuff that we cannot be operated upon here. We can be softened down, sometimes, forty ways. There are a great many ways in which a young man may be softened down. I will not enumerate them all. Why was it the seat of government was taken away from New Orleans? It was because the local power was too influential for the people. It was, in consequence, taken to Baton Rouge. Why was it taken from Philadelphia? It was because the local power of Philadelphia was too great for the balance of the people to trust it there. Why was it removed from the city of New York? For the same reason. We know there is a local power at the seat of government which will operate more or less on the members of the legislature. The gentleman says it may operate on us. Well, it may; but I do not think it as likely to operate upon us as on a parcel of boys. You may go over the list of members and you will find one half of them do not exceed thirty years of age. I am unwilling to trust four or five of the most important offices in this government to be disposed of by them.

Mr. TURNER. I rise to move the previous question, but before I do so, I wish to say a few words. I shall vote with the gentleman from Henderson and the gentleman from Harrison, because I am in favor of giving the people the right to say whether the legislature shall appoint these officers, if they do not wish to elect them. I am an elective man, but I have had very great doubts as to the executive officers, and in consequence of those doubts, I am inclined to leave this provision as it has been reported by the committee. Some gentlemen have expressed their fears of entrusting the legislature in relation to this matter. In the report of the committee of thirty, there was a provision leaving to the legislature the branching of the court of appeals, should it hereafter be demanded by the people. And why not? Is there any more danger to be apprehended than there will be in the present instance? Not at all; and I conceive there will be none. Did we not adopt the same course in regard to the election of magistrates in the several counties? And we have, in some other respects, left the people, through their representatives, to carry out the principles we have laid down in the constitution. My friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) in the love he has expressed for the people, reminds me of Governor Letcher, who has gone to Mexico, where he will represent this country very ably, who said that if he had any fault in the world, it was that he was too candid. Now if the gentleman from Nelson has any fault in his old age, it is that he is so excessively in love with the people. Now, I do not think that the boys that are to come to the legislature will be more in love with the sweet things here than the gentleman is.

With regard to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) I am opposed to it, for the reason that I would not put a man in office for so long a period as four years, and permit him to handle large amounts of the public money, without more security being required of him than is now given. There is great danger in doing so. Why there is not a treasurer under the sun who would be so independent, and to whom so much power would be entrusted, as the treasurer which the gentleman from Nelson would create. Suppose he were to abuse his trust, how are we to reach him? Before you could impeach him, he could go on embezzling the public money, and in short ruin the commonwealth. I hope if we do not make any provision on the subject, the legislature will, and elect the treasurer for one or two years, or provide some other mode of appointment. As to the present treasurer, I believe him a faithful officer. The second auditor and the register of the land office, are also good officers, and they were, I understand, born here. However, I care not where a man is born, provided he attends to his duties faithfully and promptly. I say then, in conclusion, I would give the power to the people to say in what manner these officers shall hereafter be appointed. I will now move the previous question.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE If the gentleman will permit me to say a word or two, by way of explanation, I shall be obliged to him, and I will then call the previous question.

Mr. TURNER then withdrew the motion.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. The committee proposed to elect a treasurer for two years, but my amendment proposes to elect him for four. The gentleman, who has just taken his seat, says it is dangerous to leave so much money in the hands of the treasurer. He should recollect that that officer is subject to the impeaching power, and has to give bonds in a large amount for the faithful performance of his duty. And these bonds are put into the hands of the executive, according to law. It is made the duty of the governor to examine into and see that he keeps his accounts safe and accurately, as well during the time the legislature is in session as afterwards. The governor does not discharge his duty properly, if he does not look into the treasurer's accounts and ascertain how they stand. I trust we shall provide for the supervision of the books of the treasurer, by requiring a rigid and close examination of his accounts from time to time, so that if there shall be an abstraction of a single dollar, he shall be immediately suspended. I know the house is impatient to take the question, therefore I shall say nothing further. I move the previous question.

Mr. PRICE said as this was an important proposition, it should be voted upon by a full house; and as the house was not now full, he moved an adjournment.

The vote upon the motion to adjourn was a tie, 31 in the affirmative, 31 in the negative.

The PRESIDENT announced the motion to adjourn to be decided in the negative.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE asked for the yeas and nays upon the proposition.

A recess was moved and negatived.

The main question was then ordered to be now put.

Mr. BRADLEY, by consent, on the suggestion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, modified his proposition by separating the treasurer therefrom, so that that officer might be embraced in another and separate section, with a different term of office.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays, on Mr. BRADLEY'S amendment, and they were—yeas 56, nays 20.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, Ignatius A.

Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—56.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) John L. Ballinger, Charles Chambers, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, James H. Garrard, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, William C. Marshall, Nathan McClure, John D. Morris, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, Howard Todd, Squire Turner—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The section, as amended, was then adopted.

The twenty seventh section was read as follows:

"SEC. 27. A board of commissioners shall be appointed every two years by the judges of the court of appeals, one from each appellate district, whose duty it shall be to make an examination every two years, of the accounts of the receiving and disbursing officers of the state at large, and report to the legislature."

Mr. JAMES moved to strike out the entire section.

Mr. HARDIN concurred in that motion. To retain it would be to incur an expense of $1,000 biennially for no apparent possible good.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. GARRARD expressed the hope that the convention would dispose of this report before adjourning. He therefore moved to take up the sixth section which was passed over yesterday, at the request of the gentleman from Woodford, (Mr. Waller,) who then expressed a desire to give his views upon the principle which that section embraced. He, however, had now the authority of that gentleman for stating that he could accomplish his object on another report, and consequently, he did not wish the action of the convention upon this section to be further delayed.

The sixth section was accordingly taken up and passed without amendment as follows:

"SEC. 6. No member of congress, or person holding any office under the United States, nor minister of any religious society, shall be eligible to the office of governor."

Mr. KELLY offered the following as an additional section, which was adopted after being modified on the suggestion of Mr. PRICE:

"SEC. —. There shall be elected biennially, by the qualified voters of this commonwealth, a treasurer, whose duties and responsibilities shall be defined by law."

There being no further amendments, the article on the executive department was disposed of.

The convention then adjourned.

MONDAY, DECEMBER, 3, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. LANCASTER.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

On the motion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, the convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the legislative department.

When last under consideration, the twenty fifth section was postponed at the request of Mr. WALLER. It was now taken up, as follows:

"Sec. 25. No person, while he continues to exercise the functions of clergyman, priest, or teacher of any religious persuasion, society, or sect, nor while he holds or exercises any office of profit under this commonwealth, or under the government of the United States, shall be eligible to the general assembly, except attorneys at law, justices of the peace, and militia officers: Provided, That attorneys for the commonwealth, who receive a fixed annual salary, shall be ineligible.

Mr. BOYD moved to amend the section by striking out the words "continues to exercise the functions of a clergyman, priest, or teacher of any religious persuasion, society, or sect, nor while he."

Mr. WALLER. Mr. President: I arise under circumstances of considerable embarrassment. The fact that several days ago I requested the postponement of this subject, in order that myself and others might be heard in relation to it, has created an expectation which I am sure I cannot meet. I have had other and, in my estimation, more important matters claiming my time, and have bestowed very little reflection on the question now before the convention.

I have another serious cause of embarrassment: I am liable to be charged with a want of delicacy. Some may suppose that owing to the relations I sustain to the matter in debate, I ought to have been silent, and left this cause in the hands of others. I, however, throw myself upon the magnanimity of the convention to relieve me of this imputation. I but walk in the foot-steps of other delegates. My course has the sanction of the custom here. The other day when the delegate from Jessamine (Mr. A. K. Marshall) incidentally and playfully alluded to the lawyers, the members of that profession in all parts of the house arose in reply and retort. When restrictions were attempted to be placed upon the representation of cities, their delegates, in emphatic and indignant tones, denounced what they believed to be an infringement of their rights. And so it would be if any other profession or interest having a representative here, were assailed. Why, then, should it be thought indelicate in me, standing almost solitary and alone, of a profession it is proposed to proscribe from civil office, that I should arise in remonstrance.

Those who know me will not suspect, that I have any selfish ends to attain. My habits of life and my pursuits have been such as to preclude the supposition that I seek either the offices or emoluments of civil government. I have ever preferred the silence and solitude of the closet. I have mingled but little with the great world. I have held more communion with the sentiments of the dead than of the living. I have lived almost a hermit among my neighbors. I have never been a political partizan. I have had but little to do or to say on political subjects except quietly to vote. While I have looked upon the masses of both the great political parties into which our country is divided, as seeking honestly and earnestly the welfare of the nation; I very frankly confess, I have long suspected that with the leaders, it was but a contest between the ins and the outs—that they were mainly influenced by the seven principles of John Randolph—"the five loaves and the two fishes."

But there is still another source of embarrassment. I am told, and I suppose truly, that this question is settled in the minds of an overwhelming majority of this convention; that it is contemplated not only to exclude ministers of the gospel from the offices created by this constitution, but that some even wish to exclude them from any future convention, thereby virtually declaring them out of the social compact! Well, if we are again to be put under the ban of government—if the axe of proscription is again to fall, I may at least exclaim with the old Greek, "strike, but hear me!" I want, however, to bear my testimony against this measure—and if fail we must, ere we fold up our arms to die, I wish to look at you, Mr. President, and at each member of this convention, the elect and eloquent champion of equal rights, and say, "et tu Brute!" Are you, the guardians of republican principles, about to proscribe any portion of Kentucky's freemen and American citizens from the offices of this government?

This restriction, making ministers ineligible to civil office, is contrary to the great American principle of equal rights and privileges. I call this an American principle, because in other countries of the civilized world the right to hold office has been guarantied to a favored class, who, by birth or fortune, are considered superior to the mass of their fellow men. Some are born to office. Angels in the form of kings—so the sentiment runs—are commissioned of Heaven to sit on thrones, wear crowns, and wield sceptres! And in the most free of other nations besides this, the doctrine prevails, that no individual must be chosen to office, unless by birth or by wealth he is elevated into a favored and privileged class. Thus monarchs and aristocrats have usurped authority over the million.

It is the brightest gem in the diadem of our nation's glory, that the United States have abolished this principle—that here we have no privileged classes, to whom belong, exclusively, the offices and emoluments of the government—that here the high, the low, the rich and the poor, the learned and the rude—every free white male citizen who is not a convict or a traitor—is eligible to the highest office in the gift of the people. Even to the persecuted exiles of other lands, who immigrate to enjoy the blessings of freedom, if they shall become citizens, is presented the boon of eligibility to the chief places under government.

And this is considered an invaluable and inestimable right and privilege, of which, under our national government and most of our state governments, the humblest citizen is never deprived, except for the highest crimes.

And this great American principle has worked well, and is esteemed the noblest and the proudest birthright of our citizens. Under its operations, we have seen the "mill-boy of the slashes" of Hanover county, Virginia, rising through all the various grades of office, and now in the senate of the United States—we have seen a son of a poor "exile of Erin," left to poverty and orphanage in early life, become the hero of New Orleans, and then elevated, by the voice of this mighty nation, to the chief executive chair. And we now see the son of an humble farmer on Beargrass, unaided by the pride of birth or the charms of wealth, holding the governmental reins of this great republic. Of our country in truth it may be said, that "Honor and shame from no condition rise;

Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

Under this system, our country has been raised to the proud eminence it now occupies; and this system, judging by the speeches of gentlemen, has been very precious in the eyes of this convention. Upon no sentence have more changes been rung, than that of "equal rights to all, and exclusive privileges to none." And how are the doctrines of this darling political maxim to be maintained inviolate, while you deny to the ministers of religion, rights which you guaranty to every voter in the commonwealth? Can you declare them ineligible to seats in the general assembly according to the republican principle of equal rights and privileges? Is not their right to be candidates for office as perfect and complete as that of any other class of citizens whatever? If nature and the social compact did not give them this privilege, why this prohibition? Does not its very existence prove incontestably their right to seek civil office?—a right of which only the strong arm of constitutional law could deprive them? You take from a large and respectable class of your fellow citizens, a great and inestimable right; and all to manifest your profound reverence for equality of rights.

Nor is this the most remarkable exhibiton of this favorite political maxim with which it is proposed to illustrate and adorn the constitution now in process of formation. Not content with the manifestation of your love for equal rights by depriving the ministers of religion of one of the most precious rights known to our political institutions, you intend to show your fond affection for "exclusive privileges to none," by declaring that none except a lawyer of a specified character shall be eligible for the office of circuit or appellate judge, or for county, commonwealth, or attorney general! Aye, you not only give to this worthy and patriotic class of our citizens, (for I entertain the highest respect for them,) the exclusive benefit of the chief offices created by this constitution, (and in this respect the new will be a vast improvement upon the old constitution,) but you restrain executive clemency when it would interpose to lift a burden from some poor wretch who has been mulct in damages for a petty offence—so far at least as the attorney's fees are concerned! The governor may remit so much of the fine as goes into the pockets of the people; but not that part which goes into the pockets of the attorney! That worthy functionary must not be hindered in his work of coining into fees the crimes of the people!

This all may be right. At least I now enter no objections to it. It may even be in accordance with the maxim of Holy writ, which declares, that "he who will not provide for his own, and especially for those of his own house, has denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." I should certainly never think of voting for any but a lawyer for judge or attorney: and am sincerely sorry that by a constitutional presumption, we lead the world to believe, that the electors of Kentucky would be so simple as to vote otherwise, except for this conservative restriction.

I have alluded to these regulations merely to show the picture which we propose to hold up to the admiration and wonder of our constituents—a picture here representing the poor ministers of the gospel under the ban of the constitution, denied access to all the civil offices; and there representing the lawyer occupying, solitary and alone, almost all the high places, and reveling and luxuriating in all the fat salaries of the state. And underneath, by way of explanation and illustration, written in glaring capitals, the sentence, "EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, AND EXCLUSIVE PRIVILEGES TO NONE!"

Well may you smile. The pencil of a Cruikshanks never perpetrated a more grotesque caricature.

Sir, the great mistake in this whole matter consists in not making the distinction between eligibility to office, and the actual election of the man to office. No delegate here is more opposed than myself to electing ministers of the gospel to seats in the legislature. They have other, nobler, and holier duties to discharge. Their time and their talents can be more profitably employed. But their eligibility is one thing, and whether they should be elected is quite another. The true principle of our government is, as I have demonstrated, to throw open its offices to every voter—to declare none ineligible except for high crimes and misdemeanors. Every citizen born, when he arrives at a certain age, is eligible for the presidency of the United States; and yet who would think of electing any and every one to that high office? To refuse to elect a man to office is to deprive him of no right. He asks us for our votes, and we have the perfect right to withhold or bestow them; and we give no just cause of offence and inflict no wrong: but when we declare him ineligible, we violate a great principle of republicanism, and deprive him of a sacred right—we inflict upon him that which, according to the genius of our government, ought to be inflicted only upon the worst of criminals. There are many men I would not vote for to fill any office in the state, but there is no man, I care not how mean and groveling, unless convicted of some heinous offence, whom I would declare ineligible.

This I believe to be the principle which should guide us in our action upon the section now under consideration; this I am sure is the principle which governed the patriots and statesmen who formed the constitution of the United States.

This restriction is a violation of the rights of conscience—it is depriving a man of a great political and natural right for serving his God in the way that his judgment and conscience dictate. The true policy of every civil government is, to let religion alone—to let the church with all its concerns take care of itself. The Redeemer declared that his kingdom was not of this world. Its ends, its aims, its hopes, all have reference to the spirit land. The great mistake of the ancient politicians was, that they assumed to regulate the affairs of a kingdom in which the Great God himself claimed to be the sole and sovereign ruler and law-giver. The ministers belong to that kingdom. They are its accredited officers. They derive their commissions from God and not from man. For the faithful discharge of the duties of their office they are responsible to God and not to man. As ministers they should be unknown to the state. The government should recognize them as citizens and not as ministers. Over their conduct as citizens human legislation is sovereign and supreme; over them as ministers every action of human government is a usurpation and a wrong.

They present themselves here simply as citizens, proposing to share the burdens and asking to partake of the privileges of the government we may form.

Now if you assume a guardianship of their ministerial functions, are you not directly interfering with matters belonging exclusively to the church? And if you may legislate on the officers of the church, may you not legislate on the ordinances and the doctrines of the church? And what is this but that monstrous union of church and state, concerning which so much horror has been expressed?

One of the dearest privileges of an American citizen, is to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. No matter whether this may lead him—whether to bend before an idol, to offer incense to Baal, to worship Mahomet, or to recognize the only true living God and his Son our Saviour—his adoration should never be hindered, nor his conscience be fettered by law. And the mode of serving his God acceptably should never be disturbed by state interference. One may choose to serve his God in a quiet way and only in his family. There he may erect his altar and present his offering. Another may choose to retire to the mountain cave, or to the desert and the wilderness, and in the stillness of a solitude where no human voice but his own is heard, worship and serve his Maker. And still another may choose to hymn his praises; or to preach the way of life and salvation in the congregation of the people. Now all of these, performing what they believe to be acceptable service to God, according to the principle contained in the bill of rights of all the states, have but done what they had a perfect right to do; and to subject them to any penalty in consequence, is unjust and tyrannical. And what does the minister more than exercise this undisputed right? He is serving God according to the dictates of his own conscience. He believes that he is under obligations to his Creator to teach and preach his religion. And because he thus worships his Maker according to the dictates of his conscience, you put him under the ban of the constitution—you deprive him of a political privilege dear to every freeman, and the birth-right of every American citizen!

And how does this restriction comport with the liberty of speech? This is regarded as another of our dearest privileges. Man may speak freely of any and every other subject except religion, and it would be thought monstrous indeed to declare him ineligible for office! But let him speak in behalf of his religion and publicly plead the cause of his Redeemer, and he becomes not only unfit for office, but wholly unworthy of being even a candidate! A politician on the stump may vindicate the principles of his party, the lawyer at the bar may speak for hours for or against truth and justice, and this only renders him more worthy of office; but the minister who pleads for the good of souls is rendered thereby unworthy of seeking civil office! This is consistency with a witness—this is liberty of speech!

The exclusion of the gospel ministry from office, as in this section, makes a very invidious and odious distinction—such a one as I think wholly unworthy of the character and the constitution of this renowned commonwealth.

The exclusion applies, you perceive, to any preacher, teacher, or priest of religion. A man may preach anything else, deism or atheism, and the restriction does not apply. He may teach the grossest immorality—he may inculcate robbery under the specious name of gambling, or murder baptized dueling; he may be the high priest of Fourierism, abolitionism, or any other of the thousand and one humbugs of the day, and by this section he is still eligible for any and all offices in the gift of the people. He may even teach the doctrines of devils, and still be eminently qualified for office. It is only the man who teaches that life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel—who seeks to diffuse the benign influences of christianity—that is to be proscribed from all direct participation in the affairs of legislation!

Any man distinguished for his patriotism—who has rendered eminent service to his country—by becoming a teacher of religion, forfeits the great right of a freeman—becomes ineligible to office! But he may deny the faith and become an infidel, be profligate and abandoned, and thus once more be eligible—be worthy to receive the people's votes!

Here is a miserable gambler, and drunkard, and debauchee. He is now eligible to office. He reforms, however, and unites with the church. He dedicates his talents and influence to the cause of religion. He teaches religion, and for that offence, forfeits the birth-right of an American citizen—renders himself ineligible to office! What a distinction to constitute a part of the fundamental law of a christian state!

See the poor wretch staggering along your streets or wallowing in the gutters. He is polluted with every vice. He has reduced his wife and children to beggary and starvation. He has spent his all in the grog shop. He is reduced almost to the level of the brute. Still he is eligible for the office of governor! But behold that other man, eminent for every virtue that dignifies and ennobles humanity. Gifted, good, learned, and eloquent. Known and loved by all for the splendor of his genius, and the extent of his erudition. But he is ineligible even to a seat in your house of representatives; and simply because he is a minister of the gospel! I have drawn no fancy sketch. This is a veritable reality—a fair, practical illustration of the doctrine of this section. I ask emphatically, if such policy comports with the dignity and character of the state?

This restriction applies only while the individual continues to be a teacher or preacher or priest of religion. Eligibility—the fascinations of political honors, and especially the charms of the salaries—are held up as temptations to induce him to resign his office in the church of God. This, to good ministers, would be no temptation. Before he entered his work, he made up his mind to undergo privation and the world's scorn. But this shows, that the restriction would be no restraint upon the minister ambitious of such honors, and covetous of filthy lucre. He could easily surrender his ministerial credentials; or else he could become a drunkard, a liar, a gambler, or in some other way disregard the requisitions of religion, and trample upon the mandates of the decalogue, and be expelled from the church, and then he would walk the highway to the offices and emoluments within the gift of Kentuckians! You declare him then to be worthy to receive the suffrages of the free and virtuous electors of our state.

Yes, sir, the bog trotter of Ireland, the boor of Germany, the serf of Russia, the inhabitant of any country or clime, the hue of whose skin has not been tinged by an Indian or an African sun, who may become a citizen of the state, is eligible to all its offices; while you deny eligibility to a virtuous and intelligent class of native born citizens, simply because they serve God according to the dictates of their conscience. I do not condemn your course in the first instance; on the contrary, it meets my hearty approval; but I ask, when you contrast it with the second, how can you vindicate your justice or your consistency?

I remark again, sir, that this restriction is wholly unnecessary and uncalled for.

There was some show of an excuse for it, but not the shadow of reason in its justification, when it was first introduced into an American constitution—in that of Virginia, adopted in 1776. That state was then influenced by peculiar circumstances. Previous to that time, under colonial regulations, the episcopal church was established there by law. To support the clergy of that church, certain lands, called glebe lands, were appropriated; besides a large stipend in tobacco was annually paid them. This became oppressive. Other denominations of religionists sprang up, who felt unwilling to support a church to which they did not belong and to whose doctrines they did not subscribe. The law was appealed to by the friends of the establishment. Persecution ensued. My own ancestors suffered severely—were whipped and cast into prison. This odious and persecuting establishment was put down, the year that the first Virginia constitution was ordained. The ministers of all other denominations submitted to it quietly, because it debarred their persecutors from office.

But there was another and a more controlling reason for this restriction. The great statesman who drafted that constitution was no friend to religion. He had tasted and felt the influence of the French philosophy, which just then began to lower upon the brow of the moral firmament, and soon after shrouded in darkest gloom the moral heavens of the civilized world. The great men of the earth, and many of our own statesmen, were enveloped in its darkness. This philosophy subsequently led its disciples to declare there was no God, and that death was an eternal sleep. It was, I say, the promptings in part of this philosophy which first gave birth to this proscription of gospel ministers.

No matter, however, what the cause prompting its first introduction; there is no reason for its existence now. We have no established church to put down. The dark cloud of infidelity and atheism has nearly all been brushed away. We live under happier auspices; and can survey the premises with other and more unbiassed vision.

This prohibition is unnecessary, because even if their admission into the offices of state were dangerous, it is evident they do not covet those offices. This I prove from their course in those states where no such restriction exists. In the constitution of twenty one of the states of this union, there is no such prohibition. By the constitution of the United States, ministers of the gospel are eligible to all the national offices. I appeal to the candor of delegates, and I ask them if, in those twenty one states, or under the government of the United States, they ever saw or heard of ministers, to any extent worthy of note, seeking political preferment? Do those twenty one states, or our nation, suffer any evil or incur any danger by not having this restriction? They do not. It is wholly useless and unnecessary—condemned by the experience of more than two thirds of the American people.

Ministers, generally, have chosen their calling in full view of the consequences. They know it is not the road to wealth and fame—they know they subject themselves to the world's hatred and scorn, on account of their profession—they might have sought other pursuits—they might have been lawyers, or physicians, or farmers, or something else, where wealth and honor would have smiled upon their pathway. The life of the ministry is one of toil, privation, and penury. Much of their time they are necessarily from their families, and when sickness or the pestilence prevails, they are around the beds of the diseased and the dying, administering the consolations of religion.

The ministers in the states where this restriction is not, possess as much of the confidence of the people, and are in every respect as accomplished and as able as here, or in any state. There is nothing to prevent their seeking office, and obtaining it too, but their settled disinclination. I think I may safely claim as much for the ministers of this state. Why this stigma, then? Why do you thus subject them to the suspicion, that the safety of their country requires their exclusion from civil office? Why furnish an occasion to the pert infidel, and the pot-house politician, to point derisively at them, as persons who, like criminals, negroes, and Indians, are ostracised from the offices of the state?

To place this restriction upon ministers, is to doubt the capacity of the people for self-government. Ought we not to presume that the people, at the polls, are competent to settle this question? Are they not to be trusted in the selection of their own representatives? Are they likely to be so recreant to their interests, and so blind to their safety, as to choose men who are unworthy and unsafe, to manage the affairs of state? If so, our government is based upon a foundation of sand—it is but a superstructure of vapor, to be blown away by the slightest breath of air. I entertain no such doubts of the people, and hence believe that this restriction should not exist. And, if ministers of the gospel must be proscribed, why not proscribe all professors of religion? If there is danger in the gospel ministry, it is made dangerous by the religion they profess. That is what gives them their distinguishing peculiarity. It is their religion then, and not their mere talking about it, which should be placed under the ban of the government. Ministers make no pretension to that exclusive sanctity and elect righteousness which gentlemen seem to assign them. They are but men—but common citizens of the state, with no other civil interests than those possessed by their neighbors. This supposed peculiar sanctity of the ministerial profession is a figment of the dark ages, and is worthy only of the dark ages. I had supposed, that in this boasted age of light and science—of steam engines and magnetic telegraphs—that the doctrine that ministers were a class separate from the people, of different instincts and interests, would be treated as but a school boy's dream.

I admit that under certain circumstances, an individual should be deprived of his natural rights. When the safety of the government and the security of the community demand it, it is right and proper. Hence persons guilty of high crimes, the thief, the robber, the man-slayer, the traitor, forfeit their political birthright by their outrages upon society, and ought to be put under the ban of the government. The question arises, then—does the good of the state absolutely demand the exclusion of ministers from civil office? Why should they be declared ineligible to seats in the general assembly?

It is said, in justification of this restriction, that to make ministers eligible for civil office will corrupt them—that they have a high and holy calling, and ought not to be permitted to forsake it for the polluting contests of political life—that it will impair their usefulness and sully their purity!

Now, this is a very good reason to present to the minister himself, why he should not be a candidate, but surely it is no state reason why the constitution should deprive him of a great right—a right of which only criminals, for high crimes, are deprived. Suppose all that is said be true, and I will not call it in question, does he thereby commit an offence against the state? Does he subject himself to criminal prosecution? Do you proceed with equal rigor towards other citizens who may lapse into vice and sully their purity? Why not be equally careful of the morals of others?

And if you must assume to direct the business of citizens, and see that they do not neglect it, extend your guardianship further. Say to the physician, that he has the health of men's bodies to see to—that if he mingles in politics and goes to the legislature, he will neglect his patients and injure his practice—and therefore he must be ineligible. Let the lawyer be told that his vocation is a vastly important one—that no man can be a good lawyer without giving his whole energies to his profession—that he must neglect his clients and injure his legal reputation by engaging in politics—and therefore he must be ineligible. Declare the farmer and mechanic ineligible, because they cannot successfully and properly carry on their business when away from it, and engaged in legislation! Consistency will carry you at least thus far—will lead you to bring ruin upon the state, by driving every person worthy to fill them from its offices.

But this tender and kind regard for the morals of the clergy is rather oppressive. Such terms of compliment and such fond expressions of solicitude sound rather syren-like. It is the voice of the enchanter alluring to destruction. It is decorating the victim with garlands as it is led to the sacrifice. It is the executioner asking pardon of the criminal for cutting off his head. This is loving us most too much. Like the bear, gentlemen would hug us to death. The gentleman engaged in this amiable decapitation but proves himself

“as mild a mannered man
As ever cut a throat or scuttled ship.”

And when or where, let me ask, were you appointed the guardian angels of the ministers? When did you become the refiner's fire and the fuller's soap to purify the clerical profession? And if you have assumed guardianship over our manners and morals, why stop here? Why not insert a constitutional provision that we must not get drunk, or gamble, or blaspheme? Or do you suppose that like other citizens we can be left to our own judgment and to our own sense of propriety, in all such matters? That only in politics do you esteem it necessary to throw your aegis around us? In relation to the corruptions of civil office only, do you profess to have superior moral perception. You perhaps speak experimentally. “You speak what you do know and testify to that which you have seen!” Very well; I hesitate not to say that the ministers will receive your testimony; and doubtless their good sense and their religion will lead them to avoid that pool of pollution in which you have so long bathed. I think that if they will not of their own accord avoid this contamination, that a virtuous and sagacious people will very cheerfully take your wards off your hands, and see that they suffer no evil. You need not, I am sure, think the preachers and the people, like the blind leading the blind, will both fall into the ditch. All moral perception and all sense of propriety are not garnered in this convention. The people are not demented, nor are the ministers all knaves and simpletons.

I remember that even in the times of the Savior's incarnation, there was a certain class of gentlemen—the lawyers and doctors—who assumed the guardianship of the morals of the Son of God. They were apprehensive that his manners might be corrupted by consorting with publicans and sinners—they feared lest he might become gluttonous and a wine-bibber! If they did these things in the green tree, what may we not expect they will do in the dry? If these things were done to our divine Master, what can we, his servants, expect, but to be classed with thieves and traitors by such exemplary guardians of our morals?

The Redeemer of men was crucified between two thieves, and the recollection of that event can well be perpetuated, by classifying his ministers, constitutionally, with thieves and robbers.

It is argued, that to make ministers eligible, is a virtual union of church and state.

And here, sir, the note is changed. Just now this restriction was justified on the ground that ministers were too good to mingle in legislation; now, however, gentlemen veer round, tack to another breeze, and tell us that they are too bad! Those who awhile ago were so holy and so pure, have doffed their robes of righteousness—are now like ministers of hell, seeking to subvert the liberties of their country! Well, if this be so, I confess it furnishes a good reason for excluding them from office. But even then, I do not think you sufficiently provide against the evil. They might obtain some disinterested individual, who for a fee, would undertake their cause for them; and thus accomplish their unhallowed purposes. You had better then banish them from the state. Every consideration of self-defence would justify such a course.

But, sir, this apprehension of the union of church and state is but the phantom of a diseased imagination—but “gorgeous hydras and chimeras dire,” seen in the same way that Hamlet perceived his father’s ghost, by “the mind’s eye!” Do you behold any tendency to the union of church and state in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas?—or in any of the states north?—or in the government of the United States? And yet, in all these, ministers are eligible to office. There is no danger of the sort apprehended there; then why should there be in Kentucky? Are we more timid—more liable to be alarmed by mere creations of the brain than our neighbors?

Such a union belongs to the things that were. Every where it is falling into disrepute and being overthrown. In Europe it is being consumed by the fires of freedom. There is not a man in all this country who is in favor of such a union. The ministers of this country are as deadly hostile to it as any other class of citizens whatever. And how could such a union be brought about? If the thing can be done, let gentlemen demonstrate how it is to be done? Of course, some one sect would have to control the majority of the voters in the state. They would either by force of arms or else by convention called for the purpose, make another constitution. They would, to be secure, have to destroy the press, banish or burn the ministers and members of all other persuasions, and throw a wall of adamant around Kentucky, to keep out the indignant expression of opinion which would else deluge them from her sister states!

No man of reflection can believe for a moment that the slightest danger is to be apprehended from any such source. The resort to such a subterfuge but betrays the weakness of the cause sought to be defended.

But it is urged that it would endanger the liberties of the people to permit ministers to hold or even to seek political office. Have gentlemen examined the history of their country? Can they find in this broad land a class of men more patriotic—who have done more for the interests and glory of their country, than the ministers? Why, sir, they presided over the foundation of this great republic. They induced “the pilgrim fathers” to settle in the wilds of America. The first constitution in christendom which guaranteed to all men the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, was drawn by Roger Williams, a minister of the gospel.

Sir, the old Continental congress did not think that ministers of the gospel were the enemies of liberty. In those days which tried men’s souls—when the assembled patriotism of America took council together, ministers were not excluded from their deliberations.

They were not proscribed by the congress of 1776—that noble assembly of patriots who pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honors, to maintain the independence of the United States. In that august body, who more eloquent for liberty and who more firm and undaunted in its maintenance than Dr. Witherpoon? His name stands subscribed to the Declaration of Independence.

The convention which formed the federal constitution—over which presided the great Washington—in the deliberations of which mingled Franklin, and Madison, and Hamilton, and Randolph, and others the most gifted and the best of revolutionary heroes and patriots—that convention, I say, did not esteem ministers of the gospel dangerous men. They did not put them under the ban of government. They threw open to them all the offices of the nation. Are we afraid to walk in the foot-steps of these men?

No class of men, in the war of the revolution, were more patriotic, were more consistent and undeviating friends of liberty, than the ministers of the gospel.

But it has been said in certain quarters, that almost all the ministers of Kentucky are emancipationists.

Granting this even to be so, if we are to infer hence that the ministry and emancipation are synonymous, and if emancipation must be put down by this constitution, then you cannot accomplish your work without saying that no man shall be a minister! But might not the matter be more easily, certainly more fairly reached, by simply declaring all the emancipationists ineligible? This would lay the axe at the root of the tree.

It is not true, however, that nearly all the ministers of this state favor emancipation. I have taken considerable pains to obtain the exact truth of the case, and I speak understandingly when I declare that an overwhelming majority of them were opposed to emancipation—that a greater proportion of lawyers than preachers were emancipationists. But who would think of assigning that as a reason for declaring that patriotic portion of our fellow-citizens ineligible?

C. M. Clay, and chancellor Nicholas, and the Hon. Henry Clay, and others, the prime movers of emancipation in Kentucky, are no ministers; nor are Garrison, and Birney, and Hale, and Giddings, the great northern lights of abolitionism.

Gentlemen are here treading upon enchanted ground. I am not of those who are haunted by the spectre of emancipation. It is not a name that I invoke to frighten children and nervous persons. No man ought to make emancipation a cause for declaring a citizen ineligible to office.

It is said that ministers have an influence in community; and that if eligible, they would, in some way or other, by using it, endanger the country.

Why, you, Mr. President, have an influence, or you would not now fill that chair; and all the delegates here have an influence, or they would not be here. Gen. Washington was a man of influence, and so is Gen. Taylor, and so is every man who is worth anything at all. But is the influence ascribed to the minister of the gospel, dangerous of itself? This is the true question; and on it I am prepared to meet any gentleman who will take issue. I utterly deny that preaching the gospel gives to any man a dangerous influence. There is nothing whatever in the office of the ministry which necessarily works injury to any one. That bad men have worn the name of ministers as they have of every profession, I do not deny. But these bad men in ministerial garb are the very men whom this section benefits—the man who has “stole the livery of heaven to serve the devil in,” can, with all imaginable facility, accommodate himself to the letter and spirit of your restriction, and revel in the offices and honors of the state.

We have been referred to history, and told that its voice warns to beware of the eligibility of ministers. The blood and carnage of by gone ages, under the outraged name of christianity, have been summoned to testify of the enormities that must be expected, if ministers be allowed to become candidates for office.

Infidelity is wont to refer to this page of history, not to prove that ministers, but christianity itself is the greatest curse and scourge ever inflicted upon an abused world. But all this is the result of not taking a proper view of the subject. It is the confounding of things wholly distinct. Neither christianity nor its ministers were the authors of these things. The genius of the one, and the commission borne by the other emphatically condemn them. That they were perpetrated under the name of christianity is true; but there is not a syllable in the Bible to justify them. They were all anti-christian. You might as well condemn the good coin for the counterfeit, as ascribe that to christianity which it condemns though performed in her name—as to condemn indiscriminately all ministers of the gospel because some bad men have assumed their vocation.

But even admitting the worst aspect of the case—go to the darkest night of the dark ages—and then I maintain that almost the only lights which gilded the moral sky were emitted by the ministers:—that then as not now, they were far in advance of their age and generation. They were called clergy because they alone could write. They possessed almost exclusively the learning and philosophy of the times.

If, however, appeals must be made to history, let all her testimony be taken; let her tell the whole of her story. If we must hear the bad deeds of ministers, let us not forget the good they have done. I am willing to plant myself upon history and let its records be my vindication.

Let us go back to the beginning of the christian era, and what was the state of the world then, in morals, in religion, in science, and in civilization? “Darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people.” Before what light was this darkness driven away? It was the light of that religion for the diffusion of which you propose to make men ineligible to civil office.

Why are we not idolaters like the ancient law makers of Greece and Rome? How happens it, that we are emancipated from the superstition which beclouded their minds? We have been raised in a christian land. Religion has dispelled from our minds the folly which envelopes those sitting in the regions of heathenism. Stand back in the darkness where our religion has never prevailed, and cast your eyes to christendom, and how bright and glorious she appears! What is it that has made her nations and people so much superior to other nations of the earth?—has so elevated them intellectually and morally? It is the christian religion, whose ministers you now seek to proscribe from civil office!

I appeal to woman. Let her, as she contrasts herself with her sister in heathen lands, tell you what has redeemed her from bondage and degradation? Ask her by what means she has been elevated to that proud, almost angelic position she now occupies? And with sparkling eye and beaming countenance she will respond, it was that religion whose ministers you declare unworthy to fill office under this government!

Sir, no class of citizens have done more for the real and enduring good of this country, than those very men whom you are about to class with its worst enemies. They have built most of our institutions of learning. They preside over the most important of our colleges and our universities. They are our principal teachers not only in religion and morals, but in all the useful arts and sciences. They have to a greater extent than any others, formed and fashioned the mind and manners of the people of this country. Are these considerations which should induce you to drive them from all participation in legislation!

But I will press this subject no further. I have already detained the convention longer than I intended. I thank you, Mr. President, and all the delegates, for the very polite attention with which you have listened to me. I felt called upon to say thus much. I have now discharged my duty. If this system still remains in our constitution, and I suppose it will, I shall bow submissively. Persecution is the lot of the minister's inheritance. The world, said our divine Master, will hate you, for it hated me. You shall be hated of all men for my name's sake. But, sir, be assured we will return good for evil. And no matter how hated or how proscribed, you will still have our best wishes. Our country and our countrymen will ever lie near our hearts. Is not “this our own, our native land?” Whatever position civilly you may assign us, under every privation we may experience, we will ever earnestly and fervently ejaculate, "God save the commonwealth! God save the commonwealth!"

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to submit a few remarks to the consideration of the convention, not so much in reply to the gentleman from Woodford, as to a paper which has been introduced into the journals and records of this house, remonstrating against the exclusion of clergymen from the legislature of this commonwealth. Permit me to remark that there is not a man in this house who has a higher regard for religion than myself, although I admit I have never taken upon me that yoke which is said to be easy, and that burden which is light.

I beg leave to read the following preamble which I desire to have adopted as prefatory to the section now under consideration:

"Whereas the history of modern nations teaches that it behooves freemen to watch with jealousy any interference of the church with state, and fearing that, from the slightest beginning, the precedent shall grow till designing and ambitious churchmen corrupt the purity of the church and render it a fit instrument of tyrants: and, whereas, ministers of the gospel are by their profession dedicated to God and the care of souls, and ought not to be diverted from the great duties of their calling, therefore no minister of the gospel, priest, or teacher, of any denomination whatever, shall be eligible to a seat in either house of the general assembly."

I do not claim the parentage of this preamble. The latter portion of it is taken from the constitution of the state of Tennessee, and exhibits a just and proper appreciation of the duties, character, and avocations of the christian ministry; the first part is drawn from the remonstrance (against the exclusion of the clergy from a seat as legislators in the general assembly of this commonwealth) presented some days ago by the gentleman from Bourbon (Mr. Davis.) In this remonstrance they argue the right of the clergy to the office of representative of the people, and they use this language: "The history of modern nations teaches that it behooves freemen to watch with jealousy any interference of the state with the church; seeing that from the slightest beginning the precedent shall grow till designing and ambitious politicians corrupt the purity of the church, and thereby render her a fit instrument for the purposes of tyrants."

It will be perceived by reading the preamble, that I have changed, in some respects, the phraseology of the above quotation from the remonstrance, and so altered it as to make it declare a great truth, and one which I hope to see adopted by this convention, to-wit: "That fearing that from the slightest beginning the precedent shall grow till designing and ambitious churchmen corrupt the purity of the church and of the elective franchise, and thereby render both (the church and the elective franchise) fit instruments of tyranny." Then follows the corollary taken from the constitution of Tennessee, that those who are dedicated to the service of God ought not to be diverted from their duties as his ministers.

Why has congress, by the constitution of the United States, been forbidden to pass any law authorizing the establishment of any religion? Why is it that in many states of this Union ministers of the gospel are prohibited from holding a seat in the legislature?

Mr. WALLER. Will the gentleman allow me to say twenty states never had any such provision in their constitutions, and twenty one have none at the present time.

Mr. TAYLOR. I admit that many of the states have not, in the reconstruction of their organic law, excluded from office the clergy; but I ask again why it is that in any of them the right of holding civil or political office has been denied them? It is a question easily answered, sir. Let your memory run back into the long vista of the past and it will return laden with convictions that there is danger in permitting priests and ministers to have any participation in the political and civil administration of government. It is because all history is fraught with startling instances of that danger.

Look, sir, at the spirit of this remonstrance; as Hamlet said of the ghost of his father, "it comes in such a questionable shape, I dare speak to it," and of it. The book of life informs us that it is the duty of every man "to work out his own salvation with fear and trembling." It is because it is the office of these gentlemen (ministers) to aid the penitent sinner to perform this great duty of working out his personal "salvation with fear and trembling," that the framers of the constitution of Tennessee inserted the clause prohibiting them from holding political offices and thereby diverting them from the care of souls, and from the service of the living God. I believe it is a sufficient reason for their exclusion, one which will withstand alike "the scrutiny of human talents and of time," as it will be acceptable to the great governor and judge of all men, and of him who has said "take up your cross and follow me."

Let us read a little more from this clerical remonstrance:

"If this, therefore, be the implied ground of the restriction reported by your committee—and we can conceive of no other ground sufficient to justify a manifest departure from the general law of equal rights to all—then we feel bound, solemnly to protest against any such provision, as in conflict with one great principle of free government—which it is the peculiar glory of the American states to recognise—the principle of non-interference of civil government with matters of religion."

What does the past teach us all on this subject; it is this, that wherever or whenever ministers of the gospel have acquired civil or political power, they have almost uniformly interfered with matters of religion, and made that power subservient to some peculiar creed or system of morals.

Wherever the doctrine of non-interference with the civil government by the priests and teachers of religion has prevailed, the safety and peace of the country has been promoted. I appeal to all history to prove, that wherever the clergy have been clothed with civil power, that human liberty and human rights have been unsafe.

Say the memorialists, "we deny the competency of the civil government to define the character and functions of the gospel ministry." You do. "Admitting the truth of the general sentiment above quoted, still we protest against such a declaration as a portion of constitutional law. It is solely the duty of the church to declare the functions of her ministers." Who denies the right of the church to declare the duties of its ministers? No one here or elsewhere I presume. This convention has assumed no such power.

Again—we are told by the memorialists, "that the tastes, the views, and the habits of those composing the bodies which frame state constitutions are not necessarily, nor always such as to qualify them (meaning us,) for deciding justly in regard to the proper character and duties of the gospel ministry."

In view of this clerical denunciation of our unfitness, I am almost inclined to say with the poor publican, "Lord be merciful unto me a sinner." What man among us all has pretended to judge of or define the character or declare the functions of the minister of the gospel? No one. They have been defined and declared by the supreme legislator, by him "who spoke and 'twas done, who commanded and it stood fast." All we ask of them is non-interference with our civil institutions—that they shall indeed be non-combatants upon the political arena. The charge that this convention, in the adoption of the section excluding ministers from the possession and exercise of legislative powers, are arrogating the right to judge of the duties of the gospel ministry is untrue, and this clerical denunciation of our capacity and fitness for such purpose is to alarm us—it is to tell us in the language of Burns:

"If there's a hole in a' your coats,
I rede ye tent it;
A chiel's amang you takin' notes,
And, faith, he'll prent it."

We are told, however, in this petition, "that the ministry are not any more than all other christians by their profession dedicated to the service of God." Sir, I had always thought they were indexes to point the way to heaven, and that they were "burning and shining lights" to indicate to us the true way. Strange is it not, that while they deny that the ministry are not more than other christians dedicated to the service of God," that they should yet assert that "protestant churches have for their ministers teachers called of God as they believe, and chosen by the people to instruct the people and administer ordinances established to be signs and seals of spiritual blessing."

So, sir, in one sentence they deny that they are more dedicated to God than other christians, and in another, as just quoted above, they assert that they are called of God.

The memorialists tell us, however, in this state paper of theirs which I am now analyzing, that "their chief objection, however, and that which has led your memorialists to obtrude themselves upon your honorable body, is, that while this provision is advocated most warmly, by those who are peculiarly jealous, as all men ought to be, of any interference between the church and state; yet, the insertion of such a clause in the constitution, on such grounds as we have shown to have been expressed, and as are necessarily implied in so doing, is a decision by civil authority of the great theological question of the age."

Why sir, we must shrink back, we must hesitate, because we are about to decide "the great theological question of the age." What is this great theological question, which the exclusion of the christian ministry from political preferment will decide? Let us read what it is. These reverend gentlemen say—

"The great point in dispute between the church of Rome and those who sympathise with her on the one hand, and the churches of the Reformation on the other, is involved in the question—Is the minister of religion a priest? Is he a peculiar sacred person—standing to mediate between God and his offending creatures, by the offering of sacrifice? Or is he chiefly a teacher—an expounder of the truth, and administrator of sealing ordinances in the church? The church of Rome, if we understand aright her teachings, holds the former view; and consistently with that view, has for her ministers priests, ministering at an altar—offering the sacrifice of the mass—absolving the penitent on confession and penance, and constituting the channel of mysterious grace to the faithful. Protestant churches, on the other hand, have for their ministers teachers, called of God as they believe, and chosen by the people to instruct the people, and administer ordinances established to be signs and seals of spiritual blessing. Of course the ministry of the latter has not that sort of sacredness of character, which necessarily separates them from the mass of christian people—nor that spiritual power and that control over the conscience, which the officers of a priesthood in its very nature confers.

"Now if the minister of religion be a priest—a man apart from the mass of christian people, by the mysterious sacredness of his office, and if in virtue of his office, he have a spiritual power which can be shown to be incompatible with the free suffrage of the people in any way—there might then be some good reason for debarring him from civil office. But if the ministers of religion be merely one of the people, set apart to the duty in the church of expounding the truth and dispensing ordinances, with no other influence and power than that, which the faithful discharge of his duty confers upon him, then clearly there is no reason for making any distinction between him and other citizens in regard to the privileges of citizenship.

"If this statement of the question be correct—and we have no motive to misstate it—or do we think any one, whichever view of the question he takes, will be disposed to controvert its main features, then it follows that to decide by the constitution, that ministers of the gospel shall be ineligible to political preferment, is, in so far, to decide this great theological controversy against Protestants. Our complaint, however, is not that it is decided against us—but that it is decided at all by such authority."

So we see that 'tis the church of Rome, they are after, that whore of Babylon. If they can only persuade us that in excluding ministers of the gospel from political preferment, we are deciding the great theological controversy against protestants, they flatter themselves that we will open the door of the legislative halls to the aspirations of the ambitious minister of the new covenant.

Mr. President, I want no better evidence of the propriety of their exclusion from interfering in the politics of the country, than is to be found in this very sentence just quoted by me. When they are knocking at the door, and demanding admittance, they are saying to one of their roman catholic brethren "stand back, for I am holier than thou—there is no danger in my admission, but beware of a priest, for he claims a spiritual power and control over the conscience," and therefore be jealous of him; but we claim no such mysterious sacredness of office, and wield no power incompatible with the free suffrage of the people.

Mr. WALLER. Will the gentleman allow me to interfere again. I do it because the gentlemen cannot do it themselves. They do not intend to cast any reflection on the catholic religion. There is a notorious controversy between catholics and protestants, in relation to their ministry. I am sure they intend no reflection against the catholic priesthood; they only say they do not want this convention to interfere with, and settle the question against the catholics. They do not desire the catholics should be kept out. They think, according to the American doctrine of the independence of the church from the state, that the clergy ought not to be excluded from civil office—that is their argument. I know they believe as firmly as I do, that the catholic priests have as much right to be regarded as eligible as any other teacher of religion.

Mr. TAYLOR resumed, and observed (that when he gave way to his friend Mr. Waller,) he was attempting to show that the tendency of the remarks of the memorialists was to convince us that there was a denomination of clergy in this country, of whom we should be especially jealous. Mr. President, I am for excluding them all, as well those who do not, as those who do wear the cowl and gown; as well he who bows to the cardinal's cap, as him who does not. As to this matter, they are all alike to me; they are all teachers of religion, and the experience of the past, and the admonitions of history teach me, that 'tis safe policy to exclude all, and hence I am in favor of the clause reported by the committee. The language of the report is "no person, while he continues to exercise the functions of a clergyman, priest, or teacher of any religious persuasion, society, or sect, shall be eligible to the general assembly." This includes all denominations, embracing mormons. Tell me not sir, that in voting for this clause, that I am deciding "the great theological controversy of the age," and that too against protestants. No sir, I am placing all upon an equality, making no distinction among the sects—I am prompted neither by inclination or duty to do so.

I do not know enough of the peculiar tenets of the catholic church at present, to speak of the power of the priest over the layman; but I understand there is an alliance existing in the country called "the protestant alliance," the object of which is to prevent as far as possible the propagation of the catholic faith here. I am no roman catholic; I am, however, a firm believer in the divinity of our savior. I have many relatives and friends who are members of the various protestant churches; those whom I have most loved and cherished on earth, and whom I desire to meet in heaven, belonged to the protestant church. I exclude all catholics and all protestants. They may form alliances among themselves, but so far as my vote can go in this convention, none of their ministers or priests shall form any alliance or connection with the political power of this commonwealth, as that power is displayed in the legislative halls.

I drew the preamble read by me when I first rose to address the convention. I am not solicitous for its adoption, but it contains reasons sufficient in my estimation to justify the exclusion of the clergy as reported in the clause by the committee on the legislative department. Obsta principiis—resist things in the beginning. In obedience to this maxim, I have determined never to vote for a man who was in favor of stopping the mail on Sunday. That was intended but as the beginning to still greater and more serious attempts upon the liberty of the citizen. It is the dictate of prudence therefore to exclude all and every attempt upon the part of teachers of any and every religious denomination whatever, to place themselves where either their interest or their mistaken and misdirected zeal for the cause of their master would induce them to exercise power and forget right. The spirit manifested in this very memorial convinces me of the propriety of the vote I am about to cast.

Mr. GARFIELD. Personally, I feel no interest in the question of eligibility of ministers of the gospel to a seat in the legislature, for two or three very good reasons. I could not come to the legislature from my county if I would, and I would not if I could, and if I both could and would, the restriction contained in the report of the committee on the legislative department would not act as a barrier to prevent me.

It is very singular that the able committee who made this report, and the very critical gentleman who has just preceded me, have not observed one point in the report on this subject. It says: "No person, while he exercises the functions of a clergyman, priest, &c." Notice the sentence, "while he exercises the functions." The mere cessation of the functions of a clergyman renders a man eligible to a seat in the legislature of the state. This amounts, in reality, to no disqualification. The preacher with his license in his pocket, may be elected to the legislature and take his seat, simply by ceasing to preach during the session of the legislature. This prohibition amounts then to a shadow without a substance, a name without a reality, and simply proves the sentiments of the committee who originated the clause, and the gentlemen who support it without accomplishing the object intended.

It does however, accomplish one thing, and that is, it permits those who wear their clerical robes loosely, to come to the legislature, while the more conscientious are restrained; thereby aggravating the very evil which is sought to be remedied. But I leave this matter to be perfected by the friends and supporters of the measure. I possess neither the eloquence nor the power to handle this subject as it should be; I shall therefore say but little, leaving the advocacy of the great principles contained in it to wiser heads and more eloquent tongues.

There are, however, one or two thoughts which are as yet untouched, and which I will present to the consideration of the convention. So far as this memorial is concerned, which the last gentleman on the floor has dissected, I had nothing to do with it, neither am I responsible for the arguments contained in it; still I will take occasion to say that it is an able document, unanswered, and, to my mind, unanswerable—full of sound reason, and appeals to the love of liberty and equal rights which is the choicest inheritance derived from our revolutionary ancestry.

I have felt this morning, more than ever before, the great necessity of every legislator being a lawyer. And the reason why every legislator should be a lawyer is this: that he may the better understand the hackneyed phrases a thousand times used, which the fraternity bring in when short of argument. If a proposition is driven home with a force of reason and power of argument wholly unanswerable, the cry of "special pleading" is raised, and behind this terrible phrase gentlemen strive to conceal the weakness of their own positions. Now I must confess I do not know the meaning of the phrase as used here. I do not know whether it means in common parlance, "I acknowledge the corn," (laughter,) or that the arguments of the special pleader are unsound. I sincerely trust that if this argument goes much further, gentlemen will be so good as to enlighten us upon this very essential point. (Laughter.) One thing is certain, when gentlemen are unable to meet argument with argument, fact with fact, and reason with reason, they shield themselves under legal technicalities, and from behind this screen cry "special pleading" to the home thrusts of their adversaries.

I have been somewhat amused at the course this discussion has taken. We are very gravely informed by the very pious gentleman from Mason (Mr. Taylor) that ministers of the gospel should not be eligible to a seat in the legislature because they have the care of souls under their charge; and he raises his hands in holy horror at the bare idea of one of these children of the church becoming corrupted. It is somewhat strange to me, I must confess, that gentlemen should take so great interest in the spiritual welfare of others to the neglect of their own salvation. I hope the gentleman will pardon me, but if it devolves upon me to work out my own salvation with fear and trembling, does not the same obligation reach every fallen son of Adam? And will not this category per possibility reach the gentleman from Mason? Still we are told that if preachers become members of the legislature, it will constitute the first step towards the union of church and state. The danger is just as imminent if you admit laymen; and according to this doctrine, if a legislator join the church his seat should be vacated for fear the church will exercise some undue influence over him. What is the difference between electing a minister and a layman? If the designs of the church are evil, you incur the same danger in the one case as in the other. The principle carried out works the exclusion of all professors of religion. I repeat, sir, you must proscribe all church members and leave the helm of state in the hands of non-professors for fear Christians will abuse their power and effect the union of church and state. This is the legitimate tendency of the arguments of the opposition.

Again, we are told that great wickedness has been perpetrated under the name and sanction of the church. Grant that such has been the case. Is that a fair argument for excluding ministers from your legislative halls? Is that a reason for prohibiting the people from electing the men of their choice when that choice happens to be a preacher of the gospel? If the only wickedness committed on earth had been perpetrated in the church, by the church, and under the sanction of the church, then indeed there would be some force in the argument. But we have a lesson from high authority on this subject. We have been wisely exhorted to take the beam out of our own eye and then we can the more clearly discern the mote in our brother's eye. If then the church has gone astray, the world has always been astray. And it must first be proven that the church of Christ is the peculiar seat and habitation of sin, vice, and immorality, and that holiness, purity, and uprightness dwell entirely with non-professors, before we urge the deviations of the church as an argument against the eligibility of either ministers or laymen.

Sir, we find hypocrites everywhere, we find designing, crafty, wicked men everywhere. In all places and in all conditions we find a class of individuals who are disposed to hide their selfish and iniquitous purposes under any cloak which will best conceal them. But are clergymen the only designing men in the world? Are preachers of the gospel the peculiar depositories of vice and corruption? Does their calling peculiarly qualify them for the basest acts of which human nature can be guilty? Are they the only men who will sell their own and their fellow citizen's birthright for a mess of pottage? Do they above all other men abhor a republican form of government, and would they seek every means to subvert it? Are they the only traitors in the world? Such, indeed, would gentlemen induce us to believe them. This is the high estimate placed upon men who sacrifice wealth, honor, and fame for the benefit of their fellows, and such is the high meed of praise which they receive. The gentleman from Mason forms no better estimate of the body politic and politicians. He says the politician is corrupt, the legislator is corrupt, the body politic is corrupt, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot. Has he not told you gentlemen, that it is his kind, benevolent design to save the sleek coats of the clergy from the quagmire of political corruption in which you all are floundering? This is a keen thrust at your political characters which I leave you to ward off.

I know but little of that political mire and filth which he says is so thickly spread over the face of this commonwealth. I know but little of the quagmires of political degradation which have been depicted to you in such disgusting but unnatural colors, and in which the gentleman would make you believe he had floundered all his life. But, sir, I have learned one thing which, in me, has plumed the pinions of hope, which has made me rejoice for my country, and which has given me a new supply of political courage. I have learned that the people are not so corrupt, so bespattered with the mire of political corruption as is represented. I have learned that the people of Kentucky can appreciate political truth, and that they are prepared to stamp upon any man's forehead the brand of demagogue who is disposed to pander to the political views of the age. I have learned that they are qualified to distinguish between the vile demagogue and the honest man. I have learned that they are unprepared to recognize any man as their representative, whether churchman or worldling, who bows at the shrine of self-aggrandizement alone; who worships no deity but self, and who labors to build his own personal elevation upon the ruins of his country.

But sir, it is designed to accomplish some good by this restriction. It is intended either to keep the preachers pure, or to preserve the state from some supposed danger. In regard to the first design, the protection of the clergy, it is not legitimately within the province of constitutional provision. The state has a right to preserve itself and to legislate upon all matters purely political. But it has no right to legislate for the church. The purity of the gospel ministry is a question belonging solely to the church to settle. If we have a right to legislate for the purity of the ministers, then we have the right to deprive them of their offices when they violate our rules of clerical decorum; and this would, in effect, prostitute the church. It would be compelled to receive its faith and rules of practice from legislative enactment, instead of the pure fountain of divine revelation. But I apprehend, that upon reflection, this argument of the purity of the clergy will not be seriously entertained by any member present. It devolves upon the church to regulate the conduct of its public teachers, and I have no doubt the same feeling would obtain here which exists in the states where there is no constitutional prohibition, and that we should rarely see a preacher in the legislature. I have no doubt that the great majority of the churches in this state would deprive those ministers of their offices who would so far forget the sacredness of their calling as to engage regularly in political strife. Such a course does not become the station of a minister. His duties are as much higher as heaven is above earth. The effect of his labors are as much more enduring as eternity is more enduring than time, and the relative station of clergyman and politician, according to the doctrine of the gentleman from Mason, are as far asunder as heaven and hell.

I think sir, that the other argument, the preservation of the state, is inapplicable to the case, for, if necessary, it might be proven that the preachers of this country are as patriotic, honest and upright as any other class of citizens, and the opposite opinion is but the conclusion of a prejudiced mind. Priests and people in different ages have participated in the corruptions of our nature; but that the priests of any age have been more corrupt than the political powers of the same age is a proposition which yet lacks demonstration.

This question of prohibition involves a great principle, and for the principle only do I contend. What induced the citizens of Boston to dress as Mohawks and overturn the tea in the Boston harbor? What induced our forefathers to resist the stamp act? Was it the paltry pittance required of them on stamped paper? No sir. It was the great principle involved. It was for that principle they resisted the enactments of parliament, and when it became necessary poured out their blood freely in maintaining their rights. We, their descendants, are this day re-enacting the injustice of the British parliament in drawing this invidious distinction between ministers of the gospel and other members of community.

But, it is thought that by excluding preachers from the legislature, we protect the government from an undue religious influence. This theory is idle. "It is wrought of such stuff as dreams are, and baseless as the fantastic visions of the evening." Before adopting any great principle of exclusion, we should be certain that it will accomplish the object intended. Why was the doctrine of ministerial disqualification originally incorporated into our constitution? It was because our fathers had formerly fled from an intolerant church. But the state was as intolerant as the church; and he who deduces from our early history the idea that all the evils of the institutions of our mother country were to be found in the clergy, has studied history to little purpose. But admit for a moment all the imaginary evils which a diseased brain can invent, will the prohibition remove them? No sir. Evil priests produce evil members, and you must exclude the follower as well as the leader or you have accomplished nothing. The line of demarcation between the dangerous and useful citizen is a moral line which cannot be traced by the avocations of men, but must be regulated by the conduct. If you wish to exclude a given influence you must proscribe all under that influence. If therefore you wish to exclude undue religious influence, you must exclude all members of the church, for the most dangerous power is that which has a concealed origin and manifests itself through a third person. Such would be the influence of the clergy through lay members.

It is urged that ministers of religion shall not be eligible to the legislature because they have the care of souls. For the same reason lawyers should be ineligible because they have the care of estates, and physicians because they have the care of the body; (which, by the way, many believe to be of much more importance than the soul;) thus the three professions, by the same reasoning, would be excluded. How much more anxious men often are, when fever is preying upon their vitals, to cure the body than the soul; and yet these very men tell us that as preachers are appointed to cure the soul, therefore they should not be eligible to the legislature. Consistency, thou art a jewel.

The man who does not intrude himself upon public notice, who pursues the even tenor of his way, who leads the peaceful and quiet life, and who is not a political brawler, has rights which, although unexercised, are dear to him; and it is the exercise of might unaccompanied by right, when those rights are taken from him. It is sir, trampling upon the rights of an honorable, gentlemanly, useful, and learned class of Kentucky citizens, to incorporate this prohibition in the constitution. As has been justly observed, in other states where there is no prohibition, you will but seldom see a preacher in the legislature. On the other hand, where restrictions exist as in this state, you will frequently find preachers in the legislature. Viewing the subject in all its attitudes, the conclusion is forced upon my mind that we are violating a great fundamental principle without deriving the least possible benefit from that violation.

I have been induced, sir, to offer these remarks, not from any personal motives, but because I wished to see that old relic of the dark ages removed from our organic law, and every freeman placed upon a level, making character, integrity and qualification the only prerequisites to office.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am told that "pure and undefiled religion consists in visiting the widows and the fatherless, and keeping oneself unspotted from the world." I will substitute the above quotation as a preamble to the clause, if it will suit my friend from Fleming any better. I cannot see how a man can keep himself pure and unspotted from the world, if he mingles in the ardent and bitter political conflicts of the day. When I was first up, I spoke of the turmoil, confusion and strife engendered by political excitement, the retaliation, recrimination and fanaticism of party. There are men engaged on either side who answer Philips' description of a bigot, "one who has no head and cannot think, and no heart and cannot feel." The gentleman from Fleming (Mr. Garfield) made one true remark; "that it was not becoming in a minister of the gospel, nor was it his duty to mingle in the political strifes of the country, that his calling was elevated as far above this, as the heavens are above hell." It is to keep him above these influences and to preserve his character pure; it is that he may stand like Moses on Mount Pisgah and point us on to the promised land; it is to prevent him from coming down to the base of the mountain to mingle in the beggarly elements and pollutions of the world, participation in which unfits him for the great vocation to which he is called by his divine master. These are some of the reasons which induce me to vote for their exclusion from political life. I desire that they may indeed be "burning and shining lights," and so desiring, I intend to vote for the prohibitory clause reported by the committee.

Mr. WALLER. I cannot see from all I have heard from my friend from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) but what his argument applies as pointedly and as powerfully against all professors of religion, as against preachers. His preamble last read certainly applies to all christians indiscriminately. But I appeal to the candor of this house, if the position he assumes, and especially the amendment which he read, does not strike at the foundation of the very principle he opposes, and favor the union of church and state. If government may regulate any of the offices of the church, it has a right to regulate all, and if you say a man who speaks in favor of religion shall not be eligible to office, you restrict the freedom of speech, and you strike a fatal stab at the right of man's speaking on the most important of all subjects to himself. I think you should not attempt to interfere with religion in any way.

The gentleman has read history to little purpose if he has failed to learn this lesson, that it was an effort of politicians to regulate the church, and not of the church to regulate the state, which brought about that union he now so justly condemns. But for regarding the ministers as a distinct class by the Justinian code, to subvert the purposes of state, there would have been no union of church and state. It is the right of the state to interfere in matters of religion, against which I most emphatically protest. The gentleman's modern history is at fault likewise in another respect. He alluded to the "blue laws" of Connecticut. I supposed every reading man had long since learnt that these laws are mere fictions, and that no such code ever existed in any state upon earth. If the gentleman's history is of the same kind, it is of little consequence. I remember one record however given in sacred history to which I may refer. The prophet was once rebuked by an animal not accustomed to speak; but it seems a slightly different fate has been my portion on this occasion.

Mr. HARDIN. I expect I shall have to give a vote against a majority of the convention, and I shall make only a few remarks before doing so. I have, for the last forty years, from time to time, noted the exclusion from the legislative halls of Kentucky, of the ministers of the gospel; and I could never see any good reason for it. I recollect when there were efforts made to force the president of the United States into a recognition of the independence of Spanish America. In some remarks I made in congress on that subject, I said I did not believe they could establish a republic there. They were all of one religious denomination. And it turned out to be true. Our government is very happily balanced. All our foreign relations, all our matters and things belonging to the nation, the army and the navy, are managed by the government of the United States; and that government is divided into three departments—the legislative, the executive and the judicial. They check and balance each other. But it would soon become a consolidated government and a despotism, were it not the municipal regulations of the country belong to the state government, and they are divided into three departments—the legislative, executive and judicial. They check and balance each other. The state governments balance the general government, and the general government balances the state governments. And the state governments check and balance each other. But the great check is this: we have in the United States, and in all the states and territories, religion, and a great many religious denominations have sprung up. They are all worshipping God and their Savior in the manner their conscience points out to them. And it is fortunate for the United States that no one sect has, perhaps, one twentieth part of the people. I have some statistics of the different religious denominations in Kentucky, which I think correct, which were taken about three years ago. Of methodists, there are about one hundred and fifty ministers, thirty thousand white members; united baptists about fifty thousand; reformers, from forty to fifty thousand, white and black; old school presbyterians, ninety ministers, and ten thousand members; new school presbyterians, twenty one ministers and twelve hundred members, episcopal, twenty seven ministers, and about twelve hundred members; and of roman catholics, fifty to sixty ministers, and a white population of forty thousand. The whole together of the religious denominations will not amount to more than thirty thousand voters. We have now about one hundred and fifty thousand voters in the state. What danger then is there of a unity of church and state? There is a gentleman over the way, I do not know whether he is a minister of the gospel or not. Well, if he says he belongs to the church and he has two hundred and fifty voters; here is my worthy friend before us, (Mr. Waller,) who has eight thousand two hundred and fifty voters. Will there be any combination of the methodists and baptists? Will the catholics and presbyterians confederate? No; you might as well expect oil and water to mix. There can be no collusion, and there will be no conspiracy, especially when out of one hundred and fifty two thousand, there are only thirty thousand members of the church. I do not vouch for my information being correct, but a gentleman connected with the church has furnished me with the statistics I have read. What class of men are the clergy? They are moral, virtuous and intelligent men, and as a body, are the most learned men in Kentucky; and I say this without fear of contradiction. Some to be sure, start out on the ground that they have a calling that way. They say Christ made preachers out of fishermen, and that learning is calculated to spoil the preachers. The catholic clergy are learned men, we know. The father of the gentleman who prayed this morning, sent him four years to Rome that he might be educated. All denominations are trying to give their clergy an education.

We know that the presbyterians are doing every thing to instruct their clergy. So are the methodists, so are the baptists, and so is every religious denomination. And it must be confessed that they are a learned body of men—much more learned and intelligent, generally, than the doctors and lawyers. I will not say that there is more virtue, but I say there is as much. I will not say they possess more natural gifts. Well, what harm have they done? Here is my friend near me, (Mr. Waller,) one of the best informed men in the house; he has been here nine weeks, and he has not troubled the house but once, and that was to-day. There is the gentleman from Mason, who has not spoken much, but when he does speak, speaks well. We all expect to die in a few days, [laughter,] he goes off so much like—

"Hark! from the tombs, a doleful sound,
Mine ears attend the cry:
Ye living men come view the ground,
Where you must shortly lie." [Laughter.]

I am in favor of the admission of the clergy. There is no exclusion in congress. I have never seen less than from ten to twenty there, and they are as praiseworthy a body of men, and as good members as you can find any where. I see nothing in any of these men to exclude them, whether they be presbyterians or baptists; and there is not a man whom I would more willingly meet than my worthy catholic friend, the priest who prays for us here every few days. These men have a right to go to the legislature. They pay their taxes as we do—they submit to the laws, and help to sustain the government. And if there is a war, do you not see them at the head of your regiments, volunteering to pray to the Almighty for the success of our arms? I know the idea of the danger of mixing up church and state has come to us from the British government. But there we see the church having a representation in the house of lords. I did not intend to make an argument, but I rose merely to give the information I hold in my hand. But, I repeat, that there is no reason why we should exclude them. They have the same rights that we have—they are of an age required by law—they are native Americans, or if not, naturalized citizens—they submit cheerfully to the law—they are a virtuous body, and they contribute to the support of the government, and what is more, to the educational part of the country they have contributed more than any other class. Why is it we call gentlemen to pray for us every day? It is to address the Throne of Grace. "But," says the gentleman from Mason, "there is danger to the country, and therefore we must have the preamble which has been offered, and the exclusion of the clergy." I am utterly against the preamble, and against the exclusion.

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. It is not my intention to detain the convention. My mind is fully made up to exclude ministers of religion from the political arena. We have been engaged here several weeks in amending the constitution of the state, and a considerable portion of that time has been spent in devising what restrictions shall be put on those who may become candidates for public office. We have said that no man shall be a judge of the court of appeals unless he is qualified by having practiced eight years at the bar. We have also said he shall be thirty years of age, and a resident for a certain time in the district in which he may be a candidate. These are the requirements we have made in regard to judges of the court of appeals. Now we are called upon to consider what shall be the qualifications of a candidate for the legislature. That is a question which I think should be fairly and dispassionately considered. We are asked by a most respectable portion of the people, by the clergy, by men whose minds and pursuits are elevated beyond human concerns, to remove the restrictions which are placed upon them, and to open to them the arena of politics. They have asked us in a most respectful and eloquent manner to admit them to occupy seats in our legislative halls. I object to complying with their request on account of their utter disqualification for the office of a legislator. I voted that a lawyer should have served eight years at the bar in order to qualify him for a judgeship. I object to a preacher being brought upon this floor, because he is sworn by his ordination vows to relinquish the pomps and vanities of the world. He has sworn that henceforth he will have nothing to do with the world and its vanities; that he will be ignorant of all the great concerns of man that relate to this earth and confine himself entirely to the consideration of those tendencies which lead to heaven above.

He has sworn to this; and that oath—that ordination vow—expressly disqualifies him, because either he has sworn to the truth, or he has not. If he has not sworn to the truth, then he is perjured; if he has sworn to the truth, and abandons it, still he is perjured. On either horn of this dilemma, therefore, he is disqualified in my estimation. One objection I have to their coming here is, that from my acquaintance with the clergy—which is but limited—I have met among them more interesting, more educated, more highly cultivated, more innocent minded men, than among any other class of men, whether professors of religion or not. Looking to the position in which our state is placed, it would be wrong in this body to give them a voice in our legislative halls. I shall vote against them, because I deem it impolitic that they should interfere with matters of a civil and political character. I shall vote against them because they have sworn that they are disqualified for any other office; and if we are to have disqualified men, then you incorporate into your new constitution that which your old constitution repudiates.

Mr. BULLITT. I have no hesitation in voting against the admission of the clergy into our legislative assemblies, and I will now give my reasons for so doing. They are the ambassadors of God on earth. For three hundred years after the crucifixion of Christ, they were considered the purest men on earth. From the establishment of the government of the United States, the clergy have possessed the same character, and I wish to keep them in that state of purity. The first account we have, is in Tacitus, contained in a letter from Pliny to Trajan, who was then the Emperor of Rome. The officer stated that several christians had been brought forward, who had refused to worship according to the laws of the land; and Pliny enquired what should be done with them. The officer stated it had been proved that they were pure men, and had not interfered with the government, nor been found guilty of any crime. Trajan replied, that Pliny, as governor of the province must, whenever a christian was brought before him, and proven to be guilty, enforce the laws against him; but he did not wish him to encourage informers on the subject. This purity remained with them up the time of Constantine the Great, who placed the church by the side of the throne. It cannot be questioned that for long after that fatal association of the church with the state, the greatest crimes were committed, the greatest outrages perpetrated upon the liberties and morals of society, under the sanction of state religion, that have ever disgraced the annals of the history of mankind. Witness the massacre of "Saint Bartholomew"—the history of which is familiar to you all—having a woman at its head. In order more effectually to accomplish the object of destruction, a royal wedding was proclaimed, to which all the most distinguished protestants of both sexes, in the kingdom of France were invited, and by this means a wholesale massacre was accomplished. In this general rising, 70,000 persons were murdered in one night. In making allusion to this particular instance of criminality, I do not intend to throw out any insinuations against the Roman catholics as a sect. There is little doubt that any other sect, had they been subject to the same influences, would have acted precisely in the same manner.

The government of the United State is the first that has ever established full and fair toleration. The best writers on the subject of the connection between church and state—the best writers of England, and many of the ablest of ancient times, have considered it impossible for any government to stand for any period, without an established religion; but the history of the United States has fully proved, that all religions are harmless to the safety of a state so long as they are not incorporated with state institutions—nay, that in many respects they have been productive of much benefit when let alone.

Let us bring about a union of church and state, and that union will destroy this or any other government that ever was, or ever can be framed. I should therefore, be inclined to adopt the principle and the practice of Andrew Jackson, who was applied to by a minister of the Gospel for an office, under his administration. His reply to the applicant was, "you hold already an office much higher than any I can bestow upon you; I would advise you to go home and attend to the duties of that office."

Now, I shall vote against the admission of clergymen into the legislature for two controlling reasons: one is, that the connection of the clergy with the legislature will have a tendency to corrupt the church itself; and the other is, that such a connection would have an equal tendency to corrupt the state. We all know that the preachers, from their very vocation, have a controlling influence in their particular circles. It is true, that like all other men, when they come before the public, they ought to stand upon their own merits. And would not the Catholic priest have the same influence?

But we are told that the church is specially represented in other countries. Yes; how is she represented in Rome? By absolute authority. How is she represented in Spain? By the inquisition. How is she represented in Prussia? By cringing to the requirements of the Czar, who is the high priest. And how is she represented in England? Why, the people are all tythed one tenth of all their produce for her maintenance—the bishops and archbishops receiving enormous sums—the two archbishops get each over £50,000 sterling, and perhaps the poor curate, who does all the duty, and who attends most assiduously to the care of the flock, receives the pittance of twenty pounds a year. I hope gentlemen hardly expect we shall ever get as high as the archbishop of England.

No man ought to be eligible to the legislature, who can bring to bear in the canvass an official influence to elevate him to a post which he has not individual merit to reach without such influence. A preacher of talent and merit always possesses a controlling influence over his congregation, which would be used for his own aggrandizement. It is contended that the virtuous preacher ought not, and would not, forsake the duties of the church, and intermingle in politics, if he was eligible. To this I reply, that they possess all the ambition common to our nature, which was fully evinced in the late canvass for the convention. As soon as the restriction was removed, we found the preachers in different parts of the state actively engaged in the elections—many of them engaged in stump speaking—whilst others became candidates. We have now in this body two or three preachers of eminent talents and worth, and as good members as any we have. I should be sorry to exclude them; but the public good requires a general exclusion, and we can make no exceptions.

As evidence of the great influence of the preachers, I would state that I have found, as far as my knowledge extends, that the politicians of the country generally, stand in great awe of them, and would be afraid to meet them on the stump, in the same manner, and with the same freedom, with which they would meet other men.

It was not my intention to make any remarks on this section, or on the resolution offered as an amendment; but as the debate has run somewhat high, I have thrown out these suggestions, which will be taken for what they are worth.

Mr. GARRARD. Mr. President: So far as I can ascertain the opinions of the delegates on this floor, I am satisfied that they desire to get through with the business before them, and to adjourn by the 20th of this month; and so far as I know anything about the business of this convention, I am disposed on all occasions to hear as much discussion as will do the subject any good; but I will say to that portion of the convention, who like myself have been chained down to our duties for the last two months, that it is time we should take the power into our own hands, especially after the example of this morning, when we have had speeches from gentlemen who have just returned from their own homes on a subject on which two thirds of the convention have no difference of opinion. I regret that it should be necessary on any occasion to apply the previous question; but from what I have heard this morning I am satisfied that this is a necessary occasion. I call for the previous question.

The main question was now ordered to be put.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE called for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out, and they were taken, and were—yeas 17, nays 74.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Charles Chambers, James Dudley, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, William Johnson, Alexander K. Marshall, Johnson Price, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson, John L. Waller, Silas Woodson—17.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—74.

So the convention refused to strike out.

The section was then adopted.

Mr. GHOLSON, for the purpose of obtaining an opportunity to state the reasons for the vote which he had just given, moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the section was adopted. He said he had given his vote in obedience to the instructions of his constituents, but against the conclusions of his own judgment. He then withdrew the motion to reconsider.

On the motion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, the convention proceeded to the consideration of the thirty second section, as follows:

"SEC. 32. The general assembly may contract debts to meet casual deficits or failures in the revenue, or for expenses not provided for, but such debts, direct or contingent, singly or in the aggregate, shall not at any time exceed five hundred thousand dollars; and the moneys, arising from loans creating such debts, shall be applied to the purposes for which they were obtained, or to repay such debts: Provided, That the state may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or, if hostilities are threatened, provide for the public defence."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If this section is designed, as I suppose it was by the committee, to enable the legislature to provide for any possible deficit of revenue, I am prepared to vote for it; but I am not prepared to vote for extending the permission to contract a loan for half a million of dollars annually. I move to strike out "five hundred;" and I do it with the view of offering to insert a smaller sum.

Mr. HARDIN. That subject was referred to the committee of which I was chairman. The reason why I did not call them together on this subject, was, I discovered that another committee had reported on the same subject. I will read some papers which I have in relation to it. The State of Kentucky is now indebted $4,497,152 81. Her bank stock is $1,270,500, and it is fair to presume these banks will pay the whole, dollar for dollar. Besides that, we are indebted to public schools the following sum, in which interest is included: $1,299,268 42. This indebtedness we are bound to pay. I do not desire, therefore, to give the legislature unlimited power to increase that indebtedness. I should prefer that, instead of being allowed to incur a debt of $500,000, they should be restricted to $50,000. I have got a statement here that will show the enormous amounts that have been expended, and through which this debt has been incurred. The Green river improvement cost $859,126 79—the Kentucky river $901,932 70—the Licking river $372,520 70; and from this last named improvement we have never derived a cent. Besides this, we have expended the following sums on turnpike roads:

Maysville, Washington, Paris and Lexington road, -	$213,200 00
Franklin county, road to Louisville, -	20,000 00
Shelby co., road to Louisville, -	45,000 00
Muldrow's Hill road, -	55,145 46
Mercer co., Crab Orchard road, -	71,800 00
Frankfort, Lexington and Versailles road, -	78,122 00
Danville, Lancaster and Nicholasville road, -	151,382 00
Scott county, road to Frankfort, -	43,325 00
Franklin co., road to Frankfort, -	15,400 00
Winchester and Lexington road, -	45,100 00
Lincoln co., Crab Orchard road, -	51,299 00
Covington and Georgetown road, -	170,135 77
Richmond and Lexington road, -	75,383 00
Georgetown and Lexington road, -	30,270 00
Anderson county, Crab Orchard road, -	42,950 00
Louisville to mouth Salt river, -	65,340 99
Mouth Salt river to Elizabethtown, -	84,581 16
Elizabethtown to Bell's tavern, -	118,778 24
Bell's tavern to Bowlinggreen, -	85,488 70
Bowlinggreen to Tennessee line, -	87,194 16
Franklin county, Crab Orchard road, -	17,064 00
Bardstown and Springfield road, -	65,190 60
Lexington, Harrodsburg and Perryville road, -	109,646 00
Bardstown and Louisville road, -	100,000 00
Bardstown and Green river road, -	289,825 19
Glasgow and Scottsville road, -	110,385 38
Mount Sterling and Maysville road, -	88,072 59
Versailles to Kentucky river, -	20,000 00
Logan, Todd and Christian, -	149,428 91
Maysville and Bracken road, -	25,948 00
Total, on turnpike roads, -	$2,525,456 15

And for railroads the following sums:
Amount expended on Green river rail road, -	$1,903
Amount expended on Lexington and Ohio railroad between Frankfort and Louisville, -	220,000
Amount expended on Lexington and Ohio railroad, between Frankfort and Lexington, -	100,650
Total expended for railroads, -	$322,553

And from these works, the state does not receive any thing like a sum to pay the interest on the expenditure; or scarcely to keep those of them that are in operation, in repair. I hope, therefore, the $500,000 will be stricken out.

Mr. PRESTON. I concur in the necessity of putting some restriction on the power of the legislature to involve the people in debt. And I ask the attention of the convention to the thirty-second section of the article, that they may see in what attitude it places the power of the legislature on this subject, before they determine upon adopting the propositions of either of the gentlemen from Nelson. The legislature of this state have heretofore had an unlimited power to create debt, and nearly every state in this union has the same power. Those which are most democratic in their form of government, with the exception of New York, Louisiana, and one or two others, have not deemed it necessary to put any other check upon the power of their legislatures to create debt, than the responsibility of the members to their constituents. We, therefore, are about to tread on new ground, and the vote which delegates here are about to give is one probably for which they will be called to a stricter account than any other which they may, or have, given, during the session. Every one must have been struck with the evils which have been alluded to by the elder gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin); the quantity of money we have spent, the indebtedness in which we are involved as a state, and the amount of taxation necessary to pay the interest and principal of that indebtedness. In view of these facts, what then do the committee who reported this article propose to do, to check this debt-creating power? In the thirty-third section, they say that the legislature of Kentucky, from this time henceforward, shall never have the right to contract debt, except by the consent of the people to whom the act creating the debt, with a provision incorporated in it for the liquidation of it, shall first be submitted for their assent or dissent. Let me ask them if it is desirable that we should proceed further, and declare that the legislature shall be shorn of all power, and not even have the miserable privilege of creating a debt to the extent of one year's income, and that whatever may be the failure in the revenue, they shall not have power to supply the deficiency? What have the committee done in this particular? They have declared that the state legislature—notwithstanding the advance in wealth and population of the state—never shall increase the public indebtedness beyond a sum which the annual income will pay—say five hundred thousand dollars—inasmuch as difficulties might spring up, the effect of which would be to disgrace the state, unless this provision existed. Disastrous periods might occur, like that of 1840, when it was necessary to borrow money to save us from the disgrace of repudiation. You who have been claiming for the legislature such authority as to say that they should have the power to remove the whole judiciary, are now declaring, with most singular inconsistency, that they should not have the power of contracting a debt which, altogether, singly or in the aggregate, will not exceed the annual revenue of the state. I do not understand why it is that one moment you wish to repose a power so vast in the legislature, and in the next wish to deny them even this small privilege, when it may be necessary, perhaps, to save the state from disgrace. Suppose this capitol should burn—why, fifty thousand dollars would not be sufficient to restore the library or to supply the furniture even. This building, itself, cost more than one hundred thousand dollars. And would you leave the legislature of the state houseless for three or four intervening years, until an act could be submitted to the people and passed by the legislature? I am utterly averse, also, to striking out five hundred thousand dollars and substituting therefor one hundred thousand dollars; and for the same reasons. Would it be improvident to say that a man may contract debts to an amount which his annual income would reimburse? Would it be improvident then to say the same thing of the state? Might it not hereafter lead to great evils in the conduct of the affairs of the state, to impose such a restriction? Now, here is the thirty-third section, and if it is not stringent enough in all conscience, to satisfy either of the gentlemen from Nelson, I cannot conceive what will answer that purpose. It provides:

"No act of the general assembly shall authorize any debt to be contracted, on behalf of the commonwealth, unless provision be made therein, to lay and collect an annual tax, sufficient to pay the interest stipulated, and to discharge the debt within                    years; nor shall such act take effect until it shall have been submitted to the people at a general election, and shall have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it."

So that, in fact, the committee, by this clause, have declared that not only is the action of the legislature necessary to create a debt, but that the people themselves, at the general election following, shall sanction or disapprove of their act.

Now, at the time of the general bankruptcy in 1840, no state in the Union had such a restriction on its legislature. The then aggregate of the indebtedness of the several states amounted to about $240,000,000, and nearly every one of them repudiated or were on the verge of that disgrace. The state of Kentucky at that time, under the general depreciation of property and great failures in the revenue, was only saved from the bankruptcy which threatened by plundering the school fund. The gentleman from Nelson (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe) says no, but so I understand the facts to be.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. The legislature set apart the sum of $800,000, according to my recollection, from that portion of the surplus revenue of the United States allotted to the state of Kentucky. The remainder of the sum was subscribed in stock to the bank of Kentucky, if I collect aright. The law setting apart the $800,000 for school purposes, provided, that it should be vested in profitable stocks. The then executive being authorized by a separate statute to borrow a million of money by the issue of the bonds of the state, bearing five per cent. interest, and unable to sell these bonds abroad, or thinking that these bonds were a good investment for the school fund, therefore, made those bonds payable to the school commissioners to the amount of $800,000. That was the disposition of that fund, and its proceeds were applied to the object of internal improvements. Sometime during the administration of Governor Letcher the legislature, with a view of reducing, on paper, the state debt, ordered the bonds given to the school commissioners to be cancelled, and thus was blotted out the school fund. The public revenue and credit did not suffer in 1840, and the income upon the sinking fund paid the interest upon the foreign debt.

Mr. PRESTON. Notwithstanding the explanation of the gentleman, which leaves me almost as much in the dark as I was at first, I still think that the main part of my facts are unanswered. The fact was, as I understood, that the part of the surplus revenue of the United States allotted to Kentucky, and set apart to be applied to school purposes, was applied to the liquidation of the internal improvement debt. Our bonds having sunk to seventy per cent. on the one hundred in the northern market, this school fund was then seized upon and applied for that purpose. These are the facts about it if my memory serves me aright. I will not allude further to that part of the subject. Every member here must see the necessity of allowing the legislature to remedy these casual deficiencies in the revenue, or expenses not provided for—such for instance, as the destruction of the public buildings—by the creation of indebtedness, but not to exceed singly or in the aggregate, the sum of $500,000. Is the thirty-third section not sufficient guard against the abuses of legislative discretion in the creation of state debts? I think it is. I shall vote against the amendment reducing the amount, and I hope the convention will pause before they strip the legislature, and through it the people, of all power or discretion in this matter. At least allow them, when they are utterly restricted from the creation of debts for any other purpose, to provide for casual deficits in the revenue, or unforeseen expenses not provided for.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If I thought there could probably arise, under a frugal and prudent administration of the government of Kentucky, the necessity for the exercise of this debt-contracting power, to the extent of half a million of dollars, like the gentleman from Louisville, I might go with him to retain the section. But retain it as it is, and my word for it no future legislature will ever have occasion to resort to the loan prescribed in the following section. What is this thirty-second section? Why that you may borrow $500,000, annually, to meet the contingencies of deficits in your annual revenues. Stop there, and perhaps there would be no dangerous or improvident exercise of this power; but there are also in this clause, expressions and words I do not understand, or else they ambiguously confer a power that may be improvidently exercised—"to meet casual deficiencies in the revenue, or to meet expenses not provided for." What does the committee mean by "expenses not provided for?" The legislature may run the state into debt upon this old system of internal improvement, to the amount of $500,000, and the next year may borrow $500,000 more to meet that indebtedness not provided for by law, and which the revenue is not equal to pay. That is my reading of the section, and it is nothing more or less than authorizing the legislature to borrow at pleasure, if they can create a necessity therefor by any system of expenditure, however provident or improvident.

Mr. PRESTON. The section provides that they shall not at any time, singly or in the aggregate, exceed $500,000.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. Does the gentleman mean in all time to come, or as long as the constitution shall be in force?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes sir.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I do not so read the section, but if that is the intent, then it ought to be amended, because in the course of fifty years we may be under the necessity of borrowing an amount largely beyond that. Now we provide for the raising, every year, by our system of taxation, the money necessary to defray the expenses of government. There may be occasions in which deficits of 40, 50, or $100,000 may occur, from the failure of the collecting offices, or the depreciation of property; but I do not see that there can be a failure arising from these causes, to the amount of half a million at any one time, and thus creating the necessity for the borrowing of that amount of money.

In relation to the school fund, of which I spoke, I mistook the amount by $50,000. It was $350,000, not $300,000; and the facts in regard to it are as I have stated them. But so far as paying the interest on the state debt, and the demands which fell on the sinking fund, even during the crash of 1840, alluded to by the gentleman, when the banks stopped specie payments, and when credit at home and abroad was made to falter and to sink, this state was able to maintain her credit, by the prompt payment of her coupons for every dollar, the day it became due. A bill of exchange was drawn by our banks on New Orleans, which was negotiated at New York. The debt fell due on the same day the bank dividend fell due, and in order to meet the payment in New York, the sinking fund commissioners had always to anticipate its payment by a bill of exchange drawn through the bank, and based on the debt the bank would owe to the fund on the first of January. That is the way in which the debt was met in 1840.

My object is to strike out $500,000, and to fill the blank with such sum as may be likely to be needed in case of a deficit of the revenue. In relation to the other section, authorizing the borrowing of money, with proper guards, I am prepared to go with the gentleman as far as is prudent and proper.

Mr. HARDIN. The government of the United States, after the national debt was paid, had a surplus of about $28,000,000, and its annual income being amply sufficient for the ordinary expenses of government, an act of congress was passed, dividing this money among the states, according to their representation in congress. Kentucky having ten representatives and two senators, was entitled to twelve parts, according to the whole representation in congress. Several of the states, Virginia, I think, and one of the Carolinas, refused to receive their shares. Kentucky received $1,433,756 29, and became responsible, whenever the necessities of the general government should demand it, to return the money; and I presume this will never be, unless we should get into some war of several years duration, and entirely exhaust our means. When that money was received, Kentucky, by some act of legislation, set apart $850,000 of it, for common school purposes. Previous to that time, there was no common school fund at all; and that act is just as binding and obligatory on the state, as are those passed providing for slack water navigation. The school fund, as a fund, is based merely on a promise of the state to herself, that she will set apart, and hold sacred $850,000 for common school purposes. She gave to the trustees of the school fund the following bonds:

On 18th January, 1840, one bond,	$500,000
On 22d January, 1840, one bond,	170,000
On 22d January, 1840, one bond,	180,000

$850,000

These bonds drew five per cent. interest. The interest accumulated, and continued to accumulate, until the whole amount due by the state to the school fund, comprising interest and principal was $1,299,268 42. Since then, and down to January 1, 1850, interest has accumulated, and not included in that sum, to the amount of $51,223 29.

The gentleman from Louisville, (Mr. Preston,) says that our stock fell in the market to about sixty eight on the hundred. I think he is in error there; and that our six per cent. stocks, never fell below par. The five per cents. perhaps did. A report made to the legislature in 1845-6, exhibits the terms and conditions of every loan in the state; and it shows that the five per cent. stocks were never sold at less than at par, except in one instance, and then ninety eight for one hundred, while the six per cents. never fell below it. There was some railroad and turnpike bonds that fell below par; but the actual loans were never obtained at that disadvantage. We now owe, taking it altogether, upwards of $7,000,000; and we pay $271,289 35 interest. There is an annual drain upon us for interest, to that amount; and it now goes beyond the mountains. Our expenses have increased at a remarkable rate. I will read now a table, to show what a wonderful knack we had of getting up stairs, on this subject.

The whole amount of revenue collected by the sheriffs—

In 1829, was	- - -	$61,396 05
In 1830, was	- - -	66,309 38
In 1831, was	- - -	62,351 44
In 1832, was	- - -	70,598 82
In 1833, was	- - -	64,758 58
In 1834, was	- - -	74,119 93
In 1835, was	- - -	124,518 80
In 1836, was	- - -	139,381 02
In 1837, was	- - -	169,864 35
In 1838, was	- - -	205,783 62
In 1839, was	- - -	218,363 53
In 1840, was	- - -	255,009 76
In 1841, was	- - -	261,898 98
In 1842, was	- - -	370,842 05
In 1843, was	- - -	325,413 88
In 1844, was	- - -	284,084 45
In 1845, was	- - -	315,413 35
In 1846, was	- - -	348,742 38
In 1847, was	- - -	350,838 39
In 1848, was	- - -	346,000 22
In 1849, was	- - -	415,002 20

The sum for 1849, refers to the tax levied for the year ending October 1, 1849. The levy for the coming year ending October 1, 1850, is $562,000. If that increase is not enough to satisfy gentlemen, for God's sake what will? From $74,000 in 1834—we have increased it up to this time to $562,000. But says the gentleman, New York has a larger debt, and so has Ohio. Yes—and I will tell the gentleman another secret; Great Britain has a larger debt. France has a larger debt; and all the great powers of Europe have a larger debt. But it does not follow that there is much comfort in owing about $7,000,000 and paying $271,000 per year interest, to go where? Is it paid out here? No. Where does it go then? It goes to New York, and is about as much loss to Kentucky as if it went to the East Indies, and was there worked up into images. Now what is the interest and duty of Kentucky? It is to provide a competent and active sinking fund to extinguish the debt as it shall become due; and that will be in about twenty-five years. My plan—if I had the power—would be, to keep the sinking fund up to what it now is, and by saving and economy, to withdraw from other purposes, money enough to pay the debt in twenty seven or twenty eight years. I was greatly in hopes that this convention would so construct the government that we should be able, to economise at least $50,000 a year; but it has not done so; and I am for a tax to raise that sum; to be appropriated over and above what the sinking fund now is. The fund thus increased, the first year would pay $50,000—the next $53,000—the next $56,180 and so on, until it will pay the debt in twenty-five years. I do not want the legislature to have the power to run us in debt any more. If the section means, that they never shall so long as this constitution may stand, incur more than $500,000 indebtedness in the aggregate, then it improves the section; yet I should be unwilling thus to restrict the legislature, because in the course of fifty years, we may expect in a great state like this, to be obliged to borrow more than that sum.

The gentleman from Louisville, (Mr. Preston,) said, suppose the capitol should burn down. Well sir, if this miserable building, drawn after a Grecian Temple, and looking for all the world, when across the bridge, like the end of another bridge to the hill back here—and which is a disgrace to the state—if it should take fire; why in the name of God let it burn. We have had one or two capitols burned down, and a meeting house, or two; and I do not care how soon we get rid of this mean, contemptible, bridge-looking edifice. It is any thing but a capitol, in which to do business. Let the gentleman go to Mississippi, and see the magnificent capitol at Jackson; and as a Kentuckian, he will feel disgraced and humbled at the comparison. But our building cost 70 or $80,000; and if it should burn, would it be necessary to borrow $500,000 to re-build it? Will not two cents additional tax, provide the amount necessary? Certainly; and the same means should be resorted to, to meet any similar emergency. I am not against spending a thousand, or a million dollars, if it is necessary to the prosperity of the country. But I am unwilling to confer upon the legislature the power of getting us into debt. They have got us into debt enough already. The gentlemen who have argued here, do not seem to understand the condition of the common people of the country. It is a very hard task for a man now to pay his taxes; and yet gentlemen seem to regard it as a mere nothing. Why in the name of God, what is half a million dollars—says one; and yet the people are called upon to pay nineteen cents, under the equalization law, and if a man's wife has to wear spectacles, or if she has got too old, or too fleshy to ride on horse-back, and has a buggy, he must also pay the specific tax on them. Gentlemen have a happy knack of saying all this is nothing; and yet out of these nothings, an enormous debt has been created. The Ohio river at its source is nothing, and yet when it gets to Louisville, it is a big river. How the state debt has been swollen to $7,000,000 is fully exhibited in the tables to which I have referred. And I will say that, in traveling through the country, no reform have I heard so loudly called for, as that a restriction should be put on the power of the legislature to contract debts hereafter. I am not for repudiation. I am for paying every dollar we owe. There is no calamity that could fall on the country, that I believe would be equal to repudiation.

Mr. CLARKE. Early in the session of this convention, resolutions were offered by some two or three gentlemen, and my remembrance is, that some one or two were referred to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. These resolutions were on the subject of imposing some restriction upon the power of the legislature, in the contraction of public debt, and they were duly considered by the committee. I think I but express the sentiments of every member of that committee when I say, that they all concur in the opinion, that some restriction ought to be imposed. There were in the committee, those who believed that one restriction would be sufficient, while others believed a more rigid one would be necessary, but there were none who did not believe that some restriction should be imposed on the legislative action on the subject. The past history of the state has satisfied, not only them, but as I believe a large majority of the people of the state, that a wild and reckless system of running into debt, had pervaded the legislature in by-gone times, for a number of years, and that their heedless, headlong practice in this particular, should be restrained. This thirty-second section was incorporated into this report for that purpose.

There were those in the committee who believed that the legislature, for this purpose of supplying casual deficits in the revenue, should not go beyond $50,000 in their power to borrow; others believed the limit should be $100,000, others $250,000, and others again $500,000. But at the time that section was drafted in committee, it was not intended or supposed that a discretion was conferred on the legislature at any time, singly or in the aggregate, to create a debt exceeding $500,000. No one of them supposed that the legislature, under this phraseology, "or for expenses not provided for," could at one session appropriate half a million, thus incurring expenses, and then at the next session, could levy a tax or issue state bonds for the purpose of defraying that expense; and so on from session to session running the state into debt. I am constrained to acknowledge that the section does not meet my entire approbation, because if there is any ambiguity in its language, I am well satisfied that the construction placed on it will be to allow the legislature to borrow money. My experience and reading have taught me that legislative bodies in all countries are not disposed to give up any thing, but that on the contrary they are inclined to encroachment. If, therefore, the section is susceptible of any other than a plain, palpable and definite construction, I am in favor of making it so plain that none can mistake or misunderstand it. I am willing here to state, that I have not supposed that at any period in the future history of Kentucky, there will be a necessity to borrow more than $50,000 or $100,000 to meet the deficiencies of the revenue. It was urged in the committee, as it has been urged here to-day, that if our capital should be destroyed, then it might be necessary to contract a larger debt. That is a very good argument, and might furnish an exception to the general principle laid down in the thirty second section. I do not feel disinclined to say or allow that if an accident of that sort should happen in our state, some provision might be made to meet the emergency. But I declare that my purpose, as one of the committee, is to restrict the debt contracting power of the legislature. If the section, as it is reported, does not do it, to the fullest and utmost extent, I hope that one or the other of the gentlemen from Nelson, will so perfect it as to bring it up to the expectations of the people of the state. For if I know the past history of the state, it has wrung from the people an expression of dissatisfaction at the wild and reckless system of legislation that has characterized the last fifteen or twenty years.

The convention then took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE withdrew his motion to strike out $500,000 and insert $100,000, and in lieu thereof moved to strike out the words "or for expenses not provided for," with a view of obviating any difficulty as to the construction of the section. He then moved that the convention resolve itself into committee of the whole, on the article under consideration, as the President expressed a wish to be heard.

This was agreed to.

The convention then resolved itself into committee of the whole, Mr. BOYD in the chair.

Mr. GHOLSON. I desire to make a very few remarks upon this subject. The whole matter at issue is this: does this convention intend to leave in the legislature unlimited power to contract debts? If it allows them to go to the extent of $500,000 per annum, it might as well do it; for they would seldom wish to borrow a greater amount than that at one time, and thus they could go on from year to year, and run the state in debt as much as they please. I am as much opposed to repudiation as any man; and with the whole taxing power left unlimited, as it will be, to the legislature, no apprehension need be entertained of such a misfortune. My object, in wishing to restrain the legislature, is to prevent repudiation; for if they go on running the state in debt as they please, the people might refuse to submit to it, and declare that repudiation was preferable to inordinate taxation. And if actual deficits should occur, the governor has the power to convene the legislature at any time; and they possess the power of taxing the people to raise the money to meet such deficit. There is no necessity, therefore, for this provision granting them the power to borrow $500,000. There is no one subject, on which the people are so universally agreed, as the propriety of limiting the debt-contracting power of the legislature, and no reform was more loudly called for. All know that our taxes have been largely increased in consequence of the state debt; and I do not want any thing done by the legislature to increase that taxation, unless the question shall have been first submitted to the people for their assent or dissent. This is what the people of my section of the country at least, expect at the hands of this convention. There can be no necessity then for this proposition; and if I understand the force and meaning of language at all, the gentleman is entirely mistaken, in construing this section, as preventing the increase of the debt at any time beyond $500,000. They might create that amount of indebtedness in any given year, and so on, year after year; for the section does not say, that for all time to come the whole indebtedness shall amount to $500,000 and no more. It is one of those adroitly worded propositions that will admit of any construction emergency may call for.

The PRESIDENT. I wish to offer an additional section, to precede the thirty second section of this report, in the following words:

"The general assembly that shall first convene under this constitution, shall set apart an annual sum of at least $50,000 of the public money, which shall be the first to be paid; and provide that the same shall be faithfully applied to the purchase and withdrawal of the evidences of the debt of this commonwealth, until the whole of the said debt shall be discharged: Provided, If the annual sum so appropriated shall not be sufficient to discharge the debt as it becomes due, the general assembly shall have authority to create additional loans for the punctual payment of said debt: And provided further, That the general assembly shall have authority, except as hereinafter provided, to contract other loans."

I was a member of the legislature when the original state debt was contracted. I voted for that system of internal improvements, which gentlemen take occasion now to denounce as wild, reckless, and extravagant. The men who were the members of the legislature at that time, instituted and carried out that system of internal improvements, did it with the sanction of their constituents. From year to year they returned to their constituents, who had a full knowledge of what they had done; and these men were again and again elected, for the purpose, and with the view, of fully carrying out that system. And in the part which I bore in that matter, I acted in accordance with the wishes of those I represented; and under the same circumstances, I would so act again. To hear gentlemen speak now, in regard to this subject, it would appear there were none left of those who gave their sanction to the system of internal improvements as it has been carried out; and that they are wiser than the generation which has passed, and had no hand in contracting this debt. I will not go back to the record and refer to the yeas and nays, to show who sustained by their votes this system of internal improvements and the contraction of this debt. It is sufficient for me to know that there was a majority of the representatives of the people who voted for it; and that those men have never forfeited the confidence of their constituents for their participation in the creation and carrying on of that system. Some of them have been elevated to high and distinguished stations, notwithstanding those votes. And it is a matter of some pride and some credit to Kentucky, that notwithstanding she contracted these debts, in carrying on these internal improvements, she carried on that system, so far as it went, with much more prudence, and with greater economy, than many of her sister states; and that whilst they were driven to repudiate their debts, either from inability to pay, or unwillingness to sustain the burden of taxation, Kentucky has always been able to pay the interest, and as I believe, is now able and willing to provide for the payment of the principal of her indebtedness. I do not know of but one gentleman now on this floor—the honorable gentleman from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon,)—who is entirely guiltless upon this subject. He was uniform and consistent in his opposition to the system of internal improvements. But if I recollect aright, though there are a great many others who voted against it, still, whenever they could draw any little bonus to their section of the state, they always accepted it. Why, the lands west of the Tennessee river were given up to that section of the country, to be there expended for internal improvements; and the statutes show that they received and used them. To the mountain region we gave but little; but we gave them the unappropriated public domain; and they received and used it. A pitiful gift it certainly was, yet they took it.

The first appropriation that was made for slackwater navigation, was for the benefit of the Green river country—to lock and dam Green river. Now those who will look back to the early stages of this country, will find that the lands south of Green river—except the military surveys—belonged to the commonwealth of Kentucky. They were sold out to the citizens who settled there, under “head-right claims,” as they were called, to be paid into the treasury of the commonwealth by instalments. Thus the settlers in that portion of the country were indebted to the commonwealth for the lands on which they lived; and the interest on that indebtedness, for a long period of years, drew from that country into the treasury considerable sums of money, although the legislature granted them, from time to time, indulgences. That money was placed in the old Bank of the commonwealth, and constituted its capital stock, and amounted at last to upwards of $500,000. In relief of the taxation of the richer portion of the state, we took the dividends, drawn from a part of those public lands, and assigned them to the government, together with the revenue drawn from the southern portion of the state. Then we made the commonwealth’s bank, a mere paper machine. We provided to turn into that bank the proceeds of our stock in the bank of Kentucky; and we loaned the credit of the state, in the shape of bank notes on the commonwealth’s bank, to the amount of upwards of $2,100,000, and we sustained the government by the interest upon our credit added to our taxes. Thus we drew from the necessities of the people, by loaning our credit, the means of sustaining the government; and from the Green river country, that portion of our lands, in relief of the taxation of the richer portion of the state. And when they came and said that they were shut out from all the advantages of navigation, by the interior location of their country, and could only get to market with their produce when the river was high—and year after year, for want of a freshet, their produce was rotting in their barns and on their plantations, and asked for an appropriation to lock and dam Green river, the representatives of the people of Kentucky voted for it, and designed and intended by the accomplishment of that work, to give them the advantages of navigation, as well as to give to that section of country some equivalent for the immense sums drawn from it, in relief of the balance of the state. And although the work does not now yield any thing like an interest on the sum expended—and perhaps this year will not pay expenses, on account of the extraordinary repairs that have been made—still I believe that the sum expended there was wisely and beneficially expended; and that that section of the country draws an adequate compensation from it; and that the state of Kentucky, by the increased value of the lands, draws a sum in increased taxation equal to interest on the expenditure. Next we undertook to lock and dam Kentucky river, and that worked—so far as we have proceeded with it—well, and has effected and accomplished the object had in view. It has made Kentucky river, so far as improved, a better navigation than that of the Ohio; and it has given to the section of country, within reach of it, the benefit and advantage of steamboat navigation, which, without it, they never could have enjoyed. And though it does not yield a revenue to the state a sum equal to the interest on the sum expended, it yields a benefit to the people of the state more than equal to the amount of money appropriated to the improvement. True it does not yield what was calculated and expected, because it is a work not accomplished. Kentucky was paying from $500,000 to $600,000, annually, to other states for lumber and fuel—for the lumber of New York and the coal of Pennsylvania—and it was the design and intention of those who undertook to lock and dam Kentucky river, to reach the coal, iron, and lumber region of the state, and thus to save to Kentucky the annual sums we were giving for the products of the mines and forests of other states, and with those sums to stimulate the industry, prosperity and wealth of our own commonwealth. If that work should be accomplished—as I hope and trust in time it will be—it will save this half million of dollars annually to the people, and by that sum paid out to the industry and enterprise of our own citizens, will increase the prosperity of all. I have nothing, therefore, to regret in the votes I gave for that work, nor the debts which are the consequence of it. I believe that the increased value of the lands in all the neighborhood around it, Kentucky, in her revenue, does now, and will in all time to come, derive a fair and full equivalent for the expenditure.

The project to lock and dam Licking river was undertaken for the same principles and with the same views; and it must be acknowledged that the work is a total failure; and the money there invested a total loss. The difficulty was clearly perceived by those engaged in the enterprises of that day; and the effect of the distraction of the efforts of the state in the accomplishment of these works, by being engaged in the prosecution of three of them at one and the same time, was then apprehended as of dangerous consequences, and now we see that it was fatal to the system. If we had combined all our purpose, all our money, and all our energies upon one of them, we would have effected our object; and the benefits and advantages flowing from it, would have enabled us in time to have accomplished the others. The change of times—the bursting of the bubble—brought a period to the labors of Kentucky upon the system of internal improvements. And although we did not sell our bonds below par, to meet the balances against us, we gave them to contractors at par, in payment of what was due to them, when we knew they would have to sell them at a discount; and in many instances they did sell them at a discount of from ten to fifteen per cent. That was just as much repudiation on the part of the state, inasmuch as it took that sum from men who were fairly entitled to it, as was the refusal of other states to pay their debts; and we need not claim that we are entirely free from it. I felt it my duty to say this much in relation to this matter.

The system of turnpike roads has been referred to. When we commenced that system, there was but one turnpike road in the commonwealth, and that was an old road leading from Louisville to Middletown, not exceeding eleven miles in length. Through the enterprise of individuals and by the assistance of the state, considerable was done upon that subject. And here let me add, I differ with the elder gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin.) I believe that there has been as much, or even greater loss, upon the sums expended for turnpike roads, than on the amounts expended for the improvement of rivers. In the progress of internal improvements, I believe that since the adaptation of railroads to the wants of the commercial and traveling community, that both turnpike roads and river navigation will yield measurably to railroads. I have had occasion to review the system of internal improvements—its effects and its consequences—and I am free to confess, that so far as I am concerned, I greatly prefer that it should be done by private enterprise, than for the public to have anything to do with it. I believe that a system of internal improvements by the general government, where immense sums of money are paid out through commissioners and officers, bestowed on one section of the country, in order to increase the power and influence of the government in that section; and denied to other portions, in order to punish them for political opinions, or any other thing, is one of the most dangerous powers that can be exercised by the general government. I favor that strict construction which yields to it nothing but conceded powers.

Looking over the acts of the state, the records,

I find that I differed with a large portion of my own political friends; and was there found voting generally, in the ranks of our opponents, and often have I met the charge, that in authorizing that expenditure, under their management, as it generally was, I had aided and assisted them in procuring the means to strengthen and perpetuate their power in the state. I believed that great advantages were to be derived by the state, from that system of internal improvements. My constituents wanted this system; and I find that they sustained me from time to time, in the votes that I gave; and I am content. The public mind has changed; and public sentiment is for leaving this thing to private enterprise. The people now desire to provide for the payment of this debt, and to limit the power of the legislature to contract debts; and I am willing to go with them. But I see in the report of this committee, nothing that provides for the payment of the present debt, and only a restriction as to borrowing money. If we do not provide for the payment of the present debt; and we restrict the legislature in the power of borrowing, when the debt falls due, how is it to be paid? Is it to be met immediately and directly by taxation? Or is the loan to be extended? In the section that I offer, I propose, that the first general assembly which shall meet, under the new constitution, shall set apart from the revenue of the commonwealth, $50,000 annually; to be appropriated to the withdrawal of the evidences of this debt; and if that is not sufficient to meet those debts, as they fall due, that then the legislature shall have power to contract loans to fulfil the faith of the state. And this $50,000, appropriated annually, will in time pay off, and discharge the whole debt. I believe the sentiment of the people is ripe for it; that they desire, and will sustain it—that our duty to the commonwealth, is thus to provide for it. Then I will go with gentlemen to restrict the legislature beyond what may be considered a fair sum, for deficiencies that may arise in the annual revenue; also to restrict them in the power to contract debts for internal improvements, unless it shall be submitted to the whole people.

In reviewing this matter, I will say, that the benefits and advantages from the sums that we have laid out, fall immediately and directly to particular sections of country; and although it has increased the general wealth, prosperity, and revenue of the state, yet all sections are obliged to bear the burden of taxation, to pay the interest, and will have to bear it, to pay the principal of these debts. Thus, to some extent, the benefits and advantages of these improvements, carried on by the state, as they were, or as any other will be, fall particularly on the sections where the works are located; while the whole state must equally contribute to defraying their costs. Therefore there will be very little likelihood of public debt being contracted for such works, unless they shall be of such general importance as to interest a large portion of the commonwealth.

All the revenue that goes to the sinking fund, is not derived from direct taxation on the country. We have a tax of fifty cents on the hundred dollars, on $1,250,000 stock in the Bank of Louisville; on $3,700,000 stock in the Bank of Kentucky, and on $2,250,000 in the Northern Bank; and these sums constitute a part of the revenue of the state. In addition to that, we have the dividends on—I do not know the exact sum belonging to the state—I believe about $1,250,000 bank stock—the greater portion in the Northern Bank, paying eight or nine per cent., in the Bank of Louisville, paying eight per cent., and in the Bank of Kentucky, paying eight per cent., and which will pay an extraordinary per cent., when they get in the proceeds of recovery from the Schuylkill Bank, exceeding $500,000—to aid and assist the sinking fund, or to assist in paying the interest on the internal improvement debt. The capital stock of the Bank of Kentucky, was recently increased to $5,000,000—$3,000,000 of which was to be subscribed by individuals, and $2,000,000 by the commonwealth, which she was to pay in by bonds bearing five per cent. interest; and in consideration of that, she was to draw a tax of half per cent., and in addition to that, the increase of the dividends. The same thing was done in relation to the Northern Bank. Thus, a sum exceeding $100,000 annually, was derived through these institutions, in aid of the revenue of the commonwealth of Kentucky, and more than that sum is now derived to the sinking fund, from the stock in, and the tax on these banks. It was hoped, that with these additional aids, and the profits that might be derived from the public works, that we should be able to provide for the payment of the interest of the debt, without resorting to taxation. But the fraud upon the Schuylkill Bank, and the change of times, made it necessary to resort to taxation. And the predictions of those engaged in the system of internal improvements, of being able to carry it on without taxation, by these means, were rendered as are the calculations of many men, futile. But since that time, with an improvidence that is remarkable, upon the mere boon that the Northern Bank and the Bank of Kentucky should loan to the people at six per cent.—to be divided among the counties—of some $500,000 or $600,000, to be paid back on small calls—and I believe every dollar of it was paid back in about eighteen months—the state cancelled the obligations of those banks, and thus was lost the annual sum to the sinking fund formerly derived from those sources, and which has now to be supplied by taxation. It was not a very wise or prudent system of financiering, and it was based on a mere desire to induce the banks to loan; which they would have done, because they must loan their money to make a profit. They are very keen at making good bargains, and they made an immense bargain out of the state on that occasion. I desire to throw no imputation on any man, or set of men, in regard to this matter; for I believe the sentiments of the people are changed in regard to it. But there is no reason that we should brand as profligate or extravagant, a system of internal improvement, that has the sanction and support of the people, and which was carried on in accordance with their wishes and sentiments. I believe the action of those who participated in that system was in accordance with the wishes of their constituents; and I think that when we have changed our opinions in relation to it, it is useless to stigmatise them.

In changing our opinions, let us not put our condemnation upon the system, without honestly and fairly providing for the payment of the debt to the last dollar, and it can be certainly, and easily paid by an annual sum appropriated for that purpose. I believe that was the object of the elder gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) when he asked for a committee on this subject; and I hope and trust we shall have his aid and assistance, in passing this provision, or something like it, that will provide for the payment of this debt. This is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to make a statement, which the remarks of the president has rendered somewhat necessary on my part. I never had the honor of serving in the legislature with him; but I did have the honor of a seat in the legislature the year after the system of internal improvements was commenced, and I served here for four years successively. The president of this convention was, I think, a member of the senate at that time; and I presume he is not well informed touching the votes I then gave. I hope he had no allusion to me when he referred to the gentlemen from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon,) as being the only gentleman on this floor who had been consistent upon this subject. I was against the system from the beginning; and I believe my votes stand recorded upon the journals against borrowing about $4,000,000 of this debt. The gentleman from Henderson then represented the county in which I live, in the senate; and we had frequent conference upon this subject, and understood the course that each other pursued at that time. I have made this explanation, as due to myself, after the remarks of the president on this subject.

With regard to the effect of these internal improvements on the portion of country where I reside, I differ with the president. I do not think they have been beneficial or advantageous to that particular region, except to a very small portion of the country lying on the margin of the river. And these improvements generally have been more or less local in their effects. I have not arraigned the course of any gentleman in this matter. I have differed in opinion with them in regard to the policy of these measures, and I still differ with them in regard to its results. I am, to come to the question more directly, in favor of restricting the power of the legislature hereafter to contract debts; and I believe such to be now, almost unanimously, the public sentiment of Kentucky. I came here under pledges, so far as my vote would go, to place a restriction in the constitution on the power of the legislature to contract debts in the future, except to a very limited extent. I agree in sentiment with the president with regard to the payment of the debt already contracted; and I shall be in favor of taking some mild step, that looks to the accomplishment of that end.

Mr. MAYES. I was in the lower house of the legislature at the session of '36, '37, when the question of internal improvement was in full blast. I do not suppose it is a matter of consequence, whether I voted for or against it; if it is, gentlemen can ascertain the fact by a reference to the journals of that session. I therefore move that the committee rise, and report the bill to the house.

The motion was withdrawn, by general request, in order that the question might be taken on the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE. When I explained the motives which influenced the committee in adopting this section of the report, I took occasion to remark, that I thought a large majority of the people of the state concurred in the opinion, that the legislature should be restricted in contracting debts, and in the wild and extravagant use of the public money and public credit exhibited in its history for the last twenty years. In making the statement I did, I denounced that species of legislation as wild and reckless. I have not arraigned, and I see no reason now to arraign, the votes or motives which were given by, or influenced any gentleman in his participation in bygone legislation. I have no doubt that every gentleman, in voting for the adoption of that system, honestly and fairly represented his constituents. But while I concede this much, I will add that I well remember—though I was but a boy at the time—that the people were told in both branches of the legislature that all the money they were borrowing for those internal improvements would be re-paid by the profits of those works, and that the people would never be called upon to pay a dollar of it. They were told that these improvements would yield a dividend sufficient to pay not only the accruing interest, but the principal of the debt, and also aid in lessening the taxes of the people. Well the people, by sad experience, have found out that these gentlemen were mistaken upon the subject? Not only that, but they find saddled upon them a debt between 5 and $7,000,000, and that the taxes have been increased to a burdensome extent, to meet the interest upon that debt. And they find now, and I think properly and correctly, a proposition made to meet the principal. Hence it was, that with a knowledge of these facts, that the people in almost every county in the state called upon the candidates for seats here to declare whether they were or were not in favor of restricting the debt-creating power of the legislature. The people have been deceived in the accumulation of a mighty and ponderous debt, that is now weighing down the energies of the state, and abstracting from the proceeds of their labor and property large amounts annually in taxation to pay the interest on that debt. These evils have all been brought upon them by legislation, and now we are called upon in this convention to throw shackles upon the power of the legislature to subject the labor of the country to the payment of debts thus contracted. In speaking of that legislation, I characterized it as wild and reckless, and its sequel proves that it is so. Take, as an instance of it, the two turnpike roads running from Louisville to the state line in the direction of Nashville. There they run, scarcely separating for forty miles, and at some points coming so close together as almost to enable a man to stand in one and jump on to the other. Was it remarkable then, that works thus carried out should not yield a dividend on the amount expended in their construction, much less to extinguish the principal on the debt incurred? Then, even if the people were led on to send representatives to the legislative halls to make an appropriation, and did do it in obedience to the will of the people, I still feel authorized to say that these appropriations were wild and reckless, because they never have, and never will, carry out the expectations of those in favor of the improvements. Hence, the people now denounce that system of internal improvements, and of pledging the labor of the state to the payment of large debts incurred in making these sectional improvements. Having denounced it, they have sent us to this convention to frame a constitution that will withhold such power from the legislature in future.

Mr. HARDIN. I comprehend what the President means, and his amendment, with a slight addition, will do exactly. That is, I suppose he intends that the sinking fund shall be kept up to what it now is, and then this other $50,000 shall be added to it.

The PRESIDENT. Yes sir.

Mr. HARDIN. Then it will do exactly, and will provide for the payment of every dollar of the debt. I have a table, showing how this debt was created, which may be interesting to the convention. Three or four years since it was correct, and is nearly so now. It is as follows:

5 per cent. bonds, payable 35 years after date,	-	$165,000 00
5 per cent. bonds, payable 30 years after date,	-	450,000 00
6 per cent. bonds, payable 30 years after date,	-	3,579,000 00
6 per cent. bonds, payable 6 years after date,	-	100,000 00
6 per cent. bonds, for repair of railroad, payable 6 years after date,	-	54,000 00
Money borrowed from the Bank of Louisville,	-	30,000 00
Due to United States government,	1,433,757	39
Due School Fund,	-	1,115,430 00
To Northern Bank of Kentucky,	-	250,000 00
Craddock Fund,	-	3,000 00
Total,	-	$7,210,157 39

The amount of the debt has been somewhat changed since this report was made out. While I am up, I will read, for the information of the house, a paper I could not before find:

There has been paid, on the Kentucky river navigation, for the building of locks and dams, &c.,	-	$901,932 70
There has been paid for the same purpose, on the Licking river navigation,	-	372,520 70
There has been paid for the same purpose, on Green and Barren river navigation,	-	859,126 79
Total expended for navigation,	-	$2,133,580 19

There has been expended for railroads, as follows:

Amount expended on Green river railroad,	-	$1,903
Amount carried forward,	-	$1,903

Amount brought forward, - - -	$1,903	Deduct from this, the expenses of this slack-
Amount expended on Lexington and		water navigation, as follows:
Ohio railroad, between Frankfort		Kentucky river navigation, - - -	$26,600 00
and Louisville, - - -	220,000	Green and Barren river navigation, -	12,532 06
Amount expended on Lexington and			$39,132 06
Ohio railroad, between Frankfort and Lexington, - - -	100,650
Total expended for railroads, -	$322,553	And thus, there is left a balance of $10,969 38,
There has also been paid for turnpike roads,		which is all these improvements contribute to
as follows:		pay the interest on the public debt, amounting
Maysville, Washington, Paris,		to $271,287 35.
and Lexington road, - - -	$213,200 00	Here, also, is a statement of the amount of
Franklin county, road to Louis-		bank stock we own, or did own, in 1846:
ville, - - -	20,000 00	7,000 shares of stock in Bank Ky.,	$700,000
Shelby co., road to Louisville, -	45,000 00	2,000 shares of stock in Northern
Muldrow's Hill road, - - -	55,145 46	Bank Kentucky, - - -	250,000
Mercer co., Crab Orchard road, -	71,800 00	In the name of the commissioners
Frankfort, Lexington, and Ver-		of the sinking fund 406 shares
sailles road, - - -	78,122 00	stock in Bank of Louisville, -	40,600
Danville, Lancaster, and Nicho-		2,399 shares stock in Bank Ky., -	239,900
lasville road, - - -	151,382 00	400 shares stock in Northern Bank
Scott co., road to Frankfort, -	42,325 00	Kentucky, - - -	40,000
Franklin co., road to Frankfort, -	15,400 00	Total, - - -	$1,270,500
Winchester and Lexington road, -	45,100 00	In relation to the lands west of the Tennessee
Lincoln co., Crab Orchard road, -	51,299 00	river, to which reference has been made here, I
Covington and Georgetown road, -	170,135 77	will only say, that it was the paper of the Com-
Richmond and Lexington road, -	75,383 00	monwealth Bank that was received in payment
Georgetown and Lexington road, -	31,270 00	of them, and as fast as it was received, it was
Anderson county, Crab Orchard		burned. Very little of the proceeds were exroad, - - -	42,950 00	pended for the expense of government, and a
Louisville to mouth Salt river, -	65,340 99	great deal of it was taken to cover bad debts. I
Mouth Salt river to Elizabeth-		will further remark, that I have not voted for town, - - -	84,581 16	any part of this system of internal improve-
Elizabethtown to Bell's tavern, -	118,778 24	ments. I was chairman of the committee on
Bell's tavern to Bowlinggreen, -	85,488 70	finance of the state senate for six years, and I
Bowlinggreen to Tennessee line, -	87,194 16	checked the system up to the time I left that
Franklin county, Crab Orchard		body, the eighth day of February, 1833, the last road, - - -	17,064 00	time I served in the legislature. What has taken
Bardstown and Springfield road, -	65,190 60	place there since that time, I know not particu-
Lexington, Harrodsburg and Per-		larly, but I doubt not that every gentleman acted ryville road, - - -	109,646 00	honestly and for the interests of the state. But
Bardstown and Louisville road, -	100,000 00	one thing is certain, and that is, the system of Bardstown and Green river road, -	289,825 19	slackwater navigation has failed entirely. The
Glasgow and Scottsville road, -	110,385 38	system of turnpike roads does not yield so much
Mount Sterling and Maysville		as was expected, but they have been of great road, - - -	88,072 59	benefit to the country. The whole amount they
Versailles to Kentucky river, -	20,000 00	yielded during the past year, is $34,095 67—
Logan, Todd, and Christian, -	149,428 91	while the whole amount expended on them is
Maysville and Bracken road, -	25,948 00	$2,525,456 15.
Total, on turnpike roads, -	$2,525,456 15	I regret, extremely, that I have not made a
RECAPITULATION.		regular report on this subject, as chairman of the Amount expended for slack-wa-		committee on the subject of state debts, but other ter navigation, - - -	$2,133,580 19	committees had reported on the same subject,
Amount expended for railroads, -	322,553 00	and I had no desire to aid in bringing before the
Amount expended for turnpike		convention two reports on the same subject.
roads, - - -	2,525,456 15	There is a table in the report of the secretary of
Total am't. paid for Int. Imp., -	$4,981,589 34	state, four years ago, showing how our state
The whole amount the slackwater now yields,		debt can be paid off. It was prepared by Mr.
is this.—		John Sharpe, Austin P. Cox, and myself, as fol-
Kentucky river tolls, gross, - -	$41,688 38	lows:
Green and Barren river tolls, gross,	7,932 06	1st Jan. '47, invested, $50,000 00
Rent of water power on Ky. river,	480 00	1st year's interest, 3,000 00
	$50,101 44	2nd year's investment, 50,000 00
			103,000 00 Jan. 1, 1848
		2nd year's interest, 6,180 00
		3rd year's investment, 50,000 00
			159,180 00 Jan. 1, 1849

	159,180 00			1,839,255 48
3rd year's interest,	9,550 80			20th year's interest,	110,355 32
4th year's investment,	50,000 00			21st year's investment,	50,000 00
	218,730 80	Jan. 1, 1850			1,999,610 80 Jan. 1, 1867
4th year's interest,	13,123 84			21st year's interest,	119,976 64
5th year's investment,	50,000 00			22nd year's investment,	50,000 00
	281,854 60	Jan. 1, 1851			2,169,587 44 Jan. 1, 1868
5th year's interest,	16,911 27			22nd year's interest,	130,175 24
6th year's investment,	50,000 00			23rd year's investment,	50,000 00
	348,765 87	Jan. 1, 1852			2,349,762 68 Jan. 1, 1869
6th year's interest,	20,925 95			23rd year's interest,	140,985 75
7th year's investment,	50,000 00			24th year's investment,	50,000 00
	419,691 82	Jan. 1, 1853			2,540,748 43 Jan. 1, 1870
7th year's interest,	25,181 50			24th year's interest,	152,444 90
8th year's investment,	50,000 00			25th year's investment,	50,000 00
	494,873 32	Jan. 1, 1854			2,743,193 33 Jan. 1, 1871
8th year's interest,	29,692 39			25th year's interest,	164,591 59
9th year's investment,	50,000 00			26th year's investment,	50,000 00
	574,565 71	Jan. 1, 1855			2,957,784 92 Jan. 1, 1872
9th year's interest,	34,473 94			26th year's interest,	177,467 09
10th year's investment,	50,000 00			27th year's investment,	50,000 00
	659,039 65	Jan. 1, 1856			3,185,252 01 Jan. 1, 1873
10th year's interest,	39,542 37			27th year's interest,	191,115 12
11th year's investment,	50,000 00			28th year's investment,	50,000 00
	748,582 02	Jan. 1, 1857			3,426,367 13 Jan. 1, 1874
11th year's interest,	44,914 92			28th year's interest,	205,582 02
12th year's investment,	50,000 00			29th year's investment,	50,000 00
	843,496 94	Jan. 1, 1858			3,681,949 15 Jan. 1, 1875
12th year's interest,	50,609 81			29th year's interest,	220,916 94
13th year's investment,	50,000 00			30th year's investment,	50,000 00
	944,106 75	Jan. 1, 1859			3,952,866 09 Jan. 1, 1876
13th year's interest,	56,646 40			30th year's interest,	237,171 96
14th year's investment,	50,000 00				$4,190,038 05
	1,050,753 15	Jan. 1, 1860		Mr. PRESTON. The proposition of the President is one that will afford me great pleasure to vote for. The gentleman from Nelson seems to misunderstand me in regard to the price obtained for our state bonds. I referred to the current prices of our stocks in the northern markets, and they in common with others sunk in the years '40 and '41, to about seventy cents on the dollar. The contractors to whom those stocks were paid were compelled, I know, to sell them at a heavy loss. The other gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) seems to think that there is some ambiguity in the language of the thirty second section. It was not the intention of the committee to leave the least ambiguity in that section, and if it does exist it is not the fault of their intention. They intended not that the legislature each year should contract a debt amounting to $500,000, but that they should never in all time to come, contract a debt exceeding that amount, so as to make it a charge on the state. They intended that the legislature, meeting for instance next year, might contract a debt to the amount of $500,000 and pay it five years hence, if they chose, and then there would be left them a margin of $500,000 again to contract debts as the public emergencies
14th year's interest,	63,045 18
15th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,163,798 33	Jan. 1, 1861
15th year's interest,	69,827 89
16th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,283,626 22	Jan. 1, 1862
16th year's interest,	76,997 57
17th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,410,623 79	Jan. 1, 1863
17th year's interest,	84,637 42
18th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,545,261 21	Jan. 1, 1864
18th year's interest,	92,715 67
19th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,637,926 88	Jan. 1, 1865
19th year's interest,	101,278 60
20th year's investment,	50,000 00
	1,839,255 48	Jan. 1, 1866

might require, but declaring in the constitution that they should not go beyond that unless they first submitted it to the people for their sanction. Such was the intention of the committee, and it strikes me that the language is not at all ambiguous, but if it is, the committee of revision can correct it. It is in the language of the constitution of New York; we only altered two words in it, which was to insert the words five hundred thousand instead of one million. We looked to the growing wealth of Kentucky, to the time when she would have three millions of people living under this constitution on her soil, and to the necessities that might arise in the progress of many years, and thought certainly we were not giving to the legislature too much power. We give this as a safety valve, through which when the state was in difficulty they might exercise this power. It was not our desire to clothe them with the power of creating a debt of $500,000 at each session, as the gentleman from Nelson supposes. If that is not the signification of the section, then I do not understand the force of language, and if it should be the opinion of the convention that the language is susceptible of a different interpretation—then it can be corrected by the committee of revision.

Mr. BARLOW. It meets not only my approbation, but that of the people of my county, to restrict the legislature in its power to involve the state in debt, and if I am instructed on any one point in this convention, it is on that. And these instructions were given me by my constituents from the fact that the system of internal improvements have created the debts which now exist and hang over them. I was a member of the legislature about the time the system was commenced, and I invariably voted against it, and took the occasion to speak against it when at home. I never voted for but one of these works, except on one occasion, and that was in obedience to what I conceived to be the will of my constituents, though my own feelings were well known to be in opposition to the system. It was an appropriation to that beautiful stream, the Cumberland river, of some $200,000, of which not a cent, if my recollection serves me, was ever expended. And yet my constituents were willing to contribute their part to paying the debt, and are not willing that it shall be repudiated. But at the same time, as a safeguard for the future, they desire that the legislature shall be restricted in its power of again involving the people in debt.

Mr. TURNER. I never was a member of the legislature but once, during the time the system of internal improvements was agitated, and then I voted for it. I believe that system to have been beneficial and profitable to the country, and I never intend to give up anything because every body is abandoning it, or because it becomes unpopular. I was for it in its popularity, and I am for it still. I believe it to be a good system, and that the country will never get along unless it shall be fully carried out. Why, what is this system? I would rather pay my share of the tax for one year, than be obliged in going home to be three or four days floundering along on horseback through the mud. Gentlemen view this system only as to the amount of money it brings into the treasury, but that is not the way to judge of the benefits it has conferred on the people. It is the fine roads, the improved navigation, and means of getting to and from market. That is the way in which it is profitable to the people, and if there was not a cent of revenue derived from it, still it is a beneficial system to the country, so far as it develops its resources and increases its wealth and prosperity. That at least is my view of it. Before this turnpike system was entered upon, and the country was sparsely settled, we could not travel in those sections of the country where the soils are rich, until the middle of May. And are we then to have no more turnpike roads? To this it will be answered that they may be built by individual subscription. In that case the expense will fall on a few generous men, and those who use it most will pay the least. I desire that the legislature shall have the power to compel the miserly to bear their share in the burdens of the country, and not leave them to be borne by the more generous and liberal men.

As regards the proposition of the president, I am in favor of it. I want to pay the debt, although I am ready to admit that a great deal of it was imprudently contracted. Ten years ago, when I attempted to point out some of the defects of the system, such was its popularity that the people were almost ready to hiss me from the lobby. I found about here, some half a dozen little engineers with salaries of $600 to $1,000, and with nothing to do except to wait on the great engineer, or to carry an order from one lock to another. And in some cases, the state itself engaged in cutting off timber by the river, instead of letting it out by contract, and there were instances where it cost $600 or $800 per acre to do it, when the land and all would not have sold for one hundredth part of the money. I attempted to point out these extravagancies at the time, but I could not be heard, such was the blaze of glory in which the system was surrounded. But still I desired that the system should be carried on, and I believe that even under these disadvantages it has been beneficial and prosperous to the people. There is the Green river, once dried up for whole seasons, and where a steamboat was a rarity, the convenience afforded to the inhabitants amply repays all the expense incurred there. There are the fine turnpike roads, through the land, enabling people to get about, and improving the means of business and social intercourse, and which have taken the place of the miserable, and almost impassable dirt roads of former times. The same beneficial results have been the consequence of the Kentucky river improvement. Why, the very reduction in the price of groceries alone, to say nothing of the reduced price of transportation and the increased facilities of travel, would fully repay to the people, the increased taxation these works have imposed on them. These are the advantages we derive, and they are worth double to the people, the money it cost to obtain them. I raise my voice against this wholesale denunciation of that system, which now seems to be so popular in this convention, and shall continue to advocate it, for the reasons I have given, if every other man in the country opposes it. I am for paying this debt, and for the amendment of the president, but I shall vote against the sections now under consideration. Not that I want the legislature to go into extravagances, but I hope that in fifty years time we shall have on our soil 3,000,000 of inhabitants, and are we to put a straight jacket upon their energies, so that they can do nothing in the way of improvement when the great emergencies of the country shall require it? Besides, the time may come when, as has been the fate of almost every land, we shall be visited with famine and disease, and to such an extent that the people will not be able to pay their taxes, and yet gentlemen talk about preventing the legislature from borrowing money to supply the deficiency. There are many emergencies which may arise to produce a deficiency in the revenue, and the legislature should have the power of supplying that deficiency. I suppose that the legislature will have some little discretion, and that we in this convention do not possess all the wisdom of the world.

The gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) has said that we are a great body of wisemen, but that is all soft soap, and we know it. We do not, at any rate, stand so high in the estimation of those out of this convention, if one may judge from the newspapers. It is all a mistake about our being greater men than any who are to come after us. A week or two ago, when the question of fixing salaries was under consideration, gentlemen urged that the legislature was an illiberal body, and now we have the same gentlemen contending that it is a great deal too liberal. I think the legislature can be trusted upon this subject, and I hope the section will not be adopted. With regard to submitting the question to the people, before incurring large indebtedness, I see no objection. I have no objection to consult the people on this subject, and I believe they will not withhold their approval from any work of internal improvement that is calculated to enhance their convenience, their prosperity, or their wealth. I am not surprised that gentlemen from portions of the commonwealth where this system has never reached, should oppose it; but as for gentlemen who have fine turnpike roads running through their county and in their neighborhood, like the gentlemen from Nelson, that they should turn against and repudiate the system, I confess I am a little astonished. The elder gentleman, I know, stood here and warred against it for a good while, but if the junior gentleman (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe) did not sustain it, then my memory has failed me. Nor did I ever hear of the elder gentleman (Mr. Hardin) making war on him for so doing. I think when a man has derived all the benefit possible from it to his county, he ought to be willing to extend the same benefits to the people of the whole state. A contrary course is hardly generous or proper.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. The amendment I have proposed, is to make the section perform the office I understand the committee to desire it should—that is, to limit the right of the legislature to borrow money to provide for deficits in the revenue—whether to $50,000 or $100,000, is a matter of total indifference to me. I therefore moved to strike out the words “to meet expenses not provided for.” I do not wish to leave to the legislature the power to create debts not expected by the people to meet the ordinary expenses of the government, and then to borrow money to pay that debt; but should there be a deficit in the ordinary revenue of the country, then I am willing that the legislature shall borrow money to meet that emergency.

Upon the subject of internal improvements, gentlemen are defining their positions, as if it was a matter of necessity to do so on the present occasion. I believe between the years '33 and '37 there was not an internal improvement appropriation that I did not vote for, and I do not regret a vote that I then gave. I believe I voted right, and I think so now. But I believe it is right now to meet the public sentiment of the country, that we should impose on future legislation a restriction against the borrowing and appropriation of money for internal improvements. The gentleman from Madison has spoken about turnpike roads in my county, and I should like to know how much stock he owns in them.

Mr. TURNER. My stock is all in Madison county.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. How much do you own?

Mr. TURNER. About one thousand dollars of it.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. Well, we are about in the same condition—I have unfortunately about twice as much as he.

The PRESIDENT here modified his amendment to read as follows:

“The general assembly that shall first convene under this constitution, shall set apart an annual sum of at least $50,000, of the public revenue; which shall be the first to be paid, and provide that the same and the surplus of the sinking fund after paying the interest on the public debt, shall be faithfully applied to the purchase and withdrawal of the evidences of the debt of this commonwealth, until the whole of said debt shall be discharged: Provided, If the annual sum so appropriated, shall not be sufficient to discharge the debt as it shall become due, the general assembly shall have authority to create additional loans for the punctual payment of said debt: And, provided further, That the general assembly shall have authority, except as hereinafter provided, to contract other loans.”

Mr. JAMES. Many having availed themselves of this occasion to define their position in relation to the system of internal improvements, I shall take this opportunity to define mine. I have come here prepared to restrict the power of the legislature to run the state in debt, to the least possible amount. The safest criterion to judge of the future, is to look to the past history of the country; and acting upon this rule, I think there is no one but will concur in the propriety of imposing some stringent restriction on the debt-creating power of the legislature. I was in the legislature when the system of internal improvements was originated, and even some years before. I first had the honor of a seat in that body in the session of 1825-'26, and was returned again in 1828. I continued four years in the house, and was then elected to the senate, where I continued until the year 1848. The first internal improvement project was made in the years 1828 and '29. There was then a surplus in the treasury, realized from the profits of the Bank of the Commonwealth and the Bank of Kentucky, and a proposition was made to distribute $200,000 of this surplus among the several counties, in proportion to the number of voters, for internal improvement purposes. I thought it a fair and equitable distribution. I was representing a section of country in which the Indian title had just been extinguished, and which is comprised of the territory west of the Tennessee river, known as "the purchase." The Indian title was extinguished in 1818, under what is known as Jackson's treaty, and after an examination of that location, 1821, concluding that it offered a fair opening for a young man to make a living, I removed thither with my family, in the year succeeding. Then, the only roads through that section of the country, were a few Indian trails; and down to 1828 and 1829 there were but few roads, and the country was still thinly settled. The first settlers, for the want of bridges, were obliged to cross the streams on logs, or to swim their horses. No part of the commonwealth was more in need of aid and assistance in these respects, than that region of country. The bill of 1829, however, did not pass. In 1834, a proposition originated in the house for the borrowing of a million of dollars. I was then representing my district in the senate, and two representatives came to consult me at my room in relation to it. They told me that the committee had agreed to set apart for our section, the proceeds of the vacant lands then remaining there. I made some further enquiries as to the purpose and provisions of the bill, and they informed me, as well as they could. I told them I would take the matter into consideration, and give them an answer during the next day. When I came to examine it, I discovered that the bill proposed an equitable and just distribution of the money between the three grand divisions of the state, and with a view of satisfying the committee on that subject, allow me to read the fourteenth section of that bill:

"Sec. 14. That the board of internal improvement, in subscribing for stock under this act, in the several turnpike roads now chartered, or which may be hereafter chartered, shall not subscribe more than one-third of the sum hereby authorized to be borrowed, for the purpose of making such roads on the north side of Kentucky river; and in like manner, not more than one-third of the sum aforesaid, on roads, between the Kentucky and Green rivers; and in like manner, not more than one-third of the aforesaid sums on roads on the south side of Green river: Provided, That if the said board of internal improvement should not be called on, according to the provisions of this act, to subscribe the full amount of money authorized to be borrowed under this act, for making turnpike roads, within one year; then, and in that event, the aforesaid board of internal improvement may subscribe the sum which may remain unsubscribed, in turnpike roads in any part of this commonwealth where individuals or corporate bodies may have subscribed and paid in the like amount which the said board of internal improvement may be required to subscribe."

I determined, upon due reflection, to give the bill my vote; but if I could have supposed that it was to lay the foundation for involving the state in an enormous debt, however anxious my section of country might have been to secure a small pittance, I should most certainly have voted against it. What was done at the succeeding session of the legislature? Why, the restriction requiring the appropriation of this money in fair proportions to the three grand divisions of the country, was repealed. But first let me call the attention of the convention to the twenty-seventh section of this bill:

"Sec. 27. That not exceeding two hundred thousand dollars of the scrip authorized to be sold, shall be sold before the first day of January next; and not exceeding one-third of the residue shall be sold in each of the three following years; nor shall the governor subscribe for more stock annually, than he is hereby authorized to issue scrip for, as restricted by this act."

Gentlemen will see how well this act was guarded. Of this million that was proposed to be borrowed, not more than $200,000 could be borrowed before the next session of the legislature, and not exceeding one-third of the residue could be borrowed in each of the three succeeding years, and the governor could not go on and subscribe for stock, so that not more than $200,000 could be borrowed prior to 1836.

This is the extent of my sinning, if any I have committed, on the subject of internal improvements. I have stated the circumstances under which I was induced to go for this measure, and I confess that even then, I had some misgivings as to the consequences that were to grow out of it.

Well, after this restriction was taken off, what was the proposition made to the legislature? I will read from the act of 1836, the twenty-seventh section:

"Sec. 27. That the sum of five thousand dollars be appropriated to the improvement of Bayou du Chien; five thousand dollars be appropriated to the improvement of Clark's river; one thousand five hundred dollars be appropriated to the improvement of Little Obion and Mayfield's creek in the county of Hickman; one thousand dollars be appropriated to the improvement of Little Barren river: Provided, That the board of internal improvement shall believe that the said improvements are expedient, and will be of public benefit, and that the said sums of money are necessary for those purposes; and the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars be appropriated out of the sales of the scrip of the state, shall be applied, under the direction of said board, to the improvement of the navigation of Panther creek: Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the board of internal improvement to have surveyed by a competent engineer or engineers, all of the streams which this act proposes improving, west of the Tennessee river, within the months of May and June next, and it shall be the duty of said engineer or engineers to make a report to the board of internal improvement, by the first day of September next, or as soon as practicable thereafter; and if it shall appear from said report, that all or a part of said streams can be beneficially improved, the engineer shall report the plan and probable cost; upon which report said board of internal improvement shall proceed to lay the same under contract, and have said stream improved as speedily as practicable, until the whole of the before several amounts shall be expended: And, provided further, That it shall be the duty of the board of internal improvement to cause the snags, drifts, and other obstructions in Panther creek to be removed before the same are submerged by the erection of the dams in Green river; and the amount appropriated to said stream by the act of the last session, shall not be absolute, but may be withheld by the board of internal improvement, if they deem its expenditure inexpedient, and not of sufficient public importance."

The system had now fully developed itself to me, and I became satisfied that it was not to be carried out in good faith. I therefore voted against the bill, notwithstanding the representatives from my section took strong ground in favor of it, and denounced me for my course on my return home. I was satisfied that the design was to give to the centre and wealthy portions of the state the benefits of the appropriation, and that the promises held out to my section of the country were merely to secure their votes. If it was intended to give my county this $11,500, in good faith, why was not the appropriation at once made positive and specific, as in the case of the grant of $200,000 to the Lexington and Ohio railroad.

Well, as I have stated, I entered the senate in 1832, and I was a candidate for re-election in 1836. On one occasion while addressing the people at Clark's river, I heard that the engineer was traveling up Clark's river for the purpose of surveying it, and intended to go on towards bayou du Chien. I went to him and he told me that he had examined that stream and thought well of it. He said nothing more to me, but he placed in the hands of my competitor, an official report showing that $3000 was to be expended on that stream. It was not used publicly, but generally in a private and secret manner. And I took the occasion then to tell the people that they would never get a dollar, and though I am no prophet or the son of a prophet, yet the prediction has been fully verified. I do believe that engineer was sent there on that occasion for the purpose of engineering Tom James out of the senate.

Mr. HARDIN. Name the engineer.

Mr. JAMES. His name is Buford, and I believed it then and I believe it at this day. I had discovered the workings of the system, and was opposing its being carried out. Though I live between two of the streams that were to be improved, yet I was not to be bought up, and I had the nerve to vote against it. And thank God my constituency sustained me for it, although they never knew that they would not get the appropriation until after the election was over. I can only account for being thus sustained in the face of the opposition against me, from the fact that my constituency had an abiding confidence in the honesty and purity of my motives, and believed, deeply identified as my interests were with theirs, that I was governed solely in my action by a sincere regard for the public good.

I do not charge improper motives on any body, for the whole country was inflamed with the internal improvement fever, and men in my county declared that if my competitor was elected, property would go up, but if Tom James was returned, it would have a disastrous fall. If the system was carried on, men were told that the country would be chequered over with rail-roads and turnpikes, and that they would only have to roll their produce out of their barns, and in a moment it would be on its way to market.

From that day I washed my hands of the internal improvement system, and I voted against every appropriation that came up. A good many have given in their experience as to the operations in regard to the education fund, and the manner in which it was set apart and disposed of. My recollection is, that after the distribution of the United States surplus revenue and the reception by Kentucky of her share, there were two parties in the legislature—the internal improvement, and the education parties. I belonged then, and do still, to the education party, and I am opposed to improving the face of the country, at the expense of the minds and education of the children of the state. Finally the sum of $850,000 was set apart out of the United States deposit fund and pledged to the object of education, and the balance was appropriated to internal improvements. The system of internal improvements went on swallowing up million after million—not in Kentucky alone, but in all of the states of the Union, until the several states were indebted to the extent of some $200,000,000, the interest on which is $12,000,000, all of which went, not to our own citizens, but to the foreign capitalists. Those capitalists had their agents in Wall street, New York, buying our stocks, the interest on which was to be paid in gold and silver, to be transported across the water for the support of the nabobs and aristocracy there. Well, in 1838, the credit of Kentucky was good at home and abroad, but in 1839 our bonds could not be sold, we never having authorized their sale at less than their par value. Then it was that provision was made that the contractors should take them at their par value. They received them, but were unable to hold them, owing to the demands upon them for compensation to their laborers and for their materials. What was the result? Why they had to go to the brokers and sell our bonds at from fifteen to twenty-five per cent. discount. It was not right, but the contractors were forced to take those bonds or nothing, and though they have been knocking at the door of your legislature for relief, the relief has never been extended to them. The banks were appealed to for relief, and they loaned to the board of internal improvement several hundred thousand dollars, and thereby greatly increased their circulation. These contractors and laborers were mostly foreigners, and not wanting Kentucky money, they sold it to brokers, who made a rush on the banks, and thus forced those institutions to suspend. Kentucky was engaged in an unfortunate and wasteful system of internal improvements, and the school moneys were invested in the bonds for the construction of those works, most of them bearing five per cent interest.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. The education fund was invested before 1839 and 1840, in the second or third loan made.

Mr. JAMES. I may not be precisely correct as to dates, not having had time to look into them, but I am as to the facts. What then was the prospect for the diffusion of education? Their funds were exhausted. The bonds given that fund have not been paid, and it is reported to us that the state has not even the means to pay the interest on them. I will not say this is repudiation, but it is certainly postponing the payment of a debt justly due.

This system of internal improvements never should have been carried on unless each work could have been able to sustain itself, and thus justify and obtain the support of the whole state. Its friends saw that it would not do that, and with a view of securing its adoption, held out promises to various portions of the state, that never were complied with. They acted on the theory of the quack doctor, who said that because a little medicine was good, more was better, and he went on until he killed the patient. To show how inducements were held out and means resorted to, to secure the adoption of certain measures, I will call the attention of the convention to the two turnpike roads from Louisville to the Tennessee line, referred to by my friend from Simpson (Mr. Clarke.) One of them, by the way of Bowlinggreen, cost $441,383 15; and the other, by the way of Glasgow, $500,216 32; and for miles they run almost side by side, each about 140 miles in length. What was the necessity for these parallel roads? None whatever—at least in which the public were interested. If one was proper, or demanded by the public interest, certainly the other was not needed.

This is not all. Not satisfied with the turnpike from here to Louisville, costing I know not how much, and the Kentucky river improvement, which to a certain extent is a beneficial work, and which cost upwards of $900,000, these very same men applied to the legislature for a railroad to run between the Kentucky river navigation and the turnpike road. The road will soon be completed, and if it succeeds, its success must be purchased at the expense of the state's interests in the turnpike road and river. What is to become of the profits from the river navigation and the turnpike? The greater portion of the travel and the transportation must go over the railroad, and then what is to supply the deficiency on the other improvements? Why it is to be done by taxation on the people.

I have always been for sustaining the credit of the state, and have ever stood opposed to repudiation, and when a debt has been contracted, whether I approved of its creation or not, I am for meeting it and paying it promptly. And with a view to prevent a recurrence of that species of legislation under which this system of internal improvements was originated and carried on, I desire to go to the utmost extent in restricting the debt-creating power of the legislature. A public debt is neither more nor less than a mortgage on the land of every man in the commonwealth, and he cannot escape from it. If he sells his land under such a liability, the purchaser will have an eye to that fact, and demand a reduction accordingly. It is precisely a lien on the sweat of the brow of the toiling millions of the country: and in proof of this, I need but point this convention to the example afforded by our sister state—the young and once thriving state of Illinois. How her prospects have been blighted by the overpowering weight of a vast state debt. Her energies have been crushed, and her citizens have been driven almost to despair by the weight and burden of taxation. Purchasers of lands have been constrained to decline making investments there, because they knew they must buy, subject to the taxes charged and payable upon the lands of the state, and many holding lands there, have been driven by this system of taxation to forfeit their lands to the state.

I will go for any prudential measure that may be proposed here, to save my state from the possibility of such a calamity.

The amendment of the President was then adopted.

The committee then rose and reported the article to the convention.

And then the convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. LANCASTER.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the legislative department.

The question pending was on concurring with the committee of the whole in the adoption of an additional section.

Mr. APPERSON. I do not feel inclined to vote for this amendment, and with the permission of the convention, I will give two or three reasons. And one of them is, that it will appear that we are setting ourselves up as the overseers of the people. We have come here to make an organic law which we hope will continue for many years. Every two years the people of Kentucky will assemble by their legislature. Debts have been contracted heretofore by the legislature according to the will of the people; and not a whisper of "repudiation" has been heard. And has it become necessary for us to read a lesson to the representatives of the people, and to tell them what is their duty? I cannot imagine for a moment but that the people, having determined that their public debt shall be paid, will, through the law-making power, in due and proper time, make provision for payment of that public debt. So far as I am concerned, sir, I was never instrumental in the creation of that debt; and unlike most of the members of this convention who have spoken on this subject, I regret that I was not. I believe, sir, that the expenditures for public improvements in Kentucky have been of vast benefit to Kentucky. I believe that the public improvements that have been made in consequence of that expenditure have increased the aggregate wealth in an almost immeasurable ratio over the expenditure. I believe, Mr. President, that the increased value of property, both to individuals and the public, and the increased revenue which has accrued and is accruing to the state, in consequence of that increased value, has greatly exceeded the expenditure of the state; and whilst I hear gentlemen say that they deeply regret that so much should have been expended on works of internal improvement, some of those gentlemen too being the very men who voted for that expenditure—I, on the other side, regret that I never did vote for that expenditure. I believe the expenditures, take them in the aggregate, were wise, a portion of them unwise. I am, however, willing to acknowledge that those gentlemen who advocated those expenditures could see further ahead than I could. And, with regard to the further indebtedness of the state, I take it that the people will always speak their will; and whenever you adopt such a section as the thirty third, I can conceive no necessity for the adoption of any other upon the same subject. If the people will it to borrow money for public improvements let them do so—they can as well speak through the law-making power as through us. Shall we put an interdiction upon the people and say “you shall not have power to borrow money for public improvements?” According to one section in the constitution no indebtedness shall be created, no money shall be taken unless the people shall vote for the expenditure. And can it be possible that we want to trammel the people more than that? Can it be possible that we should set ourselves up as censors of the people and say you shall not have the opportunity of making public improvements if you find it necessary to do so? There are as wise heads to follow us as are now in this convention; and if we are to restrict the legislature in this way, and through the legislature, the people, from expending what they may deem necessary for the improvement of our public works, I do not see that this convention will gain much credit. The people are the proper judges of this matter; and whenever they shall speak through the law-making power, and it shall be submitted to them to say, do you approve of such appropriations, I hope the people will not be prevented from giving their assent, and from carrying that assent into effect. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. LINDSEY. When the committee on the legislative department were acting upon the subjects embraced in the thirty-second and thirty-third sections of their report, the existing state debt would have occupied their attention, but for the fact that a special committee had been charged therewith.

Looking to the action of that special committee for an efficient plan to guide the general assembly in extinguishing the state debt, my mind has not been occupied with it, and now I would prefer passing by the proposition of the President for the present, unless the special committee do not intend reporting.

The subject is important, and should be deliberated upon with all the facts we can have before us.

The thirty-second section, it will be seen, embraces only two propositions: “casual deficits in the ordinary revenue,” and “expenses not provided for.” The sum for which we propose the legislature may contract debts—$500,000—is not larger, in my opinion, than it should be. A less sum might embarrass and discredit the state under circumstances that may happen frequently in the course of one life. Suppose the ordinary revenues should fall off by reason of a depression in the value of property, $50,000, and a loan has to be contracted therefor, there should, before this $50,000 was paid, be a suspension of the banks to which the sinking fund, as now arranged, looks for the means of paying a large proportion of the interest on the state debt, a $100,000 might be required, temporarily, to preserve our credit in this way. Before these are paid, the falling off of receipts from the public works, by destruction of locks and dams, or other causes, might require $50,000 more. Other causes might arise to increase the sum required to fill the limit fixed by that section. These views prompt me to oppose striking out $500,000 and inserting a less sum.

The principle of imposing such restrictions on the legislature is somewhat questionable, as we cannot foresee the state of things that may come about in a series of years, making it the interest of the state to contract debts, temporarily, even to a much larger sum than that fixed by the committee.

The restriction in the thirty-third section is enough to prevent the dangers of any future internal improvements to be started or carried on by the legislature. No debts can be contracted without the assent of a majority of the people, for that or any other purpose, except those named in the thirty-second section.

Those gentlemen who have been explaining the reasons why they voted in the legislature for internal improvements, ought not to feel that they merited censure. They did much good in some of the works made, though they cost extravagant sums. But they, as legislators, have only done what individuals do often in their own private affairs. In endeavoring to better their condition they involve themselves in debt. For myself, I can say that no sins of omission or commission lie at my door, as I never held a seat in the legislature. Yet, I am free to say, if I had been there when the system of internal improvement was in progress, I would certainly have voted for many of them—perhaps would have gone almost, if not quite, as far as many gentlemen who have spoken on the subjects now before the convention.

I cast no reflections on any gentlemen for the debt now existing; on the contrary, appreciating the motive that prompted the legislature in contracting it, I am willing to vote for any provision thought best to compel the legislature to look continually to the gradual extinguishment of the present debt, and to prevent the creation of any other, without the assent of our sovereigns.

Mr. IRWIN. I understand that the first proposition before the house, is the section offered by the President, in the committee of the whole. As I understand that section, it proposes to increase the resources of the sinking fund $50,000, and this is to be taken first from the ordinary revenue, before any other debt is paid. Now, sir, I incline to the opinion that this additional section will—as I am sure it ought—receive the largest support of any proposition that has been presented to the consideration of the convention.

It is not a matter that ought to enter into the consideration of the payment of a debt, that that debt was improvidently created. It is sufficient for us to know that the debt is an honest obligation on the part of the state, which it is our bounden duty to make some provision to pay, and so far as I am concerned, I would pay it to the last dollar, although the representatives should have improvidently squandered the whole of it.

For one, sir, I do not believe that the present debt of the state was improperly created. It is true, that in carrying out the system of internal improvement some improvident expenditures, and some mistaken objects of public interest, were undertaken. This was the result of inexperience. What new system, sir, having such multifarious objects, could be perfect at first? In the organization of the board of internal improvement, they had no discretion in the application of the public money. It was made imperative on the board, that when the stock to be taken by individuals in any road company was subscribed, the state was bound to take her share of the stock. This produced misapplication, and some projects were undertaken which we greatly regret.

But, sir, that the system was wrong—that the state, throughout its length and breadth, did not demand it at the hands of her representatives, I deny. That our state has not been benefitted, improved, and her resources greatly augmented, no gentlemen will deny. Then why do gentlemen wish to show that they had no hand in creating this debt? Is it to prove that they better understood the real interests of the state? or to bring into disrepute those who voted for the system? Sir, I voted for it. I did so at the desire of an intelligent constituency, and the confidence they have uniformly reposed in me, proves that they believe I acted honestly. Sir, I acted as I conscientiously believed, for their best interest.

In relation to the section on the subject of restricting the legislature from the creation of a large debt, I shall be for it. I advocated it before the people, and shall perhaps vote for it. But, sir, I am not sure that I was right; and I am not sure that I ought not to retrace my steps and throw myself upon an intelligent constituency, for future agreement. Sir, it is well known that the bank capital of the state is mainly located in the northern and middle sections of the state; it is true, we have in the Green river country, that part so much lauded and loved by gentlemen here when they want support, two small branches of the Bank of Kentucky—one in Bowlinggreen and the other in Hopkinsville—but they have but little capital. I could almost use one of them myself, and when they come to supply the wants of all the country, they really are of no use; they are hardly known in the commercial relations of the country.

Now, sir, it is known that some time since, the legislature chartered a Southern Bank of Kentucky, and it seemed that it met the approbation of the country; and I am not advised but they may hereafter desire some aid on the part of the state for that object.

But if we adopt the thirty-third section, the state can never, under any state of the case, increase the banking capital of the state.

Sir, we are a great and growing people, with vast resources; with a gallant and energetic population; with a most fertile soil and unequaled climate, and I much doubt the propriety of crippling the energies of the legislature by tying them down to so small a sum, that hereafter they will not be able to meet the wants of the country.

But, sir, as to the proposition immediately before the house, being the section presented by the honorable president and adopted by the committee of the whole, I sincerely hope it may be adopted because I see clearly, that by adding this amount of $50,000 to the present sinking fund, the debt of the state, in about thirty years, will be paid off without the people ever feeling it. So small a sum annually, can surely be supplied out of the ordinary revenue.

Mr. MORRIS. I understood the gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) to state, that he was decidedly in favor of the additional section proposed by the honorable president. That gentleman is the chairman of the committee upon the public debt, and after a most mature deliberation has concluded that the scheme proposed in this additional section is the very best mode of extinguishing the heavy public debt by which we are oppressed. For my own part, I most heartily concur in the provisions of that section. Long explanations have been made by various gentlemen, as to their personal instrumentality in promoting these works of internal improvement, which have resulted in the accumulation of the heavy public debt under which the state is laboring. It seems to me, they are all foreign to the subject under consideration. The question is not, how the debt was contracted? but what means shall be devised for its liquidation. I have no doubt that the people of Kentucky are honest, and will cheerfully subscribe to any measure, which will tend gradually to extinguish their liabilities, provided it does not press too heavily upon them at once. I believe the proposition made by yourself, in the section now under consideration—that $50,000 be annually set aside, for the gradual liquidation of this debt, and its ultimate extinction—will accomplish the end for which it is intended and will not be a heavier burden than they are willing to bear.

The thirty-second and thirty-third sections of the legislative report, which are now before us, were intended, in a measure, to provide against the recurrence of the reckless spirit of internal improvement which once pervaded the land—to prevent the further accumulation of the state liabilities, without the sanction of a direct vote of the people—and not, as some seem to apprehend, to place a full stop upon all internal improvements. At the commencement of this spirit for improvements, I have learned—I was not then a resident of the state—that nearly every county—the whole people of the state—were swept along with the current; and it was almost universally believed, that instead of being a hindrance and an incumbrance upon the revenue, they would pay for themselves; and ultimately go far to relieve the people of the burdens of taxation. I was amused, in looking over the charter of the Maysville turnpike road, to see an express provision made, that whenever the revenue arising from tolls should exceed twelve per cent., the tolls should be reduced, so as to bring the receipts down to twelve per cent. This work, I believe, has never yielded an amount over two per cent. I merely mention this as an indication of the sentiment which then existed, with regard to the immense productiveness of these public works. Time wore on—the bubble burst—experience proved that not one of them could be made to pay the interest of the money expended in their construction—direct taxation had to be resorted to, to save the state from repudiation and disgrace—and now we find many gentlemen who were its most earnest advocates, are making excuses for the course they then pursued.

The gentleman from Madison said he had always been in favor of improvements—that he still is favorable to them—that though they had cost much, yet the benefits arising from them would much more than compensate for the cost—that the property in large sections of the country through which these improvements had passed, was largely improved in value—and that the convenience of the people had been greatly promoted. These are points which no doubt are true; and I am not surprised that he, and others who have been so largely benefited, do not complain. The complaints come from those large regions of country which have in no wise been benefited. The question is, whether these unimproved sections shall be equally responsible with those so much benefited—whether, in the improvements hereafter to be made, the expenses shall be borne by those immediately benefited, or by the state at large. In liquidation of the debts already contracted, when the tax-gatherer goes round to collect the revenue, he calls as surely at the door of the poorest man in the remotest part of the state, and collects his little mite, as at the palace of the rich man, whose fortune has been made by these very works. Is this right? Are not these burdens unequally distributed?

It seems to me, that no system of internal improvements should be gone into, where the profits arising from it will not pay a sufficiency to liquidate the interest of the money expended in its completion. In times like these, money can always be raised by individual and local companies, for the erection of any work, whenever it becomes manifest that such work will pay the interest, without the endorsement of the state. Whenever the necessity arises, the improvements will be made by those interested, independent of the state; and it strikes me that in this way, all works of a local character, should be carried on.

I am not one of those, who would put a stop to all internal improvements; but I think that the people who have to pay for them, should be allowed to say whether they will have them or not.

So far as relates to the banking capital in the Green river country, to which the gentleman from Logan has alluded, I question much if the people are not fortunate in being deprived of it.

Mr. BRADLEY. I have a substitute for the amendment which I think will accomplish the object. I desire now to offer it:

"The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws to diminish the resources of the sinking fund as now established by law, but may pass laws to increase it; and the whole resources of said fund, from year to year, shall be sacredly set apart and applied to the payment of the interest and principal of the state debt, and to no other use or purpose, until the whole debt of the state is fully paid and satisfied."

If I understand the amendment, it proposes to set apart $50,000 annually, to be applied to sinking the debt of the state. Gentlemen with whom I have conversed, are of the opinion that this cannot be done without producing the necessity of a resort to immediate taxation. I think it may be done, and I am sure that if the substitute which I have offered shall prevail, the amount within the sinking fund will reduce the amount of the debt, and there will then be no need of taxation. I will read from the message of the governor in relation to the public debt:

"The public debt of the state on the first day of January, 1848, amounted to the sum of four millions, six hundred and eight thousand, three hundred and thirty nine dollars. The following changes have occurred:

State debt, as above, on January 1st, 1848,	$4,608 339 00
January 26—Cash of Craddock Fund,	642 81
January 15—30 year six per cent. bond issued,	1,000 00
	<hr/>
	$4,609,981 81

Since that time the debt has been reduced,	77,068 00
--	-----------

Leaving the total debt of the state on the 20th December, 1848—this sum,	$4,532,913 81
--	----------------

From the above sum it has been usual to deduct the amount of bank stocks owned by the state, as the state is in possession of the means to pay this without imposing taxation on the people. The amount of bank stock thus owned by the state, is	$1,270,500 00
---	----------------

This deduction will make the actual debt of the state,	$3,262,413 81
--	----------------

To provide for the payment of the interest, and for the gradual extinction of this debt, the general assembly, at an early period, established a sinking fund.

That fund is composed of the following items:

1. Tax on the capital stock of the bank of Kentucky, and dividends on 9,399 shares of stock in the said bank, held by the state and by the commissioners of the sinking fund.

2. Tax on the capital stock of the Northern bank of Kentucky, and dividends on 2,900 shares of stock in said bank, held by the state and the commissioners of the sinking fund.

3. Tax on the capital stock of the bank of Louisville, and dividends on 406 shares of stock in said bank.

4. Profits of the commonwealth's bank.
5. Proceeds of the state stock in the old bank of Kentucky.
6. Five cents on every one hundred dollars worth of property liable to taxation.
7. One-third of the taxes collected on non-residents' lands.
8. Excess over five thousand dollars in the treasury at the end of each year, after deducting all demands.
9. Rent of the Lexington and Ohio railroad.
10. Tolls from slack water navigation on the Kentucky, Green and Barren rivers, and rent of water power.
11. Dividends on the state's stock in the various turnpike roads and bridges in the state.
12. Two-thirds of the profits of the penitentiary.
13. Taxes on brokers and insurance offices.
14. Premium on sale or exchange of state bonds.

A few of the least important of these resources have ceased, while the productiveness of others has been greatly enhanced.

For a detailed account of the management and operations of this ample fund, the general assembly is referred to the reports of the first and second auditors, and of the commissioners of the sinking fund. A brief abstract from the official statements will suffice for a general idea of what is the present condition of this fund.

Balance on hand 10th October, 1847, - - - - -	$139,387 12
Receipts from that date to 10th October, 1848, - - - - -	328,265 61
Receipts from 10th Oct., 1848, to 20th Dec., 1848, - - - - -	40,022 17
Add amount due from revenue department, - - - - -	27,258 20
Making, - - - - -	$534,933 10

EXPENDITURES.

Warrants issued and paid same time, - - - - -	$385,163 11
Necessary to pay interest due 1st Jan., 1849, - - - - -	131,807 41
Making, - - - - -	516,970 52

Leaving a balance of - - - - -	$17,962 58
--------------------------------	--------------------

RESOURCES FOR 1849.

The resources, including the balance on hand as before stated, (1848,) - - - - -	$373,486 39
Amount necessary to pay interest, - - - - -	$263,614 82
Repairs on Kentucky river, - - - - -	15,000 00
Repairs on Green and Barren river, - - - - -	10,000 00
Contingent expenses, - - - - -	900 00
Making, - - - - -	289,514 82

Surplus for 1849, - - - - -	$ 83,971 57
-----------------------------	--------------

It appears from the foregoing that the sinking fund has, in the course of the present year, not only furnished the means of paying punctually the interest of the public debt, but also of extinguishing $77,068 of the principal. And the estimates made for the year 1849, assure us of an equally favorable result, and exhibit a balance, after payment of interest, of $83,971 57, applicable to a further reduction of the debt."

Now it will be seen that this substitute which I have had the honor to propose, requires that the legislature shall never reduce the resources of the sinking fund, but may increase them, and it requires that all the resources of that fund shall be faithfully and bona fide applied, till the whole debt is paid off. No additional taxes will be necessary, and the state of the fund is such that the sums named in the message, may be applied to that use. I do not wish to alarm gentlemen on that subject. I really desire to have the resources of this fund, applied to the extinguishment of the debt, and to no other purpose. I know many wish to take what is over and above the annual interest, and upon that borrow more money, and with the money thus borrowed go on to make additional appropriations for internal improvement, or complete those already begun. I wish to provide against that, and that nothing more shall be done in that way, at least out of the sinking fund. That fund was to be applied to the payment of the interest of the debt, and finally to the extinguishment of that debt. This may be done with the present resources of the sinking fund. I think if gentlemen bestow some attention to this matter they will find there is perfect safety in the plan I propose; that there is no danger of taxation, and that there is a certainty the debt will be reduced more by this mode than by the other plan proposed.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. The question now under consideration is one of the great questions to be settled by the convention. The manifesto published at Frankfort, two years successively by the convention party, proposed as one of the reforms in the constitution, some restriction on the legislature in contracting debts. This proposition, every where, met the sanction of the people. I remember having met with none, who were opposed to it. A heavy debt had been hastily contracted by the legislature, with which the people were dissatisfied. They hence determined to limit the power of that body, on this subject, in all the future. True, gentlemen tell us that by this limitation, we manifest a want of confidence in the legislature. The people themselves, have manifested this want of confidence; and have required the restriction, at our hands. Our work is to carry out their will. The debt has been contracted, and must be paid. The people of Kentucky are for paying it. They are a tax paying people—a debt paying people. They have heard much said among them, about the public debt of the state. And have long ardently desired to see the day of its extinguishment. They have looked to the legislature in vain. In vain they will look to it. One legislature may set apart a fund for this purpose. The next has the power to repeal, and undo all that may thus have been done. We have seen funds set apart by a legislature for given purposes, while subsequent legislatures have either squandered the money or diverted it to other uses. This will ever be the case with our public debt. Of what avail is it, for a legislature this year to make provision for the gradual extinguishment of our public debt, if the next one which may assemble, can and will apply the money in a different way? We have tried the legislature, and failed, long enough to know, that the debt will never be paid as long as we trust to legislation. The country is consequently looking to this body for action on the subject. A fund set apart by the constitution itself for the gradual extinguishment of the interest and principal of the state debt will be beyond the reach of the legislature, and beyond the reach of any one, as long as the constitution shall last. Such a fund would be permanent and reliable, and would have the confidence of the people. Till such a step is taken, I believe the debt of the state will not be paid.

The report of the committee provides a limitation on the power of the legislature, in contracting debts. That some such limitation will be incorporated into the constitution, there seems to be no doubt. I, for one, am for it. My constituents are for it. Shall an efficient mode for paying the debt already contracted be also provided? That the people would hail with joy, such a provision in the constitution, I make no doubt. In my section of the state, they are anxious to see the debt discharged, and would sanction any proper mode which may be devised, for that purpose. The constitution, in fact, would, when submitted, gain strength by it. I am therefore for the most available mode for the payment of this debt, and the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Hopkins is, as I think, that mode. The proposition of the president of the convention, adopted in committee of the whole, and now also pending, requires the legislature to set apart annually, $50,000, for the payment of the principal of the state debt. Now even though this provision be passed, still the legislature might disregard it. The old constitution required positively, that provision should be made by law, for suing the state, yet, in this respect it was disregarded. So the legislature might come here and appropriate all the revenue to other purposes, and then refuse to set apart the $50,000, because they would not have it to set apart. This they might very well do, if it required a resort to taxation, against the will of the people. Nor is there any thing in the proposition, prohibiting the legislature from diverting the proceeds of the sinking fund from its legitimate objects. That fund, if held sacred to the payment of interest and principal of the state debt, will discharge the debt sooner than will $50,000, annually applied to the payment of the principal of this debt. I have taken some pains in looking into the condition of the sinking fund, and am satisfied that it is so, and I believe that any gentleman who will take the trouble of an examination, will come to the same conclusion.

The state debt a year or two ago, was $3,390,500
It was, on the first day of January last 3,261,413

The sum of - - - - - $129,087 of the principal has recently been paid by this fund, besides discharging the interest. Some $77,000 of this part of the principal was paid

last year, as will be seen by reference to the last annual message of his excellency governor Crittenden, and the report of the commissioners of the sinking fund. The same report, in estimating the receipts and disbursements of the sinking fund, for the present year, shows that after paying the interest on the whole state debt, there will remain, at the end of the year, $97,485 18 to be applied in paying the principal of the debt. The receipts are however, estimated too low. That fact is now known, and may be ascertained by referring to the auditor's office. For example, the sum of $129,807 17 is the estimated amount coming into the sinking fund this year, from the five cents on the hundred dollars worth of property, but the returns are now all in, and they show that the taxable property of the state has gone up to over $285,000,000. In this single item then, the sinking fund will this year, receive some $12,000 more than was supposed by the estimates already alluded to. It is thus shown, that the sinking fund is in a more flourishing condition than at any time before; that it is now, and has been for several years, gaining on the state debt, and if preserved for that purpose, as it should be, will ultimately discharge the whole of it. The proposition of the gentleman from Hopkins, (Mr. Bradley,) is to that effect. It is to hold the fund we already have—to put it beyond the reach of the legislature, and to set it apart in the constitution as it was originally designed, for the payment of our debts. If this is done, it will discharge the public debt much more rapidly than any plan yet proposed. Besides, it will create no necessity for additional taxation. It is only an application of the means already in our hands, and the question now is, will we hold this fund, and thus apply it, or leave it to be squandered at pleasure, by any legislature which may hereafter convene—and simply require them by a sort of mandate in the constitution, to provide a sum of $50,000 annually, for the same purpose which they possibly might not regard, and thus leave the debt unpaid. I am for settling this question now—settling it in the constitution, and that in a manner the most available. Some gentlemen insist that by adopting a clause of this kind, we imply a want of confidence in the legislature—the representatives of the people. Why sir, we have the example, if we choose to follow it, of several other states in the Union.

The constitution of New York, and to that I am not ashamed to refer, and especially on a question of this sort, has this provision:

"ARTICLE 7. SEC. 1. After paying the expenses of collection, superintendence, and ordinary repairs, there shall be appropriated and set apart, in each fiscal year, out of the revenues of the state canals, commencing on the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty six, the sum of one million and three hundred thousand dollars, until the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty five, and from that time, the sum of one million seven hundred thousand dollars in each fiscal year, as a sinking fund, to pay the interest and redeem the principal of that part of the state debt, called the canal debt, as it existed at the time first aforesaid, and including three hundred thousand dollars then to be borrowed, until the same shall be wholly paid; and the principal and income, of said sinking fund, shall be sacredly applied to that purpose."

The second section has a similar provision for redemption of another, and different debt against the state. In a financial point of view, the state of New York may successfully challenge the world for a rival. She has expended on canals alone, more than thirty millions of money; and these canals are now yielding more than nine per cent. net, on the whole original cost. Her works of internal improvement were begun, and carried forward by her legislature. The result shows that, that body acted wisely and providently. The world perhaps can show nothing to equal the success of their internal improvements; yet the convention of that state, in remodeling their constitution, thought proper to provide a fund for the payment of the state debt, and to put it beyond the power of the legislature. This constitution was submitted to the people for their approval, and was adopted by an overwhelming majority. That state, well worthy of imitation in this respect, did not leave this subject to the legislature, but at once settled the question in the constitution itself. If New York did not think it an imputation on her legislature, which had acted providently in the premises, to lay this restriction, much less should we think it so of ours, when it has acted improvidently and hastily.

The convention of Illinois, which has just formed a constitution for that state, took the responsibility of providing for the payment of the state debt, by direct taxation, as will be seen by the following clause in the new constitution of that state:

"ARTICLE 15. There shall be annually assessed and collected, in the same manner as other state revenue may be assessed and collected, a tax of two mills upon each dollars worth of taxable property, in addition to all other taxes, to be applied as follows: The fund so created shall be kept separate, and shall annually, on the first day of January, be apportioned and paid over, pro rata upon all such state indebtedness, other than the canal and school indebtedness, as may for that purpose, be presented by the holders of the same, to be entered as credits upon, and to that extent in extinguishment of the principal of said indebtedness." Adopted August 31st, 1847.

This constitution providing direct taxation, for the state debt was, as I am informed, submitted to the people, and carried by a large majority. And so, whenever this constitution is submitted to the people, containing a provision for the payment of our state debt, such provision will meet their sanction, and instead of weakening, will greatly strengthen it, for they are not only willing, but anxious to make payment.

If we do not begin this work now, when will we? When will be a better time than the present? The state is now enjoying more solid prosperity than at any time before in our whole history. The condition of our revenue is flourishing. The amount of our taxable property has, for several years, been regularly going up. It is this year thirteen millions in value, higher than it was last year, and is in fact some millions higher than ever at any time before. The proceeds of our sinking fund are going up, while our debt is going down. In respect to this debt, we now hold the vantage ground. My doctrine is to keep it, by taking the means already in our hands, and setting it apart, for the payment of our debts. This we can do without one cent of taxation. The people are expecting something at the hands of the convention, on the subject of this debt. I, for one, am for meeting these expectations; for if nothing is done here, in vain may we expect any thing hereafter.

In setting down the indebtedness of the state, I have of course omitted the amount owing for bank stock, for an equal amount of stock is owned by the state. These two amounts will, as admitted by all, liquidate and settle each other. Nor have I taken into the estimate the amount due by the state to the school fund. That fund is separate and apart from the other debts of the state, and has not been, and is not a charge upon the sinking fund. It is under the control and power of the state, and may be met as heretofore, and in such other manner as may be found right and proper. I had expected a report on this subject from the committee on the debt of the state, but the chairman of that committee has already explained why a report has not been made, and that none, as the subject is now under consideration, will be made. It may therefore be right to pass this question a day or two, to give more time for looking into the condition of the sinking fund. If so, I am sure gentlemen will come to the same conclusions to which I have arrived.

Mr. GRAY. This, sir, is a subject of great importance. The section which was proposed by the President, is neither more nor less in my estimation than directly imposing a tax upon the people of Kentucky by this convention, which you will do if this section forms part of the constitution. If I understand the proposition sir, it is to require that the legislature shall take out of the ordinary revenue of the state $50,000 yearly, and appropriate it to the payment of the public debt of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned, I came here to pass no such law. There was no proposition before the people whom I represent for imposing taxation upon them; and I think this is a species of legislation which belongs entirely to the legislature. Sir, in this state the people will provide for the payment of their public debt as they have done heretofore, and I think we might trust the people's representatives, whom they may elect, who will hereafter look to it with sufficient cautiousness and wisdom. So far as I am concerned, therefore, I shall vote against the proposition.

I think the proposition of the gentleman from Hopkins is proper, and much more appropriate. I have much less objection to the plan which he proposes than to that of imposing a tax upon the people of $50,000 yearly, for the payment of this debt. If this sinking fund is sufficient to pay the interest of the debt and to sustain the character of the people of Kentucky, let it be appropriated to that purpose. If it is not sufficient, let the legislature, when the proper time comes, make an appropriation; let them impose a tax, and sir, the people will justify them. There is, therefore, in my opinion, no propriety in putting such a provision as this in the fundamental law.

Sir, in reference to the proposed restriction upon the legislature to create public debts, I would ask how far does that restriction go? Certainly the people of this state do not expect you to restrict them so that they never can borrow a dollar; so that they never can hereafter make any improvement, unless they have the means beforehand in the treasury of carrying such improvement to perfection. The restriction already provided, which prohibits an increase of debt or of borrowing money, ought to be sufficient; and if the people are of opinion that a further amount ought to be raised for the improvement of those works for which that debt was originally created, they ought to have the right of carrying out such a proposition.

But, in relation to this thirty second section, it appears that gentlemen do not understand it. Certainly it does not imply that any debt should be created under it for any purpose not necessary for the business of this state. It merely provides for casualties that may happen and that have heretofore happened. Unless those casualties do occur, certainly the legislature have no power to increase the debt and impose any greater burdens upon the people whatever.

Now, the gentleman from Nelson considers that the legislature would have power every two years to create a debt of half a million of dollars. Sir, there is nothing more plain to my mind than the language used here. If gentlemen will read this language and connect it together, they will readily discover that it deprives the legislature of the power of ever creating any debt beyond the sum of $500,000. They may create a debt of $100,000 one year; of $200,000 the next; and of $300,000 the next; but they never can exceed the amount of $500,000, until that amount, when expended, is paid. There is no stepping beyond that.

It is as plain as language can make it. They never can create a debt—no matter what the exigencies of the state may be—beyond this $500,000, without submitting it to the people. If I understand the proposition as it now stands, the gentleman from Nelson proposes to strike out the words, "expenses not provided for." I think there is no necessity for it. There are necessities that may befall the country. Here, for instance, is our bank stock. The taxes upon the stock of the bank are part of the sinking fund. Suppose sir, from any casualty that fund should fail entirely, as it has failed heretofore, would there not be a deficit which would come under "expenses not provided for." That, it seems to me, would not come under the head of "deficit," but under that of "expenses not provided for." Ought there not then to be a power somewhere to protect and guard the credit of the state? Certainly there ought. That is the only object of this provision; you cannot create any debt here, except for such casualties as may occur. Would any thing like "state improvements" come under such a head as that? Certainly they could not. Gentlemen should examine these things; they should consider them as they will be seen and considered by the country. Gentlemen should consider that our revenue might be reduced, and our buildings destroyed, pestilence and famine might overspread the land, and in such emergency the credit of the state could not be sustained. In such cases, I am aware some gentlemen say "meet all these emergencies by taxes." The people sir, are willing to pay their debts, but are not always ready to pay taxes; they are not at all times in a condition to pay them, but if you can borrow money for a short period, and give the people a little time, they will come up to the work, and without any question at all. It is for that reason and on that supposition that this power should be granted. We should not go too far and say that there shall be no power vested anywhere to provide for casualties of this sort. These restrictions I regard as amply sufficient. Now sir, we propose to give to the legislature the power to borrow $500,000. I do not think that sum is any too much; but if gentlemen think so, let them make what provision they may deem proper. We have some means in the sinking fund that cannot be classed with revenue at all. These may all fail as they have failed heretofore. Some gentlemen will say that the casualties I have spoken of cannot, or at least, may not occur; but they have occurred heretofore, and may occur again, and certainly, gentlemen, in a matter of such importance, ought to learn wisdom from the past.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. The sections to which the gentleman's remarks apply, are not now under consideration. I shall therefore say nothing in reply to those remarks. If I have seen any proposition which seemed to command a majority of the votes of this body, it is, that $50,000 shall be sacredly applied to extinguish the state debt. I only desire to state now the reasons why I prefer the proposition of the committee to that of the gentleman from Hopkins, (Mr. Bradley.) He proposes to guard the sinking fund by making a constitutional provision which shall direct the surplus, after paying current expenses, to cancel the debt. I will go with him to provide that any unexpended balance shall go to extinguish this debt.

Gentlemen say this tends to tax the people to the amount of $50,000. If that proposition was couched in the language of the constitution of Illinois, I would go for it, and should think I was discharging a debt to the people and to posterity. I should be willing to take upon myself the responsibility of setting apart a fund which no future legislature could touch or divert from the discharge of that debt resting on this community. It is admitted on all hands we shall save, by having our legislative sessions biennially, $50,000 annually, if our revenue remains as it now stands. I wish to lay hold of that surplus by a constitutional provision and apply it to the extinguishment of the debt, and not leave it for the legislature to appropriate to some other purpose. This is the reason why I prefer the proposition of the committee to that of the gentleman.

Besides, there may be a necessity for the latter clause, the power to fund, or borrow and extend the time of payment when not able to meet a payment at the time it falls due. That I think should be left in the control of the legislature. If I recollect right, that power was asked of the legislature in 1838 or 1839, that they should set apart a fund beyond the control of the commissioners of the sinking fund, to be applied to the gradual extinction of the debt independent of the interest accruing from the debt. It was not thought proper to set apart such a fund.

I will, therefore, move to add the words—

"The general assembly shall also set apart, annually, any overplus in the sinking fund, in addition to the $50,000, which shall be applied to the payment of the principal of the state debt."

The meaning of the amendment is this—that besides the $50,000 which the amendment of the President proposes to devote to the payment of the debt from the annual revenue, (about the sum to be saved by dispensing with the annual sessions of the legislature,) we should set apart the sinking fund also, and apply the whole to cancel the debt.

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman will see his amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. You are right, sir; I had overlooked the interlineation made. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. I believe I have pretty much the same object in view as the gentleman from Nelson, and there is no great necessity for controversy between us. There is, however, one difference to which I wish to call the attention of the convention. He proposes by his amendment to set apart $50,000 of the ordinary revenue of the state, in addition to the excess over and above what will pay the interest upon the state debt, remaining in the sinking fund. I wish to call that gentleman's attention and that of the convention, to this point. If the ordinary revenue does not furnish the sum of $50,000, does not this constitution go to the people with an additional clog of taxation to that amount? Clearly it does. But when you secure the whole resources of the sinking fund, by authorizing the legislature to increase it, and by forbidding them to diminish it, you secure, for this year, $83,000. The last year there would have been secured $77,000, and the resources of the sinking fund will still be in no wise diminished. Besides, unless the object be to increase taxation, it must be remembered that the excess in the treasury, except $5,000, goes to the sinking fund, and according to my amendment, will necessarily go to diminish our debt. It can be applied to nothing else. If we are required to draw from the revenue $50,000 in addition to this, we go to the country with our constitution loaded with taxes. I am as anxious as any man to pay this debt. I had no hand in contracting it, but I am prepared to do my part towards paying it at the most convenient time, and in the best way. I think we should forbid the legislature to use the sinking fund for any other purpose.

Mr. DESHA. It strikes me all this discussion is out of order, for the previous question was moved before the adjournment yesterday, as the journal read here this morning shows.

The PRESIDENT. It was certainly called at the time of the adjournment, but as it was not renewed this morning, I have not interfered to stop the discussion.

Mr. TURNER. Well, sir, then I now call or the previous question.

The question was then put, "shall the main question be now taken?" which was decided in the negative.

The question then recurred on adopting the substitute of the gentleman from Hopkins for the section adopted by the committee of the whole.

Mr. BRADLEY called for the yeas and nays, and being taken, they were, yeas 56, nays 33:

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—56.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, Peter Lashbrooke, Martin P. Marshall, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, James Rudd, John D. Taylor, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—33.

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. JAMES proposed to amend the section by adding the following:

"The legislature shall provide by law for collecting such a rate of tolls from the roads and rivers as have been or may hereafter be improved at the public expense, as will pay the interest on the sum so expended, including the repairs and expenses."

Mr. NUTTALL. I don't think there should be any constitutional legislation on this subject at all.

Mr. IRWIN. I hope certainly the house will not adopt that proposition. The interest on the public debt, it has been said, amounts to $271,000 or near $300,000 annually; and if you impose a rate of toll on the roads and rivers to meet that sum, there will never be another steamboat come up the river, or a private carriage on the turnpikes. I am sure the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HARDIN. If my friend proposes to pay the interest on all we have expended, it will put a stop to all vessels on the Kentucky river. The expenses on the Kentucky river have been $901,- 900, and on the Green river they have been over $800,000. The expenses have hitherto exceeded the receipts. If you attempt to raise the interest on this sum by tolls, there will not be even a canoe on the river. And the same may be said of the turnpike roads. But I cannot think that my friend is in earnest.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I came here prepared to vote to deprive the legislature of the power to contract debts, or in any manner run the state further in debt, and I am prepared to go for the lowest possible restriction which may not be likely to endanger the public credit. I did not expect that we should be called upon to prescribe the mode and manner of liquidating the debt already contracted, but as that question has come up, I am prepared to meet it. I therefore submit for the consideration of the convention my plan, which is contained in the amendment that I have just offered. I propose to require the legislature to increase the tolls upon the roads and rivers, so as to raise a revenue sufficient to pay the interest upon the sum expended for their improvement, keeping them in repair, paying expenses, &c. This proposition will test the sincerity of the internal improvement party. What did they promise the country when they commenced this system? They said the profits arising from it would not only pay the interest, but yield a surplus which could be so invested as to produce a sum sufficient by the time the principal fell due, to pay that also, and that the people were never to be taxed to support or sustain it. Those who believed that, have been badly taken in. Let me call your attention to the condition of the country, when this system was commenced. Our taxes were, comparatively, light; six and a quarter cents on the hundred dollars worth of property, and then nothing was listed for taxation but land and slaves, horses and mules. This was soon found to be insufficient, and you resorted to a stratagem, to raise more revenue by increasing the subjects of taxation, cattle, bonds, or promissory notes, and money was taxed, in fact every thing that a man possessed, save one hundred dollars, and all this was not enough; you then increased the taxes to ten cents, and from that to fifteen cents, and now one third of all the taxes collected in the state goes into your sinking fund to pay the interest on the debt created for internal improvement purposes, and some fourteen or fifteen thousand dollars collected by specific taxation. Now I propose to tax those who are using and enjoying the benefits of these improvements to pay the interest on the sum expended. No object ever was entitled to public patronage unless such a tariff could be imposed as would support it. My constituents and many other portions of the state receive no benefit from these improvements, and I most solemnly protest against their being taxed to sustain them, or to speak more plainly, being made "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for another portion of the country. But I am told if the taxes are raised so as to pay the interest, the country cannot stand it, and the works must be abandoned and go down. This declaration does not alarm me. No, not at all.

What was transportation or the price of freight from Frankfort to Louisville, before the Kentucky river was locked and damed? It was from forty to fifty cents. What is it now? Only fifteen cents. What an immense reduction besides the benefits and advantages of expedition and certainty, two grand desideratums in commerce. Ex-governor Metcalfe in his report to the legislature in 1847-48, in speaking of the Kentucky river navigation, and the benefits and advantages resulting to those who enjoy it, says: "It may be well to inquire whether the amount actually saved to the inhabitants who enjoy the immediate advantages of this navigation, does not exceed the whole amount of their taxes annually." In another part of the same report he estimates the amount saved by those using this navigation at more than $170,000 annually. What is the interest on the money expended upon the Kentucky river? It is about $56,000. You collect now by your tolls about $30,000; raise the tolls a little higher and you would collect $26,000 more, and you would then have enough to pay the interest. Gentlemen need not be afraid then, that by raising the tolls so as to make them pay the interest, it will drive every steamboat out of it. My venerable friend the senior gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin,) says, he cannot think me in earnest, and that I certainly must be jesting. Well, he will know by waiting a while. This is no new notion of mine. A few years since when a member of the senate, I was foremost there, I believe, in advocating a law providing for increasing the tolls upon this river, and at one moment I was flattered with success, but a combination was formed and its provisions were made to apply to Green river, the improvements on which were in their infancy, scarcely completed, and this caused my efforts to prove abortive.

I desire now to call the attention of the convention and the country to the condition and management of our turnpike roads. I beg leave to read from a counter report made by G. W. Johnson of Scott county, a very prominent and distinguished man, the nephew, I believe, of the ex-vice president of the United States, Col. R. M. Johnson. This report was made to the house of representatives. See journal 1839-40, page 484.

"The state and individuals have improved 467.67 miles of road, and the amount of tolls collected at the gates, during the year 1839, is reported by the board of internal improvement at $92,641 86; while it is stated by the commissioners of the sinking fund, that only $7,576 37 have been received by them. Upon the supposition that the state is interested only one half in these improvements, it is evident that $77,489 12, or nearly $80,000 must have been expended, during the year 1839, in repairs, and the payment of presidents, treasurers, toll-gate keepers, and agents of the local boards, and incidental expenses.

"The expenditure of so large a sum, for such purposes, it is believed, results from mismanagement or fraud. If it be true, that neither mismanagement or frauds have had any agency in producing this result, it is evident that the system of borrowing, at five or six per cent. large sums at compound interest, to be invested in turnpike roads, must ultimately be ruinous in the extreme. The state has paid $2,027,614 89 and individuals $1,999,398 towards the completion of these roads. Six per cent. on $2,000,000 amounts to $120,000 annually. The state has received, as stated above, only $7,576 37 during the year 1839, on its investment of $2,027,614 89, or a fraction more than the one third of one per cent. per annum. Two millions of dollars, at six per cent. compound interest, will, in thirty two years, amount to the sum of sixteen millions, a sum so enormous as to be almost incredible, if figures did not establish its truth beyond contradiction. The most rigid economy is indispensable in a system involving such vast results, and a radical reform must be necessary."

Mr. President, does not the extract which I have just read, present our system of internal improvements in a most deplorable condition? It surely does; and in the language of the eloquent writer, "radical reform must be necessary." And what do I propose by the proposition which I have just submitted? It is to require the legislature to provide, by law, for laying such tariff on the travel and transportation on our roads and rivers as will raise a revenue sufficient to pay the interest, cost of repairs, expenses, &c. And surely those who have acted a conspicuous part in bringing about such a state of things cannot and will not refuse to come up and tax those who are in the enjoyment and possession of the grand and magnificent improvements, and those too whose property has been more than doubled in value by their construction. If you do this, and it should be onerous, the burden will but fall where it properly belongs.

Mr. DIXON. I can scarcely think my friend from Hickman is in earnest, but if he is, I think it will be well to look into the effect of that amendment. I understand the amendment is introduced to test the sincerity of the friends of internal improvement. If the amendment prevails, it will affect those who are not in favor of internal improvements as much, and perhaps more than those who are in favor of them. Those who live above slackwater navigation are deeply interested in the navigation of the rivers, and those who live below are interested in the transportation up and down the river. The gentleman proposes to lay a tax on the roads and rivers sufficient to pay the interest on the money expended in making roads and other public works. On what is that tax to be laid? On the produce of the country of course. It will fall directly on steamboats and other boats engaged in transporting up and down the rivers. But is it not a fact when you tax the vessels which carry the produce, you indirectly tax the produce which they carry to market? This cannot be denied. The tax falls on all the people on the banks of the rivers, but it will not fall on all the people of the state alike. Impose such a tax, and it would put a stop to navigation. The tax on the produce going out of Green river would absorb the whole value. The object of my friend I believe is good, but he cannot carry it out in this way without great injustice. Those who live at the head waters of the Kentucky and Green rivers will be compelled to pay the taxes on improvements below, as well as those who are in favor of the improvements. I cannot think my friend is in earnest, and I hope he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. GHOLSON. I know not whether the gentleman from Hickman (Mr. James) is in earnest or not; but if he is not, he certainly ought to be. We have been told, indirectly, that we, in the extremes, are to pay the fiddler, while the people in the centre dance. In heaven's name, who should the expense fall upon, but those who derive the benefit of these improvements? But because they would be taxed, we are told the proposition will not do. I have been denounced and abused out of this house, and insulted in it, because I voted for restricting the city of Louisville. Why did I do it? Because I thought one thirty-eighth part of the senatorial representation was as much as any city should have. And now we are told these improvements shall go on, and the present rates of toll shall remain as they are. We must be taxed, it is intimated, in all time to come, instead of those who are benefited. We never have been benefited by the improvements. Gentlemen are only asked to pay the interest on the sums that have been expended for the advantage of particular sections of the state; but we are told by gentlemen that this will not do. I should have been glad to have heard from my friend from Madison, who glories so much in internal improvements. I would have been glad to hear from the honorable president, and from many other gentlemen on this subject. I ask gentlemen to say, if it will not do now, to tax these roads and other local objects, when will it? I ask gentlemen to name a time when we are to be relieved from taxation? I want to know when they are willing to take the burden upon their own shoulders, for it is properly their burden and not ours. My constituents want to know the time, and therefore I am desirous that gentlemen shall name a period which, I hope, may satisfy those whom I represent. I know there is an objection to this. We are told every day in this hall, if you put this in the constitution, or that in the constitution, it will induce many to vote against it. I have seen nothing yet that will induce me to vote against it. Sir, I should be willing to be ridden, booted, and spurred a little longer, rather than do that, as I have got accustomed to it. When the question is one of expediency merely, and not one of justice, I would, as a member of this convention, vote against it. But as a member of the legislature, as an act of justice to my constituents, I would vote for it.

I would suggest to my friend from Hopkins, (Mr. Bradley,) whether there is not danger in adopting the course he advocates. If the internal improvement men would be affected in their purses by this most just principle, and should turn against this proposition, we should lose our constitution.

Mr. DIXON. I have said nothing about my being for or against internal improvements, nor do I intend to say any thing about it now.

The gentleman thinks I am abandoning my principles here. Why? Because I will not go for laying a tax on the people on the banks of the rivers, to an extent that will pay the interest on the debt for improvements, and at the same time meet all the expenses for repairs. Has that gentleman inquired what effect it will have on the navigation of the rivers? Has he settled, in his own mind, that it will not stop navigation entirely? And if it should, shall he tell me that I am acting inconsistently, if I will not go with him in his mad scheme of oppression? Let him show that the people are capable of bearing such a taxation—let him show that it would be just, so to tax them—let him show that it will not destroy the navigation of the rivers—and then he may come and say it is right and proper to lay such a tax exclusively on the people on the banks of the rivers. Let us, says he, tax those who have the benefit of the improvement. I told the gentleman, that if the section was adopted, many would be taxed who had not the benefit of it.

In 1841-2, I was a member of the legislature, and there came petitions to that body from the people near the source of the Kentucky river, that they might be relieved from the tax in passing through the locks and dams. The reason was, they could come down when the floods were high without the locks and dams, which were of no particular advantage to them, but subjected them to enormous taxes. The people on Green river are in the same condition. The tax on the locks is a tax on the produce as well as on those who live near the river. But if it falls on the people on the banks of these two rivers, it will put a stop to navigation, which every body will agree, should not be done. That it would do this, I have no doubt. The whole amount of taxes on the people on the banks of these rivers for a year, would be about $150,000, or rather it would be on their produce. My friend from Ballard and McCracken surely cannot be in earnest. He is a gentleman of fine feelings, I have no doubt. He is opposed to taxation, to oppression. He startles, when we talk about taxing one portion of the community for the benefit of another, and yet he wishes to tax those on the banks of the rivers to an extent that would be the extreme of oppression.

Mr. GHOLSON. I have said that these works are wholly worthless—that they are, in fact, of no profit to the state. The gentleman says if you tax the people you will send their produce out some other way. That is what we have always contended for. We did not want the works made, nor do we want them sustained. But, I ask gentlemen to put a period to this burden, or to tell us how long we are to pay taxes to meet the interest on this money, and probably the principal, for the benefit of those who live on the various routes.

Mr. DIXON. I do not think we have any thing to do with that. I think it belongs to the legislature of the country.

Mr. GHOLSON. That is about as good an answer as I expected, and as good as any other gentleman will ever give in this hall. Why leave it to the legislature? Why does he not say what day we may expect it to come to an end? No man can tell when it will end, unless the proposition of the gentleman from Hickman should be adopted.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have, upon two or three occasions, moved the previous question; and, as this session should draw to a close—though I am willing to hear reasonable debate—I think this question has been sufficiently discussed, and I shall be under the necessity of demanding the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON called for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The secretary commenced calling the roll, but before he got through

Mr. JAMES rose, and asked permission to withdraw his amendment.

Leave was granted.

The question recurred on the adoption of the section, as amended.

Mr. KAVANAUGH called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 52, nays 42.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Wm. R. Thompson, Henry Washington, Jno. Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—52.

NAYS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, Peter Lashbrooke, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Jas. Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—42.

So the section was adopted.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I desire to submit the following, as an additional clause to the section just adopted. It is to provide for an annual sum, of at least $50,000, to be applied to the extinguishment of this debt. The reason why I preferred the original amendment of the President was this: there were too many contingencies upon which that fund depends. I wish, while we devote that fund to pay the state debt, to add also this clause:

"If there shall not be an annual surplus in the sinking fund, equal to $50,000, to be devoted to the payment of the principal of the state debt, the deficiency shall be made up by an appropriation from the revenue of the state, so that at least the sum of $50,000 shall be annually devoted to the extinguishment of said debt."

I barely wish to provide, that whenever it is ascertained that there will not be this surplus from the sinking fund, the managers of that fund may make their arrangements to extinguish $50,000 of this debt. And when there is not this amount, the legislature may provide for it, so that we may apply the principle of extinguishing this sum every year.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me we are running too much into legislation. I am opposed to this amendment, by which, whenever there is not $50,000 which can be applied from the sinking fund, we may take that sum from our ordinary revenue. It will accomplish nothing but to give the legislature the power to resort to taxation.

Mr. HARGIS. I will vote for no provision that provides for direct taxation of the people. Such a provision is legislation, and should not be engrafted on a constitution. Besides, this is a subject which was not discussed before the people in the late canvass. I am as willing as any gentleman to make provision to meet the obligations of the state to the last dollar, together with interest on the principal as it becomes due; but I am not willing, in the formation of an organic law for the state, to run into such details, and insert in this instrument that which should be the subject of legislative enactment. I am not willing in this way to make an imperative provision for all time to come, whereby the people will be taxed annually to the amount of $50,000, in addition to the taxes which they now pay. Whether the internal improvement system was right or wrong, I will not now say; but I will go for paying all the debts we have incurred, and leave to the legislature the passage of such laws as will be a safeguard for the future.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFE. I wish to be understood here and at home, that I came here for the purpose of providing some system by which the public debt can be relieved. I know the legislatures have been called upon from time to time, by the executives of this commonwealth to set apart a fund annually for the gradual liquidation of the public debt. That has not been done, though the people have always desired that the debt should be paid. It is believed the sinking fund will have an increase greater than $50,000. I hope it may, but when we remember the fund is drawn principally from taxation on bank stock, from dividends of bank stock, from dividends of public roads, it is subject to casualties and loss. There may be and has been a surplus for the last two or three years. But if in consequence of breaking away of a dam, the income from the river should be stopped; there are not $50,000, and this surplus fails, what does my proposition contemplate? That there shall be at least, the sum of $50,000—to be appropriated to reduce the debt. That is what I want to secure. Gentlemen need not be apprehensive of telling the people of the state that they have secured an appropriation of $50,000 annually—no matter how or in what manner it may be raised—that in the course of thirty years, will extinguish our state debt. This will meet the approval of the people. They will hail our act as one fitted to protect them against excessive taxation. I do not suppose that a provision of this kind will lead to the necessity for a tax to the amount of the forty-eighth part of a cent per cent. It may be the means of compelling some future legislature, when making appropriations, to look to this constitutional demand upon the public treasury.

The yeas and nays were called for on the amendment, and being taken, were—yeas 34, nays 57:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, William Chennault, Jesse Coffey, Archibald Dixon, Selucius Garfield, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Martin P. Marshall, John H. McHenry, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John D. Taylor, Henry Washington, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—34.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Jas. H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, Andrew Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thos. James, William Johnson, Geo. W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Geo. W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, James M. Nesbitt, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Alber G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—57.

So the section was rejected.

The thirty second section of the report, which is now the thirty third, was next read as follows:

"SEC. 32. The general assembly may contract debts to meet casual deficits or failures in the revenue, or for expenses not provided for, but such debts, direct or contingent, singly or in the aggregate, shall not at any time exceed five hundred thousand dollars; and the moneys, arising from loans creating such debts, shall be applied to the purposes for which they were obtained, or to re-pay such debts: Provided, that the state may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, or, if hostilities are threatened, provide for the public defence."

To this section there was a pending amendment to strike out the words "or for expenses not provided for."

Mr. MACHEN. It seems to me sir, that there is no use in making this change in the section. I am as fully in favor of restricting the legislature in its powers of contracting debt, as any man on this floor; but it appears to me that there may be occasions when extraordinary revenue may be required, so that it would in my opinion be advisable to allow this section to remain as it is. Many gentlemen appear to think that $50,- 000 would be a sufficient amount of extra taxation, with which to invest the legislature; others say $100,000, and others more, as coming under the words "expenses not provided for." I am for as little as appears necessary to meet the case; but gentlemen will know that there are incidental expenses which spring up in governments which cannot be anticipated at all times. The small sum of $50,000 may be thought sufficient by some, but if you go back into the history of Kentucky for a few years you will readily see how circumstances may spring up rendering it necessary to go to the amount of $500,000.

From 1839 to 1843 the valuation of the property of the state was reduced by commercial convulsions seventy seven millions of dollars. Such an emergency may arise again, and be of such a character as to deprive the treasury of one half of its ordinary revenue. In what condition would the state be placed should this misfortune befall us, and the restriction be limited to meet the views of those who think $50,000 would be as far as the legislature should go in borrowing? Repudiation is to be the result.

Some will say it is time enough to call the legislature to meet contingencies when they have arisen. There I differ; for in my opinion that is just the time when it may be too late—too late either to call the legislature or to levy a tax to meet these requirements. For these reasons, sir, I think there is no necessity for changing the section; but that we will best consult the interests of the state by permitting it to remain as it is.

Mr. PRESTON. I think the observation of the gentleman from Caldwell so good, that it needs no recommendation. The words are distinct—intelligible—there is no ambiguity about them—"expenses not provided for." You have now tied up the sinking fund by this morning's vote. Suppose the locks and dams of the river here were destroyed; you have no power to borrow money to relieve the embarrassment in which the state would, by such a casualty, find herself. Imagine the case of your capitol being burned down, a similar difficulty would occur. The words "or other expenses," were intended to give that very latitude which the gentleman must deem necessary to give the right to contract a debt of half a million of dollars if the popular necessities appear to demand it. That was the effect of that provision; if you strike it out you embarrass the state. If I had to vote either way, I would rather do without both the thirty-second and thirty-third sections, than omit the words suggested; for if you strike them out, you certainly destroy the effect of both of these sections. The city of Louisville alone has a revenue which amounts to nearly half a million of dollars annually; the city of New York pays nearly that amount for cleaning her streets; Boston expends more than half a million annually for her city expenses, and we are here to restrict the state of Kentucky, and we repose so little confidence in her legislature as to deny her the paltry power to contract a debt of half a million, or to repose that amount of confidence in her sovereign legislature. I hope these words will not be stricken out; if they are, you will mutilate the section so as to render it entirely inoperative. We have now not only taken the sinking fund from under the control of the legislature, but we have decided that $50,000 from the surplus revenue, shall annually be applied to the payment of the public debt. Casualties may arise, and in such case from three to four years must elapse before any provision can be made for their repair. In 1839, we were in such a state of embarrassment that we were compelled to borrow from the banks $267,000. What would have been the effect if this feature had been in the constitution of 1799? Repudiation and disgrace. There are a hundred reasons why this margin should be left with the legislature; and I hope that no personal differences of opinion, no little spirit of parsimony will prevail on this floor, on such a subject as this. I hope by our vote on this question we will at least say that the people of the commonwealth of Kentucky can afford to repose discretion in their legislature, to redeem the honor of their state, as its emergencies might require. Impose this restriction, and you will find that in five or six years an impulse will have sprung up under the influence of wealth and growing prosperity that will call for another constitution. In five or six years the people under the influence of those hopes which always exist and expand with wealth, may require and induce us to embark in schemes of internal improvement; pass restrictions of an extreme character, and you may depend upon it that before five or six years have elapsed, you will be called upon to reconsider this work which you are here to perform to-day.

Look at Virginia. What did she do last year? At the last session of her legislature she was influenced by the prosperity of Kentucky and Georgia—two sister slave states—to contract a debt of some four millions to invest in the Parkersburgh railroad, and in perfecting the communication between the waters of the Kanawha and James rivers.

I merely mention this to show that there is an alteration in the public mind—an alteration which is certain to exist in the minds of the people of this state, as our wealth, resources, and population advance; and when it comes, woe be to this constitution, if we so cripple the will of the people that we cannot accomplish their wishes. Pass this restriction, and what do we say to the people of Kentucky? Why, that "we are making you a constitution for—how long?—five years to come?" No! A constitution, sir, is a thing that should be made for ages, if made as it ought to be. It is the embodiment of the great principles lying at the foundation of society, which should be disturbed as seldom as possible. We are making this constitution, as we hope, to continue not only when we are in our graves, but when many generations after us shall have followed us thither. Are we then to assume that this convention alone are the true representatives of the people—a better index of the wishes of a generation which will exist when we are all dead, than the representatives of their own choice—their own day, and their own generation? As well indeed might we say that the convention of 1799 was a convention that had a right to control our privileges in all time to come, and that they were the true representatives of the people, instead of ourselves or the legislature of the state.

I merely ask gentlemen to use some discretion; I ask them not to stigmatize the state by saying that they shall have no power in all time to come; I ask them not to deprive the state of that self-control which belongs to all truly and well organized bodies.

Sir, I am as anxious as any gentleman in this house to restrict, in a wholesome manner, the exercise of this debt-contracting power; but we may urge it too far; and I feel it my duty to warn you, as far as I am able, and to entreat that we should not be governed by a parsimony so odious. For fifty years we have enjoyed this right. The federal government has no check upon it. Most of the states have no check upon it; and now, when we propose to take away from the legislature of the state of Kentucky the power of contracting debt, and leave them the pittance of half a million as a maximum for which they may contract debt, we are told that it is an extravagant sum. One moment's reflection must convince every gentleman that it is not so.

I hope therefore, that as unforeseen difficulties may arise to depress the public business of my native state, the convention will leave to the legislature the exercise of such discretionary power as will in some measure seem likely to meet the case, and that, at all events, they will not attempt to lay any restriction on the amount proposed in this section. I have said thus much, but I of course feel bound to abide by the decision of the convention in the matter.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. Most of the remarks of the gentleman from Louisville, seem to be made in reference to his own work—the thirty third section. He proposes not to trust the future legislature with the power of borrowing money without consulting the people, before the contract is made.

If he has convinced himself that that section is wrong, I hope he will move to strike it from the article of the constitution. The amendment under consideration has been denounced by the honorable member, as being the result of parsimonious feelings and opinions. Whatever may be its form or its character, it does not change the nature or effect of the amendment. It is by speeches of the kind we have just heard, that the pride of members of the legislature is sometimes excited; and the immense appropriations of which we have recently heard in this and other states, have been inconsiderately obtained. The gentleman provides in this section, that the legislature may create a debt not exceeding $500,000 without the provision of the condition annexed to the succeeding section, rendering it necessary to submit such a proposition to the people, for their approval. I for one, would be willing to leave the power of creating a debt in the hands of any future legislature, if you will just retain the section—or rather I would say, make a provision in the section, to the effect that in such case, the legislature shall provide the means of paying both principal and interest. That is as much guaranty as I want upon the subject of creating debt. The gentleman from Louisville, however goes further; he proposes in the thirty third section, that independent of that guaranty, a bill shall be submitted to the people at the regular elections to vote upon. Now, I will go with him if he will adhere to his original proposition to give an additional guaranty, or I will vote for the section if that guaranty is stricken out and the one which I offer is retained. But what is this section? The gentleman tells us it is to meet the demands of the ordinary expenses of the government, arising from a deficit of the revenue. That is the language; and he proposes to borrow not exceeding $500,000 to meet such deficit. Yesterday, when I moved to strike out $500,000 and substitute a smaller sum, it was said that the thirty third section was an ample restriction; and upon looking at the section, and hearing the explanation, I find that the section means "you are not to exceed $500,000 without consulting the people."

But there are, in that section, the words which I propose to strike out, the power given to the legislature to borrow or to create a debt of $500,000 when the necessities of the country don't require it; and that is power I don't intend to grant, unless the gentleman will put into the section some guaranty that when they borrow money they will provide the means to pay both the principal and interest.

Now, I will put a case to the gentleman, and to the member from Logan. Under this section, would it not be in the power of the legislature to create a demand for $500,000 in the Russellville Bank. Suppose this to be the case. We now see a spirit of enterprise going on in railroads and turnpike roads; suppose the legislature should think proper to create a demand for $500,000 or even $250,000, to aid a company in constructing one or other of such enterprises; would they not have the power, under this section, containing the words which I propose to strike out? Unquestionably in my view they would, and it is to avoid this concealed power, which is still left, and which I wish to destroy, that I propose to strike out these words. Without detaining this convention, therefore, I put it to the gentleman who has just addressed the convention—supposing I am understood—I put it to him to answer, whether—taking the section as it now stands—whether the legislature would not have power to take $500,000 stock in the Ohio and Lexington railroad, and borrow the money on the faith of the state to pay for it? That is my question.

Mr. PRESTON. I certainly regard that, under the words "or for expenses not provided for," there is an absolute discretionary power given to the legislature to contract a debt, not at any time over $500,000, and that when that debt is paid off, it has the power to re-contract another debt; and so on as emergencies may dictate; but the utmost extent to which the legislature can encumber the people of Kentucky is $500,000.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If I am correct, sir, it is proposed to invest the legislature with the power of appropriating half a million for any purpose they may deem expedient; it may be in bank stock, or railroad stock, or any other stock. Is it the intention of the convention to pass such a section as this without putting some restriction upon it, or to grant this power without any restriction at all?

Mr. CLARKE. I am satisfied, Mr. President, after an examination of the section, that the words, "or for expenses not provided for," should be stricken out. So far as I know the sense of the committee, and those with whom I have conversed upon the subject, it never was intended that that power should be so construed as to confer upon the legislature the right to contract a debt even of $100,000, much less of $500,000, by taking stock in banks, or railroad companies, or for constructing locks or dams, which may be destroyed by casualty; and if it were the opinion of that committee that we were conferring any such power, I confess, for one, I did not understand it; and if that be its meaning, I am decidedly opposed to it. I would have gone for the resolution proposed this morning by the gentleman from Hopkins, but for two reasons. I would have voted for that resolution, except that the improvements referred to were made with the consent of the whole people of the state; and whether that consent was obtained by holding out false promises or not, they did consent to it, and I suppose each division of the state is willing to pay its proportionable part of the expenses. There was a second reason why I did not vote for the resolution, and it was this: if I were to vote for the resolution in its present shape, the improvements of the country might go to destruction; but I now state that, if the improvements upon the Green and Kentucky rivers are not sufficient to sustain themselves by the amount of dividends that accrue from the different locks and dams upon those rivers, and by those who are mainly benefitted by them—I say, in such case, I am opposed to sustaining these improvements at the expense of the people of the whole state. There are those in the house who would have voted for this resolution; but I for one could not, if it is intended to tax the whole people for these locks and dams, because the whole people are not benefitted by them.

Now, if there exists a power in this section to confer upon the legislature the power of borrowing money for the repairs of locks and dams on these rivers, I am opposed to it; and you may bring up the question at any future time, I shall still be opposed to it. Suppose, for instance, the locks or dams were destroyed within ten miles of this city, who is injured? Some nine or ten counties on the banks of the river; and if they who are reaping all the benefits of the river and its improvements, don't go to work and repair the injury, it shall not be with my consent that the whole people shall be taxed for that which is merely a local benefit; and, in stating this much, I am convinced that I state nothing but what is the universal feeling of the whole people I have the honor to represent.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. CLARKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were taken, and were yeas 51, nays 42:

YEAS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, James S. Crisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Thomas James, William Johnson, Charles C. Kelly, Jas. M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—51.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—42.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CHRISMAN enquired if it would now be in order to move to strike out $500,000, and insert a smaller sum.

The PRESIDENT replied that it would not, as the main question had been ordered.

Mr. PRESTON called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section, and being taken, they were—yeas 63, nays 31.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—62.

NAYS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, Alexander K. Marshall

Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—31.

So the section was adopted.

The thirty third section (now the thirty fourth) was next read, as follows:

"Sec. 33. No act of the general assembly shall authorize any debt to be contracted on behalf of the commonwealth, except for the purposes mentioned in the thirty second section of this article, unless provision be made therein to lay and collect an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest stipulated, and to discharge the debt within years; nor shall such act take effect until it shall have been submitted to the people at a general election, and shall have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it."

Mr. TURNER moved to amend the section by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That the general assembly may contract debts without submission to the people, by borrowing money to pay any part of the public debt of the state, and without making provision in the act authorizing the same, for a tax to discharge the debt so contracted, or the interest thereon."

Pending this amendment, on the motion of Mr. MITCHELL, the convention took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. TURNER, by yeas and nays, and it was agreed to—yeas 51, nays 30.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Jonathan Mewcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—51.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, John Hargis, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, John Wheeler—30.

The blank in the section was filled up with the word "thirty," as the number of years within which the debt should be discharged.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved to amend the section by striking out the words "except for the purposes mentioned in the thirty second section of this article."

After a few words from Mr. PRESTON and Mr. A. K. MARSHALL, the amendment was rejected.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the section, as amended.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were, yeas 73, nays 15.

YEAS—John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, L. Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Tho. D. Brown, Wm. C. Bullitt, Chas. Chambers, Jas. S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thos. James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Jno. H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Henry Washington, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Geo. W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—73.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William Chenault, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas W. Lisle, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Elijah F. Nuttall, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Silas Woodson—15.

So the section was adopted.

Mr. CLARKE and Mr. A. K. MARSHALL asked and obtained leave to record their votes on the amendment of Mr. TURNER, on which the question was taken in their absence.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to reconsider the vote just passed. If it should be reconsidered, I shall offer an amendment to the clause. I am opposed to this mode of saying whether any law shall become a law of the land or not. I believe it is not congenial with the genius of a representative government, that such proceedings should take place. I believe on that subject, and on all other subjects, that representatives ought to speak fairly and fully the wishes of those whom they represent. But the idea of a convention authorizing a law for any particular subject, to be submitted to the people, to be passed upon by them by their popular vote, is, to my mind, perfectly incompatible with representative government. Now, I am opposed to a bare majority of the legislature creating a public debt in the future. That power has been impropvidently exercised in this state, but not so much as in some others. But I think we have had enough experience in our own commonwealth, and certainly know enough of that of others, to admonish us to guard that power with a little more care than it has existed under the present constitution. If this motion shall prevail, and the question be reconsidered, of which I have no expectation, I will then move to amend that clause so that it shall require the concurrence of two thirds of both houses of the legislature before any debt shall be created. I think that would be a sufficient guard. I believe that whenever two thirds of the legislature of Kentucky shall solemnly decide it is necessary to create a public debt, that the people will acquiesce. And I do not believe that two thirds of both branches would concur in creating a debt for the state unless the public interest and the public will imperiously demand it. It would be more congenial to our system and to the mode by which the popular will is to be expressed and carried out in the legislature, that that plan should be adopted, rather than that any law should be submitted directly to the people for their acceptance or rejection. I see no reason why this particular subject should be submitted any more than a hundred others of equal importance that I could name. But I do not think such a submission should be made. I know that the expression of such an opinion may be perverted and made to receive the popular disfavor. It is a step about which prejudice may be unjustly and untruthfully made to arise in relation to a man. But, humble as I am, I am willing to submit myself to that consequence, or any other consequence that may meet me in a proper and conscientious discharge of my duty on this floor. I do not believe that that mode of checking the legislature, ought to be introduced by the convention. I do not believe the people have demanded such a check. I do not believe that this convention has been instructed to depart from the great representative principle in our system of government. I believe that an ordinary investment of power is liable to abuse, and it should be guarded against. And I believe it would be more congenial with, and more consonant to their judgment, that two thirds should concur in a law for the creation of a debt before it should be passed. I moved to change my vote, in order to afford me an opportunity to express my sentiments, regretting I had not done it before.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to—ayes 37, noes 40.

Mr. PRESTON offered the following as an additional section:

"The power of the cities and towns of this commonwealth, to contract debts, lend their credit, or impose taxes, shall be prescribed from time to time by general laws; and no special law authorizing cities or towns to contract debts, lend their credit, or impose additional taxes to those permitted by the general laws, shall hereafter be enacted, unless provision shall in the same act be made, to levy a tax sufficient to pay the interest stipulated, and extinguish the debt itself in such time as may be directed by law: nor shall such act take effect, until it shall have been submitted to the qualified voters of the city or town to be taxed, under such regulations as the general assembly may prescribe, and shall have received three-fifths of the votes of the qualified voters of the city or town to be taxed: nor shall such tax be repealed until the debt is extinguished."

Mr. MERIWETHER. My friend has embraced the words taxing by counties. I doubt whether the taxes are the same for any two years in a county. I would suggest to strike out the word "special" and insert "but by a general law."

Mr. PRESTON. My object is to require any special law for the benefit of any city or town, which involves expense for internal improvements, to be first submitted to the people of those cities, towns, or counties. This requires that a majority of three-fifths of the people shall be obtained. This was thought the best restriction which we can place upon the power of special legislation in this case.

Mr. IRWIN. I have no objections, if that is made to apply to cities only, but it is a principle which would not be recognized by my constituents.

Mr. TURNER. The difficulty in my county has been to get the people to come up to a system of internal improvement. There is no desire and no necessity for such a restriction in my county. So far as it applies to Louisville I have no objection; but I want old Madison taken out from under this part of the constitution. You will have according to this, a general law passed requiring three-fifths to vote a tax, if I understand it.

Mr. PRESTON. On special taxes.

Mr. TURNER. There has been no complaint about special laws and special taxes; the great difficulty has been to get the people to come up and open their purses a little more. I think we are making restriction upon restriction, which appear not to be needed by the people in my section, and I move to strike out the word "counties."

Mr. PRESTON. I have no objection to the word counties being stricken out, though I think a moment's consideration will convince the house that it may be best to apply to them. Special legislation has been a growing evil upon the country. An inspection of the resolution will show that it does not prevent those works of improvement in counties which the gentleman wishes to see completed, but simply that whenever a law is made different from the general law of the state, where it prescribes a rule for one county and another for a different county, one for one city or town, and another for a different city or town, that such special law shall be submitted to the people upon whom it is to operate. Special laws are an abhorrence to legislation, and I believe we should insert "three-fifths," and make no exception to the general law without that majority. This does not prevent undertaking a work which may be for the benefit of the public, but authorizes a restriction against persons coming up here and log-rolling to obtain the passage of special laws, rather for individual than public benefit.

We wish to provide that where the tax affects only a single community, and not the whole state, this restriction shall operate, and not till then. The gentleman inquires respecting the burdens and expenses of cities. I can tell him that in the city of Louisville, with a population of about fifty thousand, these public expenses are nearly as great as in the whole state besides. They amount to some $400,000 annually. One half of this, it is true, is for special taxation for works which we have begun, and with which we are willing to go through; but we ask, that whenever a great debt is to be saddled on us and our posterity, we may have our attention called to it, instead of allowing two or three gentlemen to involve us in this great public debt without the people knowing any thing about it. I believe it will be equally wise, for a county, where it is to contract a debt. I believe it will be equally right and proper in such case to submit it to the people of the county first. That is the ground we go upon. If the gentleman moves to strike out the word "counties," it is a matter of indifference, so far as the constituency I have the honor to represent is concerned.

Mr. TURNER. At present no tax can be laid on a county, without a special act of legislation, and a special act is never applied for unless the representatives of the county consent to it; and they are skittish in doing this, unless they know the people demand it.

The county of Bourbon is attempting to get a road to run to the Kentucky river. If Bourbon petitions to levy a tax to do this, shall she not have the power to do so? Madison has never come up sufficiently to the work of internal improvement; but I hope the time will come when she will do so, and when we may get about upon improved roads, which are now often in a condition which renders traveling dangerous. The state is not going into county improvements, and if you require a majority of three-fifths you will be throwing the country back, and throwing us into the wind for generations to come; whereas, every enlightened man knows, that if these improvements are made, the value of property will be enhanced tenfold; and not only that, but all the enjoyments of social life will be greatly increased.

I appeal to any gentleman to tell me whether there has ever been an abuse of this power, and whether a tax has ever been laid upon a county, unless a majority desired it. We in the country do not create a great debt to bind our children and grand children. If we make a debt, we go about paying it at once.

Mr. DAVIS. I think laws of the character indicated by that provision can sometimes be passed with advantage to particular sections of the state. Such laws ought to have prudent and sufficient guards thrown around them, and I do not believe they ought to be passed without the concurrence, and the full and free consent of the people of the county whom they affect. There are laws of that kind in some of the counties. We have two in the county of Bourbon. Our county court has appropriated and expended upon two of our roads, $5,000 each, to aid private companies in McAdamizing them. They have appropriated altogether, $19,000 on account of roads which are in course of construction. And the section of the county through which these roads pass have it in contemplation to McAdamize them also, and they will expect the same assistance as the roads to which I have referred have received. I do not think it would be just to the portions of the county of Bourbon, which have not yet undertaken this improvement, that a three-fifths vote of the people of the county should be required to authorize the county court, or any other tribunal, to subscribe to those roads which may hereafter be commenced.

In some form I think the question ought to be submitted to the people of each county, whether they are willing to submit to be taxed for the construction of McAdamised roads. I do not believe that in the interior of the state, particularly, three fifths should be required in order to determine whether such a tax should be imposed. On the contrary, I believe that a majority should be competent to decide that question and establish the policy of McAdamizing the great leading roads in any county. Situated as my county is, I believe the proposition of the gentleman from Louisville might work some injustice to a portion of my constituents, as it might the constituents of any member of this body, who are in the same condition as a portion of the people of Bourbon. Now, with a view to have justice done them, and at the same time prevent the abuse of power, I think the provision I have suggested, or something of the kind, would be quite sufficient.

The question was then taken, and the word "counties" was stricken out, so that the provision applies only to towns and cities.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to add the following words as a proviso "but the provision shall not apply to the town of Henderson."

After some conversation Mr. DIXON withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. If anything is going to defeat this constitution it is going so much into detail; and if we progress as we have for the last five days, I shall begin to loose all hopes that the people will approve our work. My people have derived as little benefit from the public treasury as any portion of the state, however much they may have contributed to it. We have lately attempted to do, what the state has been unwilling to do, for us—to open a railroad between the middle and northern portion of the state, which will tend to aggrandize the whole commonwealth. We have a law, by which, if the majority think proper, they may subscribe for a great railroad to connect Lexington and Covington. A principle is about to be engrafted upon the constitution that no law shall be passed here unless three fifths shall vote for it. It seems to me to be uncalled for. I can see no good to which it will lead, and I think I can see great harm.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I move to strike out the word "towns."

Mr. PRESTON. It seems to me the convention are under the impression that this proposition is different in its tenor from what it is. The constitution asserts that taxation shall be equal and uniform in this commonwealth, and yet we violate the principle by permitting special taxation, and allowing municipalities unrestrained power when the state is restrained.

The gentleman from Kenton may be interested in internal improvements, but not more so than the city I have the honor to represent. I think

I understand as clearly as he can the necessity of placing some curb upon the cities and towns, to contract heavy debts, against the will of the people; some restriction, in order to prevent them from running into extravagance. Shall we say to the people of Kentucky, after the solemn act of this morning, you shall not go into debt beyond the amount of $500,000, and yet give some great municipality the power to do so to the extent of millions. Is it unwise that three fifths shall act upon it, and if not three fifths, would it not be well to impose a check, such as is proposed by the gentleman from Bourbon? The power of taxation has been exercised in some cities to an enormous extent, and it will be in every growing city under the present system of internal improvements which are springing up. I believe the method proposed is a healthy way to get at public sentiment before taxes are laid. I know my friend and colleague, (Mr. Rudd,) who had the honor of originating this measure, and who has served ten or fifteen years in the councils of the city of Louisville, could give ample evidence, and is far more able than myself to show the necessity of engrafting this feature on the constitution.

Mr. RUDD next addressed the convention, and entered into a minute detail of the expenditures incurred by the city of Louisville, for many years past, on account of her numerous and costly public improvements, which had yearly entailed upon her a large debt which was still unpaid. He hoped the amendment of his colleague would prevail, as it was high time some restrictions should be placed upon the municipal authorities of our cities and towns to prevent them from involving the people in debt.

Mr. ROOT moved the previous question, which was sustained.

The motion to strike out the word towns was adopted, and the section was confined to cities.

Mr. PRESTON asked leave to withdraw his amendment, which was granted.

The convention then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. LANCASTER.

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE.

The PRESIDENT appointed the following as the committee to prepare an address to the people of Kentucky, under the resolution submitted a few days since by Mr. CLARKE: Messrs. Clarke, C. A. Wickliffe, Apperson, Dixon, and Taylor.

REPRINTING AMENDED ARTICLES.

Mr. McHENRY moved the following resolution, and it was adopted after a brief explanation of its necessity to enable the committee of revision and arrangement satisfactorily to discharge its duty:

"Resolved, That when changes are made in any report, and the same is adopted by the convention in a form different from the printed report, the same shall be reprinted as adopted by the convention, and the usual number of copies furnished."

COMMITTEE ON APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. APPERSON offered the following resolution, and it was adopted:

"Resolved, That the committee on apportionment of representation have leave to sit during the sessions of the convention."

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KAVANAUGH moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the following was adopted as a section of the article on the legislative department:

"No law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title, but in such case, the act revised, or section amended, shall be re-enacted and published at length."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KAVANAUGH said he saw no good to be accomplished by retaining this section, whereas it would occasion a heavy expenditure to the government.

After a brief conversation in which Mr. BROWN, Mr. McHENRY, and others participated, the section was rejected.

THE WILMOT PROVISIO.

Mr. KELLY submitted the following preamble and resolutions, which he wished to be postponed and printed:

"Whereas, the rights of life and liberty are natural, inherent, and inalienable; and whereas, the right of property is intrinsically necessary to the full and complete enjoyment of them; and whereas, the right of property—being secondary only to those of life and liberty—exists prior to government and independent thereof, and government is only framed to protect and secure those rights, which a free people can never surrender without becoming slaves; and whereas, some of the northern states of this confederacy have, from the year 1816 up to the present time, made war, unjustifiably and unworthily, upon the rights of property, as secured by the laws, organic and legislative, of the United States and of the several southern states, and thereby have, to some extent, made the tenure of property in slaves insecure; and whereas, it is the deliberate sense of the people of Kentucky, expressed by this convention, that congress has no power to interfere with the slave institutions of the District of Columbia, or of the territories:

"1. Resolved, That the passage of the Wilmot proviso, by congress, as a part of any bill to organize a state or territory, would be a direct and flagrant invasion of the rights of the south—a violation of the true principles of the federal compact—a submission to which would dishonor the ancient fame of this great commonwealth, and be fruitful of disgrace to the national councils

"2. Resolved, That while, by the will of the free people of Kentucky, slavery exists within her borders, and while it exists in any other state of this union, the right of the citizen of this state to purchase in that, and bring to this, for his own use, slaves, can never rightly, and shall never, be abridged."

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL moved to lay them on the table, for the present.

Mr. CLARKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 51, nays 38:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thos. J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—51.

NAYS—Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Wm. D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe—38.

So the preamble and resolutions were laid on the table.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE moved a reconsideration of the vote adopting the following section of the report on the legislative department:

"SEC. 16. The general assembly shall convene on the first Monday in November, after the adoption of this constitution, and on the same day of every second year, unless a different day be appointed by law, and their session shall be held at the seat of government; but if the public welfare require, the governor may call a special session."

He stated his object to be, to move to amend the section by substituting the second Monday of January, for the day fixed in the section, as it now stands.

The rule which requires a motion to reconsider to lie over one day was dispensed with, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE then moved to amend as indicated.

Mr. JAMES moved to amend the amendment, by substituting the first Monday of January.

On these amendments a conversation ensued, in which Messrs. C. A. WICKLIFFE, JAMES, IRWIN, BARLOW, MACHEN, GARRARD, KAVANAUGH, and others, took part.

The motion to strike out the second and insert the first Monday of January, was negatived, by a majority of 39 to 33.

Mr. KAVANAUGH moved to postpone the further consideration of the subject, for the present.

The motion was not agreed to.

The amendment submitted by Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE was also rejected, and the section was again adopted.

THE MILITIA.

The convention proceeded to the consideration of the report from the committee on the militia:

"ARTICLE —.

"SEC. 1. The militia of this commonwealth shall consist of all free, able-bodied male persons (negroes, mulattoes, and Indians excepted,) resident in the same, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years; except such persons as now are, or hereafter may be, exempted by the laws of the United States or of this state; but those who belong to religious societies whose tenets forbid them to carry arms, shall not be compelled to do so, but shall pay an equivalent for personal services.

"SEC. 2. The governor shall appoint the adjutant general, and his other staff officers; the majors general, brigadiers general, and commandants of regiments, shall, respectively, appoint their staff officers; and commandants of companies shall appoint their non-commissioned officers.

"SEC. 3. All other militia officers shall be elected by persons subject to military duty, within the bounds of their respective companies, battalions, regiments, brigades, and divisions, under such rules and regulations as the legislature may, from time to time, direct and establish."

The first and second sections were considered and adopted, without amendment.

The third section was amended, on the motion of Mr. McHENRY, by inserting the words, "and for such term," after the word "regulations."

The section, as amended, was adopted.

IMPEACHMENTS.

The convention proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on miscellaneous provisions, concerning impeachments, as follows:

"ARTICLE —.

"CONCERNING IMPEACHMENTS.

"SEC. 1. The house of representatives shall have the sole power of impeachments.

"SEC. 2. All impeachments shall be tried by the senate. When sitting for that purpose, the senators shall be upon oath or affirmation. No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

"SEC. 3. The governor, and all civil officers, shall be liable to impeachment for any misdemeanor in office; but judgment, in such cases, shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit, under this commonwealth; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be subject and liable to indictment, trial, and punishment by law."

The sections were considered, seriatim, and were adopted, with a mere verbal amendment of the third section.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The convention next proceeded to the consideration of another report of the same committee, on general provisions.

The first section was read as follows:

"SEC. 1. Members of the general assembly, and all officers, executive and judicial, before they enter upon the execution of their respective offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: I do solemnly swear, (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will be faithful and true to the Commonwealth of Kentucky, so long as I continue a citizen thereof, and that I will faithfully execute, to the best of my abilities, the office of _____ according to law, and that I have neither directly nor indirectly, given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge, to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, since the adoption of the present constitution of Kentucky, and that I will neither directly nor indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, during my continuance in office."

On motion, the further consideration of this section was postponed for the present.

The second section was read and adopted, as follows:

"SEC. 2. Treason against the commonwealth shall consist only in levying war against it, or in adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason, unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or his own confession in open court."

The third section was read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Every person shall be disqualified from holding any office of trust and profit for the term for which he shall have been elected, who shall be convicted of having given or offered any bribe or treat to procure his election."

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved to strike out the words "or treat."

Mr. McHENRY defended the section as it stood.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL was unwilling to retain that in the section by the solemn adoption of this convention, which was contradicted by their uniform practice.

Mr. HARGIS was of opinion that the words ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MAYES called the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the section only applied to treating for a particular purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD called for the yeas and nays on striking out.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL withdrew his amendment.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL renewed it.

The yeas and nays were then taken, and were, yeas 18, nays 69.

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, William C. Bullitt, William Cowper, Nathan Gaither, Charles C. Kelly, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Hugh Newell, Elijah

F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, Michael L. Stoner, Howard Todd, John Wheeler—18.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—69.

So the convention refused to strike out.

Mr. HARGIS moved to strike out the entire section.

The motion was rejected.

On the motion of Mr. McHENRY, the section was verbally amended by substituting the word "or" for "and," between the words "trust" and "profit."

The section was then adopted.

The fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth sections were adopted without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 4. Laws shall be made to exclude from office and from suffrage, those who shall thereafter be convicted of bribery, perjury, forgery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors. The privilege of free suffrage shall be supported by laws regulating elections, and prohibiting, under adequate penalties, all undue influence thereon from power, bribery, tumult, or other improper practices."

"SEC. 5. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of appropriations made by law, nor shall any appropriations of money for the support of an army be made for a longer time than two years, and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published annually."

"SEC. 6. The general assembly may direct, by law, in what manner, and in what courts, suits may be brought against the commonwealth."

"SEC. 7. The manner of administering an oath or affirmation, shall be such as is most consistent with the conscience of the deponent, and shall be esteemed by the general assembly the most solemn appeal to God."

"SEC. 8. All laws which, on the first day of June, one thousand seven hundred and ninety two, were in force in the State of Virginia, and which are of a general nature, and not local to that state, and not repugnant to this constitution, nor to the laws which have been enacted by the legislature of this commonwealth, shall be in force within this state, until they shall be altered or repealed by the general assembly.

"Sec. 9. The compact with the State of Virginia, subject to such alterations as may be made therein agreeably to the mode prescribed by the said compact, shall be considered as part of this constitution.

"Sec. 10. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass such laws as shall be necessary and proper to decide differences by arbitrators, to be appointed by the parties who may choose that summary mode of adjustment.

"Sec. 11. All civil officers for the commonwealth at large, shall reside within the state, and all district, county, or town officers, within their respective districts, counties, or towns, (trustees of towns excepted) and shall keep their respective offices at such places therein as may be required by law, and all militia officers shall reside in the bounds of the division, brigade, regiment, battalion, or company, to which they may severally belong.

"Sec. 12. Absence on the business of this state, or the United States, shall not forfeit a residence once obtained, so as to deprive any one of the right of suffrage, or of being elected or appointed to any office under this commonwealth, under the exceptions contained in this constitution.

"Sec. 13. It shall be the duty of the general assembly to regulate, by law, in what cases, and what deductions from the salaries of public officers shall be made, for neglect of duty in their official capacity."

The fourteenth section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 14. Returns of all elections by the people shall be made to the secretary of state for the time being, except in those cases otherwise provided for in this constitution."

Mr. MITCHELL thought it unnecessary to make returns of all elections of officers, down to magistrates and constables, to the secretary of state, and therefore he moved to strike out the section.

Mr. McHENRY had no expectation that the election of the officers mentioned by the gentleman from Oldham, would be returned to the office of the secretary of state; but if the section were stricken out, there would be no provision made for returning officially the result of the elections by the people at large.

Mr. MITCHELL said, if all the officers elected by the people were to be commissioned by the governor, there would be some propriety in the provision, but he saw none at present.

After a few words from Mr. STEVENSON and Mr. TURNER, the motion to strike out was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The fifteenth section was next read as follows:

"Sec. 15. In all elections by the people, and also by the senate and house of representatives, jointly or separately, the votes shall be personally and publicly given, viva voce."

Mr. PRESTON moved to amend, by adding the words "or in such manner as may be prescribed by law." On this amendment he moved the previous question, and called for the yeas and nays.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

The yeas and nays were taken on the amendment, and were yeas 22, nays 68.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Francis M. Bristow, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Ira Root, James Rudd, Howard Todd, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe—22.

NAYS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, Geo. W. Johnston, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Procter, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOYD moved to amend by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That dumb persons entitled to franchise may vote by ballot."

Mr. MITCHELL moved to amend the amendment, by adding the following:

"Provided further, That the legislature may, upon the petition of any city or county of this commonwealth, authorize the voters of such city or county to vote by ballot."

Mr. STEVENSON inquired how it would be possible to carry out such a provision in practice. How, he inquired, were the votes to be returned, if half or three fourths should vote by ballot, and the rest viva voce.

Mr. MITCHELL saw no difficulty; but the regulations that would be necessary he would leave to the legislature.

The vote on the amendment to the amendment was taken by yeas and nays, and were yeas 9, nays 83.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William Cowper, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Richard D. Gholson, William D. Mitchell, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Ira Root, James Rudd—9.

Nars—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristol, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copein, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—83.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOYD'S amendment was then agreed to, and the section as amended was adopted.

The sixteenth section was next read:

"Sec. 16. No member of congress, nor person holding or exercising any office of trust or profit under the United States, or either of them, or under any foreign power, shall be eligible as a member of the general assembly of this commonwealth, or hold or exercise any office of trust or profit under the same."

Mr. MERIWETHER moved to insert the word "appointment" for the purpose of including persons to whom the words "holding or exercising any office of trust or profit" would not apply. He said there were mail agents, pension agents, and others who should be embraced in the section.

Mr. HARDIN said if the amendment were agreed to, any person "appointed" to conduct a suit for the government in the United States courts, or to assess damages, would be excluded by it.

The amendment was rejected by a vote of 37 to 31.

The section was then adopted.

The seventeenth section was then read and adopted, as follows:

"Sec. 17. The general assembly shall direct, by law, how persons who now are, or may hereafter become, securities for public officers, may be relieved or discharged on account of such securityship."

The eighteenth section was next read:

"Sec. 18. Any person who shall, after the adoption of this constitution, either directly or indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person, or persons, to fight in single combat, or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, shall be deprived of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in this commonwealth, and shall be punished otherwise in such manner as the legislature may prescribe by law."

Mr. BULLITT said, before that section was adopted, he wished to give the reasons which would influence his vote upon it.

Mr. NUTTALL said he had some notes on this subject which he desired to use in some brief remarks upon this section, but as he had them not at hand now, he moved that the section be passed over for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY moved to add to the article the following additional sections:

"Sec. 19. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this state. All property, on which taxes may be levied, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law. No one species of property shall be taxed higher than another species of equal value: Provided, The general assembly shall have power to tax merchants, brokers, hawkers, pedlars, shows, theatrical performances, law process, seals, deeds, licenses, stocks, playing cards, corporations, and privileges, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law."

"Sec. 20. The general assembly shall have power to authorize the several counties, and incorporated cities and towns, in this state, to impose taxes for county and corporate purposes, respectively; and all property shall be taxed upon the principles established in regard to state taxation: Provided, A poll tax may be assessed for county and corporate purposes."

Mr. NUTTALL moved the following as a substitute for the sections offered by Mr. GRAY:

"The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws compelling any citizen of this commonwealth to pay taxes upon more than he, she, or they, may be intrinsically worth."

Mr. PRESTON thought those sections would be in conflict with other sections which had been adopted, by which the sinking fund was declared to be forever intact. The legislature had no power over it. It would take twenty, thirty, or forty years under the present plan to extinguish the debt, and before that was accomplished, the tax on these articles was not repealable.

Mr. GRAY did not believe that the tax on some of the articles enumerated in his sections, was appropriated to the sinking fund; but if it were, he hoped the convention would reconsider what it had done, and make such a provision as would be consistent with the sections which he had offered.

Mr. HARDIN read from the auditor's report the following list of the sources of revenue:

Tax on valuation, - - -	$409,271 59
Tax on carriages and barouches, - - -	3,207 00
Tax on buggies, - - -	1,542 50
Tax on pianos, - - -	1,540 00
Tax on gold spectacles, - - -	600 50
Tax on gold watches, - - -	5,934 00
Tax on silver levers, - - -	1,418 00
Tax on auditor's list, - - -	3,839 62
Tax on clerk's list, - - -	810 10
Total revenue, - - -	$428,163 31

He said these were large items, and hence he hoped they would maturely consider before they did anything to affect them. It would be better to postpone the subject for further consideration.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved that the subject be passed over, and that the proposed sections be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The next article in the same report was read as follows:

ARTICLE —.

"The seat of government shall continue in the town of Frankfort, until it shall be removed by law: Provided, however, That two thirds of all members elected to each house of the general assembly, shall concur in the passage of such law."

Mr. HOOD moved to strike out all after the words "the seat of government shall continue in the town of Frankfort."

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE moved to strike out "two thirds" and insert "a majority," and on that he called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE said, I make this motion, Mr. President, upon principle. I will not, by my vote, refuse to a majority of the representatives of the people to pass a law. We leave the power with a majority of both houses of the legislature to pass laws to take away the life, liberty, and property of the citizen, for crime, and deny to the same majority the power to fix, by law, the seat of government. I am unwilling to say to the freemen of this state, that though a majority of them shall desire, some twenty or thirty or fifty years hence to change the location of their seat of government, that their power to do so shall be controlled by one third.

If the present seat of government, with all the advantages which nature has blessed it; with all that art has added; the influence which the public buildings and public expenditures have given it, cannot, in opposition to any other point, command a majority of the representatives of the people in all time to come, then it is wrong that it should remain where it is by the arbitrary and absurd power of one third.

Mr. GARRARD moved the previous question.

The question was stated to be, "shall the main question be now put."

Mr. WILLIAMS moved that the roll be called, and it was called accordingly.

On ordering the main question the yeas and nays were called for, and were yeas 48, nays 45.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, Wm. Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thos. W. Lisle, Martin P. Marshall, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchill, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T.

Rogers, Ira Root, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, Jno. Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robt. N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—48.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Thos. D. Brown, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Vincent S. Hay, Thos. J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Wm. Preston, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Jno. L. Waller, C. A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—45.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

Before the vote was announced, Mr. CLARKE changed his vote, so that his name appeared with the majority. He did this for the purpose of moving a reconsideration, but it was ruled out of order by the chair.

The question was then taken on Mr. C. A. Wickliffe's amendment, and it was rejected, yeas 23, nays 70.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Benjamin Copelin, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, James Rudd, Michael L. Stoner, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Charles A. Wickliffe—23.

NAYS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Wm. N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, John H. McHenry, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robert

N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—70.

The question was next taken on Mr. Hood's amendment and it was rejected, yeas 10 nays 84.

YEAS—William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, John D. Morris, Johnson Price, John Wheeler, George W. Williams—10.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Millford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—84.

The section was adopted.

Mr. GARRARD moved a reconsideration of the vote adopting that section, and he moved to lay his motion on the table.

Mr. CLARKE said that was a double motion, and as one was debateable, he called for a division.

The President replied that the question was on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, which was not a debatable motion.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The convention then took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

BILL OF RIGHTS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on miscellaneous provisions.

The preamble of article —, or the bill of rights, was then read and adopted, as follows:

"That the general, great, and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and established: WE DECLARE."

The first section was then read and adopted, as follows:

"SEC. 1. That all freemen, when they form a social compact, are equal, and that no man, or set of men, are entitled to exclusive, separate public emoluments or privileges from the community, but in consideration of public services."

Mr. DIXON submitted the following as an additional section to the article, to come in as the second section:

"SEC. 2. That absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, (except for crimes,) exists no where in a republic—not even in the largest majority."

Mr. APPERSON moved that the proposition be passed over, and printed, in order to afford time for an examination of it.

The motion to postpone and to print was agreed to.

The second, third, and fourth sections were read and adopted, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness, security, and protection of their property. For the advancement of these ends they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish, their government, in such manner as they may think proper.

"SEC. 3. That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; that no man shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; that no human authority ought, in any case whatever, to control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and that no preference shall ever be given, by law, to any religious societies or modes of worship.

"SEC. 4. That the civil rights, privileges, or capacities, of any citizen, shall in no wise be diminished or enlarged on account of his religion."

The fifth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That all elections shall be free and equal."

Mr. ROOT enquired what was meant by free and equal elections.

Mr. STEVENSON explained that it was the language of the old constitution and was therefore adopted by the committee.

The section was adopted.

The sixth section was read, as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate."

Mr. LINDSEY. I move to add to the section the following: "But the general assembly may provide by law that juries, in civil cases, shall consist of less number than twelve, and that two thirds of a jury may find a verdict in any case either civil or criminal."

The proposition submitted for the consideration of the convention, in my judgment, ought to be adopted. It will be perceived it does not lessen or authorize the legislature to lessen the number of jurors now required in a criminal case, it only provides that a verdict may be rendered by two thirds of the jury, if the legislature shall so authorize by law.

My experience both in defence and in prosecution of criminal cases, though not very great, has satisfied me the commonwealth is not on equality with an accused. The simple fact that he may challenge twenty jurors peremptorily, gives him so many chances of escape over any there are of improper conviction. Who that has ever attended an excited criminal trial, and seen a juror sworn to answer questions, and heard him say that he had conversed with witnesses, perhaps heard the whole examining trial, and yet had no opinion as to guilt or innocence—an occurrence continually witnessed in courts, that can deny the accused has the advantage I have named. A hung jury or acquittal, through the influence and voice of such jurors, is always the case. A hung jury, in a criminal case in Kentucky, is tantamount to a verdict of not guilty. For a second trial finds the horrors of the deed forgotten. A witness gone—all sympathy for the living, though in truth a guilty felon—verdict for the accused follows.

Why shall one man's opinion and judgment, in such cases, control those of eleven, or why shall three control nine? No argument can be given, that carries any weight, in requiring unanimity except that of doubt. If you doubt you must acquit, has gone very far to aid the escape of many who merited punishment. This doubting principle operates on the whole jury, generally, by the way the law is expounded to them; and my mind is, where two thirds or three fourths have no doubts, they should control the others, though they may be doubters.

When we take into consideration the judge with his control over the verdict, if improperly formed against the accused, and the advantage, as stated before, of the twenty challenges, without any reason assigned, it does seem to me that so large a proportion of the jury as suggested, ought to be trusted with the determination of the cause, though it might involve liberty or even life.

We leave the decision of the gravest and weightiest matters in legislation to a majority. We trust the decision of whole estates to the determination of one judge sitting as chancellor. We give the accused the advantages I have stated, and by requiring two thirds to find him guilty, we again give advantages nearly two to one over the prosecution.

Sir, the experience of all must admit that the criminal code of Kentucky needs alteration in some way to check the progress of crime and punish those who commit it. Give the legislature the opportunity of placing the state on something near equality in investigation and decision with any one accused of crime. If it should be found to operate to the injury of personal security, and not promote the ends desired, we can easily fall back to the existing plan.

In civil cases, my object is to allow the legislature to lessen the number of jurors to nine or even seven. Why twelve shall be required to decide a matter of account, for example, between parties, and shall be unanimous in their decision, is not seen by me. If a controversy about fifty dollars arises between parties, either matter of account or about property of that value, where three or five or seven could better and more readily examine into it than a larger number, there must be twelve, and if one dissents, there can be no decision. The commonwealth must pay twelve, perhaps fifty dollars, if one disagrees with eleven to try such a case and then not have it decided.

To the single judge, as a chancellor, we commit the decisions of law and facts, involving thousands. To a majority of the court of appeals we commit the revision of the acts of a full jury and the circuit court or other inferior court, controlling all, and yet for some reason, not comprehended, we must have twelve jurors, and all must concur.

Sir, is there any delegate who would not rather leave a controversy, involving a complex account, to one than a dozen for certainty of correctness. To a half dozen, any number of disputed points, than to a dozen.

There is nothing to me very cabalistic in the number twelve, nor do I see any danger to the trial by jury, in allowing the legislature to lessen the number from twelve to seven.

In the saving of expenses to the state for paying jurors the sum would be very great, as they have to be paid out of the treasury. The expectation that the fines and forfeitures would compensate the juries, has been found fallacious. The fines are nearly all remitted, and the treasury has to pay.

If we had eighteen jurors instead of twenty four to make two full pannels, it would save six dollars per day in each circuit court of the state. If fourteen, ten dollars. The sum thus saved, would go very far towards helping to make up our sinking fund, and thereby contribute to pay the public debt. Nothing would be saved as regards criminal trials, as my proposition will not allow the legislature to lessen the number of jurors in such cases below twelve. It only contemplates that nine may find the verdict.

I have briefly suggested some of the reasons that induce me to present the proposition now before the convention. For one, I would be willing to see the experiment, if such it shall be called, fully tested. If it succeeded, much good would result; if not, we would but be as we now are by a repeal of any legislative enactment making the change.

Mr. CLARKE. The gentleman asks why it is that nine members of a jury in a criminal cause should not be allowed to bring in a verdict against the accused. The reason is just this: if twelve men shall be selected to try a citizen under a charge of committing a criminal offence, and three of them shall entertain doubts as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, it is manifest, if they are honest men—and we must presume they are—that there is some doubt, and the humane principle of the law is, that it is better that ninety nine guilty men should go unpunished, than that one innocent man should suffer. And just so long as there is a doubt in the breast of one, two, three, or five jurors, just so long is there a doubt as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and just so long should his life be saved. I am opposed to giving to the majority of a jury—to eight, nine, or eleven members even, the right to decide upon the life or liberty of the citizen, when twelve men are required to try him. Let them all concur, for while there is one dissenting voice there must be doubt, and whilst there is doubt no man's life or liberty should be taken from him.

Mr. BOYD moved to amend, so that the proposition should not apply to criminal causes.

Mr. DIXON. I am against the whole proposition, and the amendment proposed by my friend from Trigg, (Mr. Boyd.) I venerate the old right of trial by jury, and I look upon it as affording above all things the greatest security to the life, liberty, and property of the citizen, and I cannot consent that it shall be impaired or interfered with either by this convention or by the legislature. It is one of those rights which I would never touch, and which I look upon as the most sacred, and the dearest enjoyed by any man who is sensible to the real blessings of liberty. I shall not attempt to go into the history of the right of trial by jury, or say how it originated, how it groped its way through the darkness of the middle ages, how it burst through the shackles which the despotism of the past had thrown around the liberties of men, and how it finally took its position above the storms and strifes of revolution, the safeguard and protection of the people and their rights against the evils of despotism or unbridled anarchy. It is a right that comes to us hallowed and sanctified by the blood of patriots and martyrs, and I would not interfere with it. Next to the bible, I regard it as most sacred, and I would no sooner raise my hand against the one than the other. Do gentlemen really pretend to stop to calculate the cost of trying a man by twelve jurymen? Do they pretend to say that the state of Kentucky is so anxious for the lives of her citizens that we must coolly and calmly sit down and make an estimate of how much it will cost to get a man hung—that life is of so little value in Kentucky that a few dollars thrown into the scale is to decide it against human life? This I understand to be the argument of the gentleman from Franklin, (Mr. Lindsey,) that it will cost less to try a man if you reduce the number of the jury to nine, or allow two thirds to say that he shall die.

Mr. LINDSEY. If the gentleman will examine he will see that my proposition provides for twelve jurors in criminal cases, and my remarks in reference to the expense therefore, do not apply particularly to such cases. I propose that twelve shall constitute the jury in such cases, but I allow nine of them to find the verdict.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the proposition then to be that you will allow nine men to take a man's life instead of twelve. Nine will cost less than twelve, and therefore they should have the power. That is the argument if it is not the proposition. Rather than to stand here calculating how much it would cost to take a man's life, I would prefer to estimate how much it would cost to save it. If a man is not guilty, I will go as far as possible to save his life, no matter how much it may cost. Life has become but a cheap thing in Kentucky, or money has become more potential than ever I could suppose it to be with the people, when drops of blood are to be weighed in the same scale with dollars and cents. To use an expression of my friend from Ballard and McCracken, (Mr. Gholson,) I say that I am astonished to hear such an argument. I trust that the sacred right of trial by jury will be let alone, and I do not think the people are prepared for any sort of innovation upon it. They will never consent that the legislature shall have the power to interfere with the subject, and to give them that power is presupposing at once that they ought to exercise it. And this convention, without in fact doing it themselves, would thereby encourage the legislature to impair the right of trial by jury. I hope neither the proposition or the amendment offered to it will be adopted.

Mr. BOYD. The gentleman from Henderson seems to have mistaken the object of my amendment. I shall vote with him against the proposition, but if the convention intend to adopt it, I do not wish to extend the power to the legislature to permit less than twelve jurors to try a criminal case. I have not so much objection to less than twelve in civil cases, but still I am against the whole proposition.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE moved the previous question.

The main question was ordered to be now put, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE asked for the yeas and nays on the proposition of Mr. LINDSEY.

Mr. LINDSEY. At the suggestion of friends around me, and for the purpose of allowing another to present a proposition, I will ask leave to withdraw the amendment offered by me.

Mr. DAVIS expressed a desire to offer an amendment, but

The PRESIDENT decided it to be cut off by the previous question.

The sixth section was then adopted.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved a reconsideration of the vote just taken.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. A few days ago the legislature was invested with discretionary power to give to the commonwealth the right of challenge to the amount of one fifth the number allowed the accused. There might be a conflict upon the subject, if the section is left as it now reads—"that the ancient mode of trial by jury shall be held sacred, and the right thereof remain inviolate," and for the purpose of preventing any such result, I move to add to the section, the words, "subject to such modifications as may be authorized by this constitution."

This amendment was agreed to, and the sixth section, as amended, was adopted.

The seventh section was then read as follows:

"Sec. 7. That printing presses shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write, and print, on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

Mr. JAMES expressing a desire to prepare an amendment to it, the section was passed over.

The eighth and ninth sections were read and adopted as follows:

"Sec. 8. In prosecutions for the publication of papers investigating the official conduct of officers or men in a public capacity, or where the matter published is proper for public information, the truth thereof may be given in evidence; and in all indictments for the libels, the jury shall have a right to determine the law and the facts under the direction of the court, as in other cases."

SEC. 9. That the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and possessions, from unreasonable seizures and searches, and that no warrant to search any place, or to seize any person, or things, shall issue, without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation."

The tenth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 10. That in all criminal prosecutions, the accused hath a right to be heard by himself and counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him; to meet the witnesses face to face; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; and in prosecutions by indictment or information, a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage; that he cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself; nor can he be deprived of his life, liberty, or property, unless by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land."

MR. A. K. MARSHALL. I move to strike out the word "vicinage" and insert in lieu thereof, the word "commonwealth." I believe that the construction given to that word in our present constitution confines the selection of jurors to the county. It might happen, and I think I would not be far out of the way if I say it has happened; that in some criminal prosecutions it has been impossible to obtain a jury in the county where the offence was committed, and the offender passed unpunished, because of the construction given to this word. I desire therefore, to enable the public prosecutor to select a jury, if necessary, from the commonwealth at large.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on the call of MR. A. K. MARSHALL—yeas 29, nays 61, as follows:

YEAS—MR. President, (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, William C. Bullitt, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfield, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, Peter Lashbrooke, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Mewcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—29.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, C. T. Dunavan, B. F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, R. D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William C. Marshall, William N. Ma

W. D. Mitchell, J. M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, H. B. Pollard, John T. Rogers, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—61.

So the amendment was rejected.

MR. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the words, "of the vicinage," entirely. It sometimes happens, from the atrocity of the crime perpetrated by an individual, and the whole country is so fully informed of the facts in the case, that from those very reasons the offender cannot be brought to trial. I hope we shall adopt some provision which will obviate this evil, and I think that result may be attained by not confining the selection of jurors to the vicinage, or to the county, as the term is construed to mean.

MR. R. N. WICKLIFFE. I voted "no" on the other question, with the intention of moving a reconsideration of the vote. I think that the term "vicinage" has no meaning in our constitution. It had one in England, whence it is derived. In old times there it was always customary to take the jury from the place of controversy, where the facts and all the circumstances were known to the jury. Now, the universal rule is, and the judge so charges the sheriff, to get a jury as far away from the scene of controversy as is possible, and to be composed of men who know nothing about the facts of the case, and have expressed no opinion in relation thereto. I intend therefore to move a reconsideration of the vote rejecting the proposition of the gentleman from Jessamine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall.)

MR. STEVENSON. We are here making a bill of rights, and the section we are considering is emphatically a right. There are a great many propositions in this bill that seem trite and axiomatic, and this I deem to be the best evidence of the wisdom of the men who framed the present constitution, from which they are copied. The gentleman from Campbell, (Mr. Root,) asked what was meant by "equal elections." I have no doubt it has never occurred to the gentleman what it did mean; but if he will look to Virginia he will see that in that state, from the very want of this term "equal elections," in some of the counties there are three days election, while in the others only one. Now it is proposed to strike out the words, "of the vicinage," and gentlemen say it has no meaning. It had a meaning in the old constitution, and it has one here. It is that a man, in his own county where his character is known, can come before those who have known him and stand the test of a criminal examination so far as a trial by jury. Take a man and try him before a jury of another section of the state in which the public opinion differs wholly from the section in which he resides, on the subject of slavery for instance, or anything else, and the natural feelings and impulses of men will induce them to go against him. Would a man, brought from Hopkins county, before a jury of the northern part of the state to be tried, a perfect stranger, be as likely to secure a safe trial as at home? I think not. In framing a constitution, let us act coolly and dispassionately, and if extreme cases exist under this section, it is better to provide for them by a separate section than to override great principles. One or the other must yield.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I have been surprised at nothing so much in this convention as in witnessing the extreme anxiety manifested on the part of some gentlemen to defend and protect and screen guilt. It is a fact, I presume, that is well known to every one in this house, and a fact that is known to the shame of Kentucky, that our criminal code has almost become a dead letter on the statute book. And there is scarcely an offence that can be committed which can possibly be punished under the laws, provided the offender has the means of corrupting the court or the jury. It is known, I presume, to every one here present, that the decisions of our juries and the construction of our laws, are such now, that offences are committed and pleas are admitted in our courts of justice, which savage vengeance itself would be ashamed to offer in extenuation of crime.

I made the proposition to amend, which I did, because there are instances that have occurred in the history of my own county and my own neighborhood, that bring forcibly to my own mind, a sense of its importance. There are gentlemen on this floor, who know perfectly well that offences are sometimes committed in this state of a character, so outrageous, so perfectly startling to an entire neighborhood, and so wholly inexcusable, that it has proved to be utterly impossible to obtain a jury to try the offender in the county where the crime was committed, and the criminal has gone unwhipt of justice, simply from that cause. Do gentlemen desire this thing to go on? Do they desire a clause in the fundamental law of the land, for it is equivalent to that, that a man may, by committing so enormous an outrage that it is impossible for him to be tried in the county where the crime was committed, secure himself against punishment? I believe our courts have decided that any man who has formed or expressed an opinion in respect to an offence, is not to be considered a competent juror. And do we not all know that cases have occurred where it was utterly out of the question to expect that a single rational man, in the county where the offence was committed, could be found who had not been compelled by the enormity of the offence itself, to form some opinion—aye, and express one, too—in reference to the guilt of the offender? My object was to give to the commonwealth some little power to arrest this unhallowed march of crime, that has tracked our entire country with blood. Scarcely a young man is there of the present day, who does not think himself degraded or unfit to associate with men until he has stained his diploma with blood. And the last act of the education of the bloods of the present day, is to throw themselves into a position where they may commit an act of that kind. And the best mark of courage one of them can give, is to stab in the dark, and our law gives them protection. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Williams,) mine having been rejected, will be adopted.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope that I am willing to go as far as my friend from Jessamine, (Mr. A. K. Marshall,) in the punishment of all crime. But while I desire to see crime punished, and the laws of the country upheld, I am not for undermining what I regard to be the great pillars of free government, to punish any man. Now let us test, and see the danger of striking out, as proposed by the gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Williams,) and the consequences likely to result therefrom. He proposes to strike out the words "of the vicinage". Then if a man is charged with any crime it is in the power of the legislature to remove him from any one county of the commonwealth to another. There is no remedy. My friend shakes his head, but I tell him there is no remedy when you strike out those words "of the vicinage." I admit that there have been crimes where juries could not be obtained to try the offender in the county, but the law now authorizes jurors from adjacent counties to sit. As the law is now, the citizens of Jessamine are competent jurors to sit in Fayette, if they are caught there, although you cannot go out of the county to summon a juror. All this provision in the bill intends, is, that the criminal should not be taken where he would be in a land of strangers, where he would be unknown, and where he might not have extended to him the panoply of justice. One of our greatest rights, as was said by the eloquent gentleman from Henderson, is this trial by jury. And when you fritter it away, you fritter away one of the strong pillars upon which the government itself stands. Why is it, that we have twelve men on a jury? Because the excitements we desire to keep away from the jury box, may seize on the minds of six, eight, or ten men, when it might not on twelve. And whenever you disturb that number, you overthrow the great right itself. I am unwilling to take away the least of the safeguards by which it is surrounded.

Mr. DUNAVAN moved the previous question.

The previous question was ordered to be now put, and the amendment of Mr. Williams was rejected. The question being taken by yeas and nays, on the call of Mr. Stevenson—yeas 31, nays 59, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. PRESIDENT, (Guthrie,) A. Boyd, William Bradley, William C. Bullitt, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfield, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, Peter Lashbrooke, Alexander Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, David Meriwether, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Prier, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, John L. Waller, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—31.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, H. R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Wm. Cowper, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nisbett, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Polard, John T. Rogers, John W. Stevenson, J. W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—59.

The tenth section was then adopted.

Mr. GRAY moved to reconsider this vote with a view of enabling Mr. WILLIAMS to offer the following amendment:

"But the legislature may pass laws providing for the selection of jurors from adjacent counties in cases where a jury cannot be had in the county where the offence was committed."

The convention refused to reconsider, a count being had, yeas 37—nays 46. The eleventh section was then read as follows:

Sec. 11. That no person shall, for any indictable offence, be proceeded against, criminally, by information, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service, in time of war or public danger, by leave of the court, for oppression or misdemeanor in office."

The PRESIDENT called attention to the fact, that the section was evidently imperfect in its reference to the "leave of the court."

Mr. STEVENSON suggested the insertion of the word "but" before the words, "by leave of the court."

Mr. GRAY thought it was better not to act hastily inasmuch as the section was copied from the old constitution.

And then the convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. NORTON.

RULES OF ORDER.

The PRESIDENT desired to explain a decision which he made yesterday. He said on reflection, he was satisfied that his decision on the motion to reconsider and to lay on the table was wrong. The motion to reconsider should have been made and stated from the Chair before the motion to lay upon the table was entertained. He made this statement that the convention might know the rule by which the Chair would be governed in future.

PRINCIPLE OF APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. APPERSON from the select committee, some time since appointed under a resolution offered by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) on the subject of apportionment made the following report:

"Sec. 6. That representation shall be equal and uniform in this commonwealth, and shall be forever regulated and ascertained by the number of representative population, which shall be first ascertained in the year 1850. At the first session of the general assembly after the adoption of this constitution, provision shall be made by law, that in the year 1858, and every eighth year thereafter, an enumeration of all the representative population of the state shall be made. The house of representatives shall consist of one hundred members, and to secure uniformity and equality of representation, the state is hereby laid off into ten districts.

The first district shall be composed of the counties of Fulton, Hickman, Ballard, McCracken, Graves, Calloway, Marshall, Livingston, Crittenden, Union, Hopkins, Caldwell, and Trigg.

The second district shall be composed of the counties of Christian, Muhlenburg, Henderson, Daviess, Hancock, Ohio, Breckinridge, Meade, Grayson, Butler, and Edmonson.

The third district shall be composed of the counties of Todd, Logan, Simpson, Warren, Allen, Monroe, Barren, and Hart.

The fourth district shall be composed of the counties of Cumberland, Adair, Green, Taylor, Clinton, Russell, Wayne, Pulaski, Casey, Boyle, and Lincoln.

The fifth district shall be composed of the counties of Hardin, Larue, Bullitt, Spencer, Nelson, Washington, Marion, Mercer, and Anderson.

The sixth district shall be composed of the counties of Garrard, Madison, Estill, Owsley, Rockcastle, Laurel, Clay, Whitley, Knox, Harlan, Perry, Letcher, Pike, Floyd, and Johnson.

The seventh district shall be composed of the counties of Jefferson, Oldham, Trimble, Carroll, Henry and Shelby, and the city of Louisville.

The eighth district shall be composed of the counties of Bourbon, Fayette, Scott, Owen, Franklin, Woodford, and Jessamine.

The ninth district shall be composed of the counties of Clarke, Montgomery, Bath, Fleming, Lewis, Greenup, Carter, Lawrence, Morgan and Breathitt.

The tenth district shall be composed of the counties of Mason, Bracken, Nicholas, Harrison, Pendleton, Campbell, Grant, Kenton, Boone, and Gallatin.

The number of representatives shall, at the several sessions of the general assembly, next after the making of these enumerations, be apportioned among the ten several districts, proportioned according to the respective representative population of each; and the representatives shall be apportioned, as near as may be, among the counties, towns and cities in each district; and in making such apportionment the following rules shall govern, to wit: Every county, town or city having the ratio shall have one representative; if double the ratio, two representatives, and so on. Next, the counties, towns or cities having one or more representatives, and the largest representative population above the ratio, and counties, towns and cities having the largest representative population under the ratio, regard being always had to the greatest representative population: Provided, however, That if there should be any county not having a sufficient number of representative population to entitle it to one representative, yet it shall have a representative, if all the adjacent counties in the same district have a sufficient number of representative population to entitle them respectively to one representative: And, provided further, That when a county may not have a sufficient number of representative population to entitle it to one representative, then such county may be joined to some adjacent county or counties to send one representative, provided such adjacent county has not a full ratio. When a new county shall be formed of territory belonging to more than one district, it shall form a part of that district having the least number of representative population."

I do not know that it will be necessary for me to make many remarks: but as we are getting along with business pretty rapidly, perhaps gentlemen would like to know how it will operate. The principle of representation is that which I submitted some days ago. It is only carrying it out as applicable to ten districts instead of four. The smaller the districts the greater will be the inequality. To exemplify this, the district of which Fayette is a portion, will have eight members and a greater residuum than any other; but giving it nine members, Scott having 1,839 voters, will be entitled to two representatives; and the same applied to another district, of which Pulaski is one of the counties, will give Pulaski one member.

But notwithstanding this seeming great inequality, if gentlemen will make a calculation they will find it impossible to lay down any particular principle of apportionment but inequalities will arise some where. Again, the county of Gallatin, now connected with the county of Carroll, with 883 voters, would be entitled to a member, because all the adjacent counties in the district will have a full ratio. I only make these remarks because these are the hard places where the principle may seem to work unequally. We have tried many principles and none of them are without similar difficulties. I move that the report be printed and postponed till tomorrow.

The motion to print and to postpone was agreed to.

MODE OF AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. Mr. President, I beg to move the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee to whom was referred the mode of amending the constitution, be instructed to inquire into the propriety and expediency of adopting the specific mode of amending one or more clause or clauses at a time, to be first proposed by a vote of the people at the polls, and then considered by the legislature, and if approved by a majority of all the members thereof, then submitted again to the people for their approval, on two several occasions, under such restrictions as may be safe and advisable.

The people of Fleming county, whom I have the honor to represent on this floor, entertain a class of opinions in regard to the amendment of the constitution of 1799, which my duty impels me to offer to the consideration of this house. They were moved to sustain the call of a convention to revise the present constitution by two reasons. They desired to increase the popular power over the agencies of the government, and to increase their power over the constitution. Experience had demonstrated to them the inefficiency of the amendatory clause to produce the effect for which it was inserted, and through me, their representative, they offer the plan set forth in the resolution on your table as a proper amendatory clause. It places the constitution of the state where it ought to be, in the custody of the people who created it, and restrains popular action for its amendment within the bounds of prudence and wisdom. This is not the proper period to elaborate the reasons why this resolution should be adopted. I therefore move its reference to the committee of revision and slavery, that they may give it the consideration its merits deserve. I am not informed when that committee will report, but hope the house will allow this resolution to take the usual course—be printed and referred.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I will observe to the honorable gentleman, that the committee to which he refers is ready to report; we will, however, take his resolution into consideration.

Mr. BARLOW moved to amend said resolution by striking out the words "a majority of all the members thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thirds of both houses of the general assembly."

Mr. KELLY moved to lay the resolution and amendment on the table, and he called for the yeas and nays thereon.

The yeas and nays were taken, and were, yeas 43, nays 44:

YEAS—William K. Bowling, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, John P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, George W. Mausfield, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe—43.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfiede, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Vincent S. Hay, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, David Meriwether, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—44.

So the convention refused to lay on the table.

Mr. MERIWETHER remarked that the resolution was simply a resolution of enquiry, and therefore he hoped the convention would adopt it.

The resolution was then referred, and ordered to be printed.

POLITICAL AND JUDICIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee of revision be instructed to enquire into the propriety of providing that the civil and political elections shall be held on different years."

After a brief conversation, in which Messrs. C. A. Wickliffe, Machen, A. K. Marshall, James, and Garrard, took part, the resolution was adopted.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on general provisions.

The 11th section was under consideration when the convention adjourned yesterday. It was now verbally amended on the motion of Mr. GRAY, by the insertion of the word "or" after the words "public danger."

The section as amended was then adopted.

The 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th sections, were adopted without amendment as follows:

"SEC. 12. No person shall, for the same offence, be twice put in jeopardy of his life or limb; nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use, without the consent of his representatives, and without just compensation being previously made to him."

"SEC. 13. That all courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done to him in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by the due course of law, and right and justice administered, without sale, denial, or delay."

"SEC. 14. That no power of suspending laws shall be exercised, unless by the legislature or its authority."

"SEC. 15. That excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel punishments inflicted."

"SEC. 16. That all prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offences, when the proof is evident or presumption great; and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it."

The seventeenth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the person of a debtor, where there is not strong presumption of fraud, shall not be continued in prison after delivering up his estate for the benefit of his creditors, in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

Mr. HAMILTON moved to amend, by striking out the words "continued in prison after delivering," and inserting "imprisoned, who delivers."

The amendment was rejected.

The section was then adopted.

The eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second sections were adopted without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 18. That no ex post facto law, nor any law impairing contracts, shall be made."

"SEC. 19. That no person shall be attainted of treason or felony by the general assembly."

"SEC. 20. That no attainder shall work corruption of blood, nor, except during the life of the offender, forfeiture of estate to the commonwealth."

"SEC. 21. That the estates of such persons as shall destroy their own lives, shall descend or vest as in case of natural death; and if any person shall be killed by casualty, there shall be no forfeiture by reason thereof."

"SEC. 22. That the citizens have a right, in a peaceable manner, to assemble together for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government, for redress of grievances, or other proper purposes, by petition, address, or remonstrance."

The twenty-third section was read as follows:

"SEC. 23. That the rights of the citizens to bear arms in defence of themselves and the state, shall not be questioned."

Mr. WILLIAMS moved to amend, by adding the following:

"But the general assembly may pass laws to prevent persons from carrying concealed arms."

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were yeas 50, nays 39.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, George W. Johnston, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—50.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thos. James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelley, Peter Lashbrooke, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Larkin, J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Henry Washington, Charles A. Wickliffe—39.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BULLITT called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section, and they were yeas 52, nays 7.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mausfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William E. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—82.

NAYS—William C. Bullitt, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Nathan Gaither, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Kavanaugh—7.

So the section was adopted.

The twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth sections were adopted without amendment, as follows:

"SEC. 24. That no standing army shall, in time of peace, be kept up, without the consent of the legislature; and the military shall, in all cases and at all times, be in strict subordination to the civil power.

"SEC. 25. That no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner; nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

The twenty-sixth section was read as follows:

"SEC. 26. That the legislature shall not grant any title of nobility, or hereditary distinction; nor create any office, the appointment to which shall be for a longer term than good behavior."

Mr. CHAMBERS moved to strike out the word "term" and insert "time;" also, to strike out "good behaviour" and insert "term of years."

The amendments were adopted.

Mr. NESBITT moved to insert the word "six" before the word "years."

The amendment was rejected.

The section as amended was then adopted.

The twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth sections were then adopted without amendment as follows:

"SEC. 27. That emigration from the state shall not be prohibited."

"SEC. 28. To guard against transgressions of the high powers which we have delegated, we declare, that every thing in this article is excepted out of the general powers of government, and shall forever remain inviolate; and that all laws contrary thereto, or contrary to this constitution, shall be void."

The seventh section, which was heretofore passed over at the request of Mr. JAMES, was again taken up and read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That printing presses shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write, and print, on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I move to strike out the words "the free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write, and print, on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

I rise to address the convention on this occasion under very peculiar and embarrassing circumstances. It may be necessary before I conclude, to make some allusion to myself, which, to me, is always unpleasant in any discussion, but more especially so in a parliamentary body. I hope this convention will not be afraid that I am about to revive what are called the "alien and sedition laws" which have become so notorious and unpopular, at the same time I doubt not they will admit the justice of the remarks I am about to make.

It has been well said, Mr. President, that the power of speech is a faculty peculiar to man, and was bestowed upon him by his beneficent Creator for the purpose of communing with his fellow man, and of enabling him thereby to enjoy to a fuller extent the social relations or life. But, alas! how often is this power converted to the worst of purposes! The same remark, Mr. President, may be made with regard to the printing press—confessedly an instrument of much good or of great evil—according as it is ill or well directed. When properly directed, none will deny that it is calculated to enlighten and improve a community by diffusing the most useful information. But when, like the power of speech, it is resorted to for the purpose of abusing, traducing, and calumniating the citizens of this commonwealth, I ask you if, in such case, it is not converted to the worst of purposes. It has been well said, Mr. President,

"Who steals my purse steals trash."

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands,
But he who filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

I have never heard the correctness of those sentiments controverted in all my life. Then, sir, if this is true, what is the condition of that man who will willingly, wilfully, wantonly, corruptly, and wickedly attempt to steal and rob from any citizen of this commonwealth—or any body of citizens—that reputation which does not enrich him, but makes others "poor indeed?" We know that this commonwealth has been excited for years, throughout the length and breadth of this land, upon party questions, and under the influence of party feelings; but when this convention was called, what did the people do? To their honor be it said, that they regarded this as an important consideration, affecting alike the interests of all, and laying aside all party feeling and animosity, they came up to this question like men, like statesmen, like patriots; for, Mr. President, it is well known that many gentlemen who now occupy seats on this floor are indebted to those who are opposed to them in politics for those seats. And why did they do this? Because they wanted to assemble the wisdom and talent and experience of Kentucky to frame an organic law that should continue, not merely for a year, but that shall be held in respect by our children, and that shall be venerated by our children's children.

I here remark, Mr. President, that if our forefathers in 1799 succeeded in framing a constitution that has continued for half a century, we shall, indeed, be greatly behind them, if, with the additional knowledge and experience which we possess, the lights we have before us, and the widely different and more improved materials we have to work upon—we cannot frame such a constitution as will continue at least a hundred years.

Well sir, I congratulated myself when I was about to leave my family and friends, that I should be associated with some eighty of my old associates in legislation—the ablest politicians and statesmen of Kentucky. And I found here among those with whom I had not had the pleasure of an acquaintance, many young gentlemen to whom the road of fame is open and clear. I thought we should meet again, not for party purposes, to engage in a work for the common good of the country; might I not have expected under these circumstances, when the convention was convened, that it would be free from vituperation and billingsgate abuse of any portion of the press of this state? But, sir, what are the facts? It is humiliating to look at them; it is humiliating to reflect upon and acknowledge them. Letter-writers and editors have been assailing the delegates to this convention in the most virulent and disreputable manner. Let me call your attention, Mr. President, to what has been published in a newspaper, emanating from the city of Louisville, called the Louisville Chronicle. I will pass over the name of the gentleman he refers to; for I determined, in the outset, never to bring the name of any gentleman into question in connection with any little discussion I might be engaged in, unless it should be called for.

The first extract is—

“We understand that old ——— has at last openly come out—

Mr. HARDIN. Name the man; name the man.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman says “name the man.” As Nathan said unto David, “Thou art the man.” The extract reads—

“SALE AVOWED.

“We understand that old Ben Hardin has at last openly come out and declared that he will oppose the new constitution. We stated some time since that old Ben was at heart against constitutional reform, and had sold himself to the central power at Frankfort, and now the avowal of the sale is made by himself. Nor does he stand alone. There are many others with him who have their price in their pockets; and the democratic party will learn with astonishment that among them are some men who dare to call themselves democrats.”

Well, sir, I don't know how many there are, but this imputation evidently embraces more than one, for the charge is in the plural, not in the singular. Well, Mr. President, if that is true, those delegates, whoever they are, ought to be expelled from this convention. If it is untrue, he who published it—the editor of the Chronicle—ought to be branded as a base calumniator, and forever shunned by every honorable man. Who will controvert this position? No man I trust.

Well, sir, what does he say in a preceding number of his paper? After going on, when alluding to my name he says—

“Through six ponderous columns of the Commonwealth he poured forth the most nauseating twaddle and disgusting billingsgate upon every body who is not as willing as himself to sell out to the Frankfort Whig Junto.”

What is meant by this, Mr. President? This is another charge that I pronounce a base, wilful, vile, and corrupt calumny, and no other but a vile and filthy sheet would have printed it. I have had the honor of serving, at various times, with more than two thousand of Kentucky politicians and statesmen; I have had, with them, to consider a great many important questions—questions affecting our most vital interests, as well those of my immediate constituents as the constituency of other gentlemen, and I say to this base calumniator, that the lips of every man in this commonwealth are unsealed, and I challenge them all to declare if ever I have, by word, act, or deed, attempted the exercise of an improper influence, to induce any man to swerve from the discharge of his duty; and I call upon him to retract this charge, or I say again that he is a base calumniator. I here dismiss this subject, and leave the slanderer to his fate. “Cease, viper; you gnaw a file.”

I have voted on many questions in which the people of Frankfort were interested—I may have voted on these questions in conformity with their interests; and, Mr. President, I shall always do so when I think they are in the right. There are other questions in which they were deeply interested, and I voted against them when I believed it for the good of the commonwealth to do so. This also, Mr. President, I am sure all honorable men will say is equally right.

Where is this “whig junto” that the Chronicle is talking about? Who has seen it here? Where is it to be found? Nowhere within my knowledge. I have been for many measures that interested the section of country in which Frankfort is located. I have strenuously opposed others in which that section was thought to be interested. I have always endeavored to do right. 'Twas but the other day that I advocated a proposition in regard to tolls, which it was declared would injure Frankfort. I believed it was right, and I took my stand because I believed it right. I have made this my home for twenty-three winters, and I will say that a more upright, deserving, hospitable community I have never had acquaintance with. But they need no encomiums from the humble individual who addresses you.

But I appear already to have trespassed too long. I came here, sir, not to legislate for, or against, Frankfort. I came here to represent a high-minded, honest, and honorable constituency; and I regard any imputation cast upon me as an imputation cast upon them. They probably don't drive out in their one or two-thousand-dollar carriages; but do you raise the curtains of a carriage to find honesty, bedecked in robes? I would as soon go to the individual clothed in home-spun. I cast no reflections upon the rich, and I will suffer none to be cast upon the poor; because they are the main-stay, the support in every sense of the word of our commonwealth—for the toiling millions have always been the men who have sustained this country. They sustain it by producing what the drones of the country need for their consumption; and when our country is assailed and invaded, they are always to be found foremost in the ranks to defend it.

I know there are men in this convention who will think I should not have condescended to notice an article of this kind. I have consulted with but few on the matter, but I thought a resolution of inquiry into an affair casting so foul an imputation on the character of this body, ought to be offered; and if any member of this convention be guilty, as imputed in the article I have referred to, he ought most certainly to be expelled. But I do not offer any resolution of inquiry. This is the last legislative body I shall probably ever enter. I have been sustained for many years by a generous constituency, and I could not, in justice to my constituency, say less. I withdraw my amendment.

This is a very important article, and although the privileges granted to the press and the tongue may be abused, I trust that public sentiment will always correct the influence of this abuse.

With these remarks, Mr. President, I will add no more; I could not, in justice to my constituency, say less. I withdraw my amendment.

The section was then adopted.

The PRESIDENT then announced the question to be on the section offered by Mr. DIXON as a second section:

"Sec. 2. That absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, (except for crimes,) exists nowhere in a republic—not even in the largest majority."

Mr. DIXON. I do not feel it necessary to make any speech on this proposed section. It fully explains itself. But I wish the yeas and nays to be taken on its adoption.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me, if I understand the section which it is proposed to adopt, that it conflicts with the succeeding section. It asserts "that absolute and arbitrary power does not exist in a republic." The next section declares "that all power is in the people." I think "all power" would include this "arbitrary power." It seems to me there is an absolute power somewhere, wherever there is a political organization. In Russia it is in the Czar. In a limited monarchy it may be divided, and in a republic, it is in the people. I think there is an inconsistency in the two sections.

Mr. DIXON. There is not the least inconsistency. The section to which the gentleman alludes says: "that all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety; happiness, security, and protection of their property. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper." The section which I offer is: "that absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen, (except for crimes,) exists nowhere in a republic—not even in the largest majorities." That is it. There is no inconsistency. The power does not exist in a majority, however large, to cut a man's throat, or to take away his liberty, or his property arbitrarily. It is only denying this arbitrary power when it is exercised by a portion. When it is exercised by the whole, there is no question. The section to which the gentleman from Oldham has referred, asserts the right only for the ends therein named; that is for the "peace, safety, happiness security and protection of property." For the advancement of these ends, they have a right to alter or abolish their government at all times. They have no right to adopt a constitution which would not advance, but which would destroy those ends, which would not secure his liberty, but which would make him a slave. I think the section is not inconsistent, but is carrying out the same principle.

Mr. TALBOTT. I do not rise sir, to make a speech, I merely wish to define my position. If I understand the mover of this section, it is to substitute it for a resolution offered by the gentleman some time since, and for which I was very willing to have voted. That resolution, if I recollect rightly, contained the sentiment or declaration that this convention has no right, by any principle it may incorporate in the constitution it may form, to deprive the citizen of his property without his consent, except for public use, and only then, by making to him a just and full compensation therefor. This sentiment I adopt. This declaration I believe to be true, and the resolution containing them I should have voted for most cordially. But sir, I understand the section here offered, to contain an entirely different sentiment, one at war with that resolution. It reads: "that absolute arbitrary power over the lives, liberties and property of freemen nowhere exists in a republic, except for crime. Now sir, I understand all power in governments to be absolute and arbitrary. It is so from the very nature of government. What I understand by absolute, arbitrary power is plenary, positive, irresistible power, or right to execute the will or law of the government, contrary to, or without the consent of the citizen. This sir, is admitted on the face of the proposition as far as crime is concerned. If it exists for the punishment of crime, it certainly does for the coercion of debt; and if it exists for these purposes, it seems to me sir, it must, in the very nature of government, exist for any and every other purpose of government. None deny, that in time of invasion, a republic like all other governments, has absolute power over the lives, liberties and property of her citizens to compel them, even contrary to their will, to furnish men and means to prosecute the war in defence of their country's rights, and their country's honor. None, I presume, Mr. President, will deny this. But sir, I wish to be clearly and distinctly understood on this subject. While I vote against this section, I deny the right that this convention, or any other that may hereafter assemble, has, or will have, by any principle to be incorporated in the constitution we are about to frame, or any constitution hereafter to be framed, to appropriate private property to public use, without paying therefor, a full and fair equivalent in money. Sir, this is a constitutional convention, assembled for purposes of protection—not plunder—to secure the rights of our citizens—not to destroy them.

Mr. DIXON. There has been a section adopted which meets the gentleman's views.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I announce my intention to vote against the section. There is a question whether we have not delegated this power already. If we have done this, is not the section proposed inconsistent with the one we have adopted?

Mr. DIXON. I will explain. The power which is delegated to the legislature to take away property, life, or liberty, is a qualified power. It is consistent with the law of the land, which law has been made in conformity to the powers delegated by the people, and which powers so delegated, have resulted from the necessity of the case, and not from the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power. The power to punish a man for crime, to take away his property when the public good may require it, by paying him a just compensation for it, is not only necessary to the security of the liberties of the people, but no free government could exist or maintain itself without the right to exercise this power. This power is derived from the people, who constitute a free government, by their consent; and it is agreed by them that it shall be exercised with a view to their mutual protection, in the promotion of all the great blessings of free government.

Arbitrary and absolute powers are opposed to the very idea of consent, so far as it respects those on whom it is to operate. It is the exercise of an unrestrained will, either in an individual or a multitude; and whether exercised by the one or the other, over the lives, liberty, and property of the citizen, it is tyranny, it is despotism in its darkest form. This power, whether exercised by one or a majority, is never binding, except so far as force may make it so, on those whose liberties are cloven down and destroyed by it. It is opposed to the great principle of self-preservation, written by God himself on the hearts of all his intelligent creatures, and which principle, according to a beautiful writer, "is the primal compact and bond of society, not graven on stone, nor sealed with wax, nor put down on parchment, nor set forth in any express form of words by men, when of old they came together; but implied in the very act that they came together, presupposed in all subsequent law, not to be repealed by any authority, not invalidated by being omitted in any code; inasmuch as from thence are all codes and all authority." Kingly governments look to the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power, in derogation of all the rights of the people. But all free republics derive their existence from the people; are created for their protection and happiness, and in the making of laws, as well as in the execution of them, are restrained by the very objects and purposes of their creation. Whenever they cease so to be restrained, they cease to be republics, and become engines of tyranny and oppression. The section which I have offered, and which I wish inserted in the bill of rights, asserts the great principle which lies at the foundation of all free governments, that absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen, exists nowhere in a republic, not even in the largest majorities.

I have offered this section because there are many persons in this commonwealth who do believe these powers exist, and that they may be rightfully exercised. The language which it employs is stronger than that in the second section of the report, and I prefer having it adopted, because it imposes not by implication, but directly, a negative upon the exercise of these powers. I wish this principle incorporated in the bill of rights, that the people of Kentucky and of other states, may know and understand that this convention does not admit that the power exists in a bare majority, or in a large majority, to take from the meanest citizen his property without compensation, or his liberty or life, unjustly. I wish it to be incorporated that it may be fully understood in all time to come, that this convention denies the right of any majority, however constituted, to free the slaves of this commonwealth without the consent of their owners and without making to them a just and fair compensation for them. I wish it incorporated because it opposes the idea which has been so long prevalent, that majorities in convention are omnipotent, and that they have absolute power over the lives, liberty and property of the citizen. Even here, Mr. President, we have heard it asserted again and again, that this convention is unlimited in its power, that it can do whatever it thinks proper to do, and that its voice is as the voice of fate, and there is none to resist it. According to the opinions of some gentlemen, this convention might constitute itself the sovereign power of the state, proclaiming itself the hundred—I will not call them tyrants—but kings of Kentucky. Does anybody believe it would not be usurpation? Beyond all question it would. Suppose the convention attempts to perpetuate power in itself and its successors. Does any one believe this would not be usurpation? What I mean to assert is, the limitation of the power of all future conventions, and all majorities; and this is what is embraced in the section, and which I wish gentlemen distinctly to understand. If they mean to say that at any time, the power of a majority may take away property without compensation, let it go forth.

The PRESIDENT. I acknowledge, that so far as relates to the life and property of citizens, we have no right to invade it, but as to property necessary for public use, have we not a right to take it? That is a difficulty which presents itself to my mind.

Mr. DIXON. There is nothing in the section which I propose, that controverts that view. If there is, I am willing to amend it in such a form that it will not oppose taking property for public use, on paying a compensation. I have used strong language, because I wish it to be fully understood.

Mr. TALBOTT. I do not believe this convention, or any other, has a right to take away the property of the citizen without compensation. I understand the import of this proposition to be: we have no right to take it with or without compensation—justly or unjustly. I shall vote against it.

Mr. HARDIN. I think the suggestion of the President entirely correct. Arbitrary means taking without the consent of the owner, and would include those cases where property is paid for as where it is not, if the consent is not given. They have a right to take it for the public good, even against the will of the owner, and that is arbitrary. But I cannot vote for it. It is entirely an abstract proposition. Does the gentleman mean to say that a man cannot be called out to serve his country, for six, eight, or twelve months. We cannot take his property without paying for it, but we have a right to call out citizens to fight, to repel invasion, and that is the most arbitrary power in the world. I have seen men turn as pale as if there was no blood in them, when they came to draw. This was very arbitrary on them. Many a man I have seen draw, and many a man I have told to feel for the loose ticket, for the prize ticket would be sure to be folded up, and how they have fumbled about to get the right ticket.

Mr. GHOLSON. I think the provisions already made are sufficient. No pro-slavery man would wish for other provisions. Why, the power to make a man serve on a jury is arbitrary, and would conflict with this section. Slave property is sufficiently safe so long as we have the guaranty that property shall not be taken without compensation. In a republican government majorities must rule, and if the day should come when we shall be in a minority on this question, we must either submit or fight. That is the sum total of it. There is no necessity for this provision, and I hope it will not pass.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to enquire of the gentleman from Henderson, if he intends this amendment as a substitute for his resolutions, or does he intend to call them up hereafter?

Mr. DIXON. I do not. I intend to have that resolution voted on.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have no objection to the amendment, but will cheerfully give it my support. It strikes me as being rather too abstract and not well calculated to have any practical effect. The convention will perceive that the committee amended the old constitution in this section, by adding the words "protection of their property," which was all we thought was required. They intended to come within the principle of my friend's amendment, that while the right of the government exists to take property, yet they can never do it without just compensation. The committee thought that the addition of the words "protection of their property" was all that the people now or at any other time would demand. They considered the addition of these words would fully come up to every possible state of case which might arise, and be amply sufficient for any crisis.

This amendment is a mere abstract proposition, which, although true, will not have any obligatory force on any future convention. Like many others which we have adopted, it is at least but the expression of opinion of this convention. The gentleman from Oldham suggested that it was inconsistent with other sections. I do not so understand it. All declarations of abstract rights are apparently contradicted by subsequent provisions in the same constitution. They should be regarded rather as necessary exceptions than contradictions! I am sure if we adopt this amendment we shall not be guilty of any inconsistency. Its adoption would not be more contradictory than another section which we have adopted. In the fourth section we declare:

"That the civil rights, privileges, or capacities of any citizen, shall in no wise be diminished or enlarged on account of his religion."

In the first section we declare:

"That all freemen, when they form a social compact, are equal, and that no man or set of men are entitled to exclusive separate public emoluments or privileges from the community, except in consideration for public services."

Although we have these two sections, declaring that all men are equal, and that no restriction shall be placed upon the political rights or capacities of any citizen on account of his religion, we have excluded ministers from certain civil privileges; and whilst we have declared these great principles of equality and freedom of opinion; yet, before the sound had ceased to reverberate in this hall, by which we gave utterance to them, we in another breath declare, that ministers of the gospel shall not hold a seat in the legislature. Now, my friend from Oldham voted, I believe, for this restriction on ministers, and does he think it contradicts the other sections of the bill of rights? I apprehend he would justify his vote for restriction on the necessity of an exception to the great truths contained in the bill of rights!

I am glad to hear that the gentleman from Henderson has not given up his resolutions, because I regard them as embracing the most important principles which we shall be called to act upon. I feel an abiding interest in their adoption. They assert a great, and just now, a vital principle. They proclaim boldly that there is no difference between property in slaves and other property, and I hope this convention will not separate without giving their opinion upon them! The voice of a great and united people must and will have its influence on the great political struggle which is now going on at Washington! For we shall let them see that we are united in the assertion of our constitutional rights—that we regard the property in our slaves as sacred as the property in any thing else—and that in the defence and protection of that property we mean to stand together. But I forbear.

I merely rose to say that I did not regard the section of the gentleman as liable to the objections made to it; although I thought it unnecessary, in consequence of the amendment of the committee, yet I will vote for it cheerfully.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the resolution of the gentleman a good deal abstract, but I do not see any objection to its general truth, nor do I think there is any impropriety in its phraseology. It is proposed that this resolution shall become a section of the constitution. In construing it, and ascertaining its meaning, if it be incorporated in the constitution, it would be considered in connexion with every other part of the instrument, and especially with that article of which it is to form a section, and the proper force and effect be given to every part. It is very general in its terms, and in the same article you find another section which is more particular and precise, and which admits the right of the government to take private property for public use upon making just compensation therefor. What is the construction then of the two sections? This particular provision is the exception, the qualification of the more general one which my friend from Henderson (Mr. Dixon) offers, to become a part of the constitution.

There is a section in general terms in the proposed project of a constitution which interdicts the withholding any right or privilege from the citizen on account of his religious opinions. But there is a qualification of it in another, which declares a man who entertains a religious opinion, by which he conceives it to be his duty to instruct his fellow man in christian doctrine, is denied a seat in the legislature. The state of case is just this: the constitution embodies general truths and principles, and also others specific, that are incompatible with and are intended to qualify those more general ones.

If this proposition be adopted, a man taking up the constitution and reading this section—"that absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, exists no where in a republic—not even in the largest majority;" and by turning to another section of the same article, he would learn, nevertheless, that private property could be taken for public use, but only upon proper compensation being made to the owner, the examiner would see no improper confliction, no discrepancy, but a plain declaration of a general right and immunity of the citizen, with a proper and necessary encroachment upon it, for which a fair equivalent was secured.

The other objections gentlemen make, are to the particular import of the words, "absolute arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, exists no where in a republic." A question arises, what is absolute and arbitrary power? We all know that private property frequently becomes necessary for the purposes of government; yea, that government could not be maintained and administered without the existence of the right to take private property for the public use. When this property becomes thus necessary, and is taken from the owner in virtue of a constitutional principle, which also provides it shall not be taken without making just compensation to the owner, the power is not absolute and arbitrary. What is absolute power? It is power without condition. It is power to take property without compensation. It is power upon mere will, and without limit. What is arbitrary power? It is power simply emanating from volition—a man's will without restriction, by which he wrests from an individual his property, when and how he pleases, in the exercise of his own mere purpose. When you say one may take private property without compensation—without any terms or condition whatever—without any imaginable restriction, it is absolute and arbitrary power: and nothing short of that is of such a character. When the constitution authorizes private property to be taken for public use, but requires the owner to be fully remunerated as an indispensable precedent condition, this cannot be, with any reason or truth, denominated an absolute and arbitrary power. It is a reasonable, proper, and necessary power of government. It is one consistent with the public liberty, and not an encroachment on it. I believe the exception taken to the language by several gentlemen cannot be sustained; but even if properly taken, it would be obviated, when we consider this clause in connexion with the other particular clause of the constitution, which necessarily is, and was, intended to be an exception to the general truths contained in it. But I am like the gentleman from Kenton, (Mr. Stevenson,) willing to meet this lion in my path, and I am ready to make the slavery question fully and at once. I lay down the position that the legal essence and nature of this property is identical with every other class of property whatever—that the owner of it has the same indefeasible, absolute, and inviolable right of property in his slaves as he has in his land or in his horses; and that no majority has the power to deprive him of it, in any manner, without compensation. And when I use the term power, I do not mean brute force, or the mere physical strength of numbers, but a function of legitimate government, that may be rightfully exercised. And I mean especially to proscribe any system of emancipation, immediate or prospective, of slaves in being or not in esse, without paying a full equivalent to their owners.

We know the power of the majority in a physical point of view is omnipotent. So a man, who has more strength than I have, assails me at night as I am going to my domicile, and says to me "stand and deliver," and I refusing, he thereupon fells me to the earth and rifles my pockets—this man has the power to rob me, but is it right on his part? Can an act, which, when done by an individual is robbery, change its moral turpitude when performed by a multitude? The majority of the men of this state are not the owners of the most valuable portion of its real estate. This majority may meet, and in physical power nothing on earth can overcome or control them, and they may proclaim a general agrarian law, and distribute the lands equally among themselves. They have no right to do this, and yet they have the physical power to do it, and as much right as to wrest from the owners of slaves their property. They might establish a regulation that no man shall own more than one hundred acres of land, and that those who have more, shall surrender it in trust, and the proceeds thereof shall go to establish a fund for the support of common schools, or a great system of internal improvements. There is an immense amount of money on interest in this state. It belongs to people who mostly have surplus means. Suppose now, the majority in this convention should make a provision in the constitution that the money thus loaned should be forfeited to the state, and it should be distributed among the poor to remedy pauperism, and to bring about in some measure that democratic equality of condition among our people, which is so congenial to our institutions. Here would be great and enduring objects of general good, to be secured or promoted by these measures. Their advocates could, with as much truth as the friends of emancipation in support of that scheme, say, "the majority have the right and must rule, and the minority must obey. Here are important measures resolved upon by this majority to secure the greatest good to the greatest number; and those from whom their property is thus taken, are compensated in the general advantage secured to the community, and no wrong to them, no invasion of their right of property is perpetrated?" Is there a man in this body of such mental or moral obliquity as not to understand and concede the mocking fallacy of such reasoning, and the flagitious injustice of such measures? And I defy the ablest and most astute champion of emancipation to show that there is any principles in our scheme of society which condemn those other measures, and at the same time authorized his party, if it was the majority, to emancipate the slaves without paying for them.

Let me illustrate this position. A. B. and C. own property individually, consisting of lands, slaves, and personalty, the right to all of which is sanctioned and secured to them by national and general law. They form a social compact, and they declare that their rights of life and liberty, except for crimes committed, their rights of conscience and freedom to worship God according to its dictates, and their right of property, except so far as it may be taken for their common benefit upon compensation being made jointly by them to the individual owner, shall be forever held sacred and inviolable. The property held by each of those persons so changes that A. becomes the owner of all their slaves, and B. and C. severally of all the lands and personalty belonging to them. The sentiments of B. and C. change—they believe it to be against natural justice and religious morality, against the convenience of themselves and the permanent prosperity of them all, that A. should longer hold his slaves. Can they justly and rightfully take them from him without compensation? If they, being the majority, will insist upon sending those slaves out of their community, ought they not to pay A. for them out of their common treasury? By the eternal principles of justice but one other alternative is left to them, and that is to leave themselves and seek a new country and a new home. Being the most numerous, B. and C. might by physical force seize the slaves of A., in defiance of his will, and deport them. But by taking this course they would substitute might for right. They would subvert the original and fundamental principles upon which they had planted their civil compact. They would not only change their government, but they would overthrow the order, forms, and rights, to secure which it had been framed, and with the surrender and destruction of which it never would have been made. They would bring on a violent revolution, and involve A. in a state of force and war. Weakness might constrain him to submit to the oppression; but by reason, by right, by universal law, he would be authorized by all his means and power to resist this wrong; and if able, to drive B. and C. from the community, and to seize upon all their possessions.

Our ancestors brought their slaves with them into this state when it was a virgin wilderness, and all institutions and laws allowed them to do this. When Kentucky became a state, their property in their slaves was recognized and confirmed to them by the first constitution. When the present constitution was framed, the pledge was solemnly renewed, and the inviolability of this property again carefully secured. Emigrants from our sister states were invited to come and bring it with them, and the citizen to invest in it his means. Its owners are spread over the face of the commonwealth, and they consist of men of all ages, of the minor, of the widow, the orphan; and they have those ancient and oft renewed guaranties. Its value is now more than a fourth of the aggregate wealth of the state. Its owners are entitled to the same security and defence in their possession of this property as those who hold any other property, and so long as the primary organic principles of our society, as right, justice, and faith, are observed, they will have it.

I am ready to meet the question at once, and declare to the emancipationists, that they have no right, no proper authority to emancipate the slaves by any system, without paying their owners for them. Their project would be an enormous and most calamitous infraction of the right of property—that most essential principle of civilization, which has contributed more than all the other forces wielded by man to bring him from a state of naked and ignorant barbarism to the highest improvement in arts, science, and letters. Without this mighty propulsive principle, he would now, in all his races, be lower in the scale, than the Blackfoot Indian or the Hottentot. If his arch enemy could expel the institution and right of individual property from the face of the earth, it would be a curse far transcending the aggregate ills with which he has afflicted the whole race since the fall of our first parents in Eden. It would bring back upon the world one long, never ending night of hopeless barbarism. The preservation of this inappreciable principle, would be cheaply purchased by paying a full price for all the slaves in Kentucky, when, if ever, the majority will emancipate them by the physical power of numbers. To escape the burthen of even this great charge would be no sufficient compensation to them or their children for losing in its position, the chief corner stone on which rests the vast fabric of social organization, and all the achievements of the industry and genius of man.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should not trouble the convention with a word on this additional section, were I not a member of the committee on revision; and I dislike to incorporate the same principle in several sections of the constitution. To the sentiments contained in the proposition of the gentleman from Henderson, I yield my hearty support. It asserts doctrines I believe to be true. The same principle is clearly set forth in the second section of the report of the committee. I would ask gentlemen to read that section. No language can cover broader ground, or be more extensive in its signification. Wherefore, then, the necessity of repeating the same doctrine in a different part of the constitution?

Mr. PRESTON. I am aware that sections such as this are often regarded as abstractions. An abstraction is sometimes the essence of experience. These great principles are the results of long practical knowledge and of long reflection upon acts of great importance to the welfare and happiness of mankind. The declaration that all men are free and equal, is the broadest political abstraction. The declaration that private property shall not be taken without compensation, and that the freedom of the press shall be inviolable, may be termed abstractions, but on such the foundations of liberty repose.

Two objections have been pressed against the proposed section. One by the President, and the other by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin) which I think badly taken.

This section uses the words "arbitrary power." Now what is arbitrary? The word is derived from arbitrium, the will, the judgment, meaning the unlimited will of an individual, as opposed to the will of the people expressed by law. The will of the Emperor of Russia is arbitrary. We declare that no ex post facto law shall be passed, that no law may be passed which will render that criminal which was not criminal when performed: a violation of these rules by power would be arbitrary.

The President says this section does not provide for the case that government may take property by making compensation. The reply is simple, and I think satisfactory. Such an act is not arbitrary. It is an act sanctioned by the constitution, and carried out by law. If a road is to be carried through a man's property, it may be done by ordering a writ of ad quod damnum. Therefore, this is in conformity both to the organic and statute law.

The gentleman from Nelson says the act of drafting is an arbitrary act. I deny it. It is in conformity with the organic law and statutes carrying out that law. It is no arbitrary exercise of power; but a legitimate carrying out of necessary power.

The second section has this language, and I want to show that the language of the gentleman from Henderson is preferable.

"That all power is inherent in the people and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness, security, and protection of their property. For the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper."

I grant the people of Kentucky have a right to alter their organic law as we are now doing, but I deny that we have the right to take the property of any citizen and appropriate it under our direction, or that we, by the act either of the legislature or this convention, can alter the slightest contract. Even if the federal government had not declared we should not violate the obligation of a contract, we could not strike down the rights of property on which society rests. If, like the French convention, we choose to constitute ourselves into a tribunal of force, we are in a state of revolution.

I never will admit that this convention has such power either over the lives, the liberties, or the property of the people of Kentucky. If we chose to exercise it, it would be repelled by every man in Kentucky who had a rifle in his cabin, or an arm to wield it.

Do you tell me we may appropriate property beyond the limits prescribed? If so, we are in a state of revolution. If this convention consisted of any other number than one hundred, it would not be a constitutional convention. If there were one hundred and fifty instead of one hundred members, we should not be a constitutional body. We are now a constitutional body, legally called, to revise the constitution in a certain specified way. If we had been elected as a mob—if one county had sent twenty members and another but one, I believe it would be declared by the sense of the whole community, and of the union, and of all the courts of justice, that this convention would be a nullity.

Imagine all the people of Kentucky assembled on one great plain, and that they had sent us here to alter their law. After the organic law is framed, they cannot alter that law except by the mode pointed out, or by going into a state of revolution. Nor can all combined, take by right, one man's property. We have therefore, no right to interfere with the rights of property, or curtail the rights of life or liberty, without revolution. For that reason, if the sergeant-at-arms were ordered to take property in any other than the mode prescribed, to seize an editor, or destroy a press, it would be criminal. We have a mode pointed out, and that mode must be pursued.

There is a clause in the section which I wish was out of it. It is that contained in the parenthesis ("except for crimes.") If one is legally punished for crime, he is neither punished by an exercise of absolute power, nor arbitrarily. I think these words mean nothing and should be stricken out. I deny that punishment executed in conformity to law, and under the government we have constituted for ourselves, is either absolute or arbitrary. It is legal, proper, just, and right, and one sanctioned by law, and commanded by the people.

I believe that in point of expression, in perspicuity, and in truth, this section is preferable to the one offered by my friend from Fleming, that, "for the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper."

That is all true. But government cannot be so framed as to deprive the citizen of his property. Grant the contrary, and the convention might have declared that all the negroes were free when this convention assembled. Such a principle would authorize the act by which the negroes in the French colonies in the West Indies were set free under the enthusiastic eloquence of Brissot.

That power I deny, and I deny that if the whole people of Kentucky were to come up here, they could rightfully destroy the principles on which our government is based, that they could enact a general agrarian law, or that our slaves should be emancipated without compensation. That is the point to which the doctrine tends, and it is for that reason that I suggested, heretofore, to the venerable gentleman from Nelson, that we are not in a state of revolution.

He replied that he was not to be terrified by that raw-head-and-bloody-bones of revolution being shaken before him. But I still firmly assert, that no body of men, nor all the people in Kentucky could deprive a single citizen of one dollar's worth of property, under any circumstances, by convention or otherwise, without paying a just compensation. Sir, to what a position are we reduced. All on this floor admit it would be a violation of the obligation of contract to repeal the charter of the bank of Kentucky. There is not a lawyer who does not know that would be declared a null act by any court in Kentucky, or in the union. Yet we are gravely told that this convention has power to take away all the property of every citizen. You cannot take away one dollar's worth of bank stock or repeal a charter, but you can take away the negroes, and the property of the citizen and divide his lands. They say this is no impairment of the obligation of contracts. If it be no impairment of the obligation of contracts, it is the impairment of a still greater obligation, and that is, the implied promise by which a man comes into a community under certain guaranties. He comes with the guaranties of security of life, liberty, and property. If a citizen of the United States were to come under the control of the Emperor of Russia, and he should declare, by an arbitrary edict, that his property should be confiscated, and that he should be exiled to Siberia, it would be a just cause of war. Why? Simply because he came into the country under the guaranties that no such tyranny should be brought to bear on him—a principle recognized by international law, and the practice of every civilized nation of the earth.

When we came with our slaves from Virginia, in 1799, we came under an implied guaranty that they should not be taken from us by any law, either passed by a legislature or a convention. Not three months have passed, since this commonwealth, by the agitation of the slavery question, was shaken to its centre. Establish the principle contained in the proposed section, and you cannot be legislated out of your property, nor conventioned out of it. Assert the opposite principle, that a majority may control it, and you vest a bare majority with the rights of plunder, rapine, and robbery, and establish "The good old rule, the simple plan,

That he may take who has the power,
That he may keep who can."

The right of property is not coeval with, but antecedent to, government. The rights of property originate in industry and labor, and are antecedent to written constitutions: those constitutions are framed to declare, to define, and to protect those rights.

If the constitution of Kentucky, and of the United States, were silent in regard to the obligations of contracts, and there were no such clause in them, even if they did not exist; still, by the great and immutable principles of justice—that justice which, in the jurisprudence of the world, has declared it is wrong to pass an ex post facto law, or to seize private property on those great principles apart from any constitution, the right is invulnerable by any civilized state. If a difference exist between slaves and other property, I defy any man to show the difference. I want to know who those enemies of justice are, and what sort of men they be. I want to know them for all future time, and that the states shall know them. This, Mr. President, is no abstraction; if so, it is such an abstraction as will affect our right to our slaves and $60,000,000 of our property—an abstraction that will give that property security, and give hope and unalterable reliance in the public justice. But if we refuse to put it in the constitution, it will carry uncertainty, insecurity, and dismay to all the slaveholders in Kentucky.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the section, by striking out, in the second line, after the word "crimes," the words, "exists nowhere," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "and, from necessity, should not be exercised." The proposed section, so amended, would read thus:

"Sec. 2. That absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, (except for crimes, and, from necessity,) should not be exercised in a republic—not even in the largest majority."

I am one of those, Mr. President, who from education, conviction, and if you please, from prejudice, regard the institution of slavery not only as no curse, but as a blessing to the community in which it exists. I am one of those who acknowledge, to its fullest extent, the existence of property in slaves; and I will go as far as any one, without sacrificing principle, to give security to this description of property. But, sir, while I avow my regard for this institution, I must also be permitted to say, that among the earliest lessons which I learned in politics, was the great maxim, "vox populi, vox dei"—the sovereignty of the people. I have been taught that it was incompatible with popular rights to impose limits to popular power. In my apprehension, the gentleman from Henderson (Mr. Dixon,) has permitted his zeal for the security of slave property to hurry him into this extreme, in offering the proposition now under consideration. I have proposed to amend it, because, sir, regarding myself as a friend to the institution of slavery, I should suppose I was doing an injury to that institution by advocating the proposition, as it was originally presented before the convention. I should regard its adoption as putting an argument into the mouths of the opponents of that institution—as giving a powerful handle to the advocates of emancipation in this state. They would say, "see the tendency of slavery! Behold how it attempts to bolster itself at the expense of popular rights!" I say it would be the ground-work of a powerful appeal, and I do not know what might be the result of that appeal—I do not know what might be its influence upon the people of Kentucky. I have always been taught to believe that, in popular governments, the citizen looked for the security of his rights—whether of person or property—to the justice of the people—that that justice was the only sure foundation on which individual rights repose—that whenever popular justice ceases to exist, then the rights of every man are in jeopardy. That, sir, is the view I have always entertained, and I want no better security than this for my life or property. Now, sir, what is the proposition asserted here? That "absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen (except for crimes,) does not exist any where in a republic." Does not exist any where, sir—not on the floor of this convention—not in the halls of our legislature—not among the people themselves! So long as the people of this country stand associated as a republic, no such power exists any where. Is that the proposition?

The gentleman from Bourbon says, this proposition is explained away, or, at least, that it is qualified by other propositions contained in the constitution, and that it must be taken in an explained and qualified sense. Now, sir, I contend that if the principle asserted in this proposition is wrong in itself, why then it is a contradiction to any other proposition, the principle of which is correct. For example, if in one part of the constitution a declaration of power is made as to any given subject, and in another part of the constitution that same power is denied or qualified, the two propositions being inconsistent does not make the one or the other true. Such a rule might be appropriate in the construction of an existing instrument, but could scarcely obtain in forming a new constitution, the provisions of which should consist with one another. The proposition under consideration is true, or else it is not true. It is true, that the same effective power which exists in other political organizations has been generated in the formation of our institutions, or otherwise—that the people have this power, or they have not. If they have not this power, denied to them in the proposition under consideration, they must either have yielded it up or else it must have been taken from them; and in either event it belongs some where else; for power cannot be annihilated. Where else does it reside? Not with the citizens individually; for then the political association would be dissolved into its original elements. Not with the general government; for it is not among the powers ceded by the States. In order to maintain the proposition it is necessary to demonstrate that the attribute of sovereignty does not belong to a republic.

Now, sir, in regard to the powers of this convention, are they limited, and if so, by whom, and what is the nature of the restriction? Is not all the power residing in the people for the time being, lodged in this body for the purposes for which they are assembled here? It is true, they might abuse that power, but that does not go to show that it does not exist. The liability to abuse power, does not necessarily carry with it a restriction of power. Gentlemen talked about "brute force." If you come to the question of morality, sir, how is that to be decided? How is it to be decided whether the popular action is right or wrong? How is it to be decided whether it is just or unjust? What superior tribunal exists? If you say that in the nature of things, powers of this character should not be exercised—if gentlemen will say because it would be unjust to infringe the rights of individuals who hold this description of property, that although the powers exist, they should not be exercised, I will go as far as any other gentleman on this floor—I will assert the moral obligation to maintain inviolate property of this description. Every right that belongs to the people either in their individual or social capacity, I will go as far as any one to maintain; but when you come to prescribe limits to popular power—to detract from the sovereignty of the state—however it may seem to interfere with my prejudices—however it may seem to interfere with an institution, the maintenance of which involves, as I think, the best interests of the country—however it may be supposed to interfere with the general welfare of the country—I say, however the assertion of such a principle might tend to maintain this institution, or however its denial may seem to interfere with it, I am not prepared to go to the extent which is contemplated in that proposition. While I maintain the existence of absolute arbitrary power in the people, in their political relation, I firmly and confidently rely on their justice for the security and preservation of my rights. I want no other guaranty. I shall never seek safety in attempting to abridge what I esteem to be their just rights and clear powers.

The gentleman from Louisville talked about "arbitrary power." He said, if I understood him, that arbitrary power was "power exercised in accordance with law." I don't understand it so.

Mr. PRESTON. I said that arbitrary power was the unlimited will of an individual.

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman says that arbitrary power is the unlimited will of an individual. I do not perceive the force of the definition. Arbitrary power, in my conception, is an attribute of political sovereignty. It may reside in a monarchy or in the people. The will of the people in this country is paramount to the law, which emanates from government, the creature of the people. It is to the government, what law is to the individual citizen, a rule for its action—if you please, an absolute arbitrary rule. It is in the formation of government, that the people exhibit their absolute and arbitrary power, by imposing restraints on delegated authority. Political association is a compact entered into from necessity, and that compact is exhibited in the organic law. Whatever it proclaims as the popular will—that constitutes the terms of the association—that sets out, limits, defines the powers which the people propose to delegate in their political association, and defines the various restraints against the abuse of delegated power. Now, sir, in our present constitution, on this subject it was declared that the legislature should have no power to emancipate slaves. What was the opinion of our forefathers in this matter? Without that provision in the constitution, they conceived that this power would have existed in the legislature. The proposition under consideration, on the other hand, asserts that it exists neither in the legislature nor the people. I don't say that it would be right—I don't say that it would conduce to the interest of the country to exercise this power. Very far from it. I think it ought not to be done; nay, I am very sure that it will not be done; but I am not prepared to assert the absence of a power which I believe exists with the people. Why, sir, Mr. Calhoun, the great Ajax Telemach of slavery, declares that the power alone exists in the states to abolish slavery; and if they have a right to abolish slavery, there can be no doubt that they are fully vested with the power of prescribing the mode in which it shall be abolished.

Gentlemen have talked about contracts. What contract is there, embracing this subject, which cripples popular sovereignty? Gentlemen have talked of immigrants bringing to the state their slaves, upon the pledge which the laws afforded of security to this property, and therefore any change in those laws would be violative of this pledge. Sir, to indulge such an idea would close the door on legislation. Popular justice is the only safeguard, the only reliance in popular governments, for the preservation of individual rights. Why sir, before the revolution, in Virginia the right of primogeniture existed; and there was such a thing as entailed estates. Are we to suppose that the abolition of the one and the conversion of the other into fee simple estates—that the repeal of these pernicious laws was a violation of individual rights, that the heir in entail was divested of his rights by a usurpation of legislative authority, and that by the exercise of arbitrary power not existing in the government, the eldest son instead of acquiring the whole property, acquired only so much as his younger brethren and sisters, (and this was made, in Virginia, to apply to slaves as well as to landed property.) Why sir, could they not, on the principle attempted to be maintained here, complain of the exercise of arbitrary power over the rights of property; for the right to hold property prospectively is as strong as to hold that which we already have,—could they have complained? No, sir; a great reform was accomplished, but even if it had been otherwise, individual judgment cannot array itself against the public will; the safety of individual rights is found in the intelligence which exists in the public mind. Shall we then attempt to place this kind of property above the sovereign power of the republic? The only powers which the people of Kentucky have parted with are those which have been ceded to the national government, or expressly relinquished in the federal constitution; and aside from this, they have a right to destroy this government and adopt any other form of government, not incompatible with the federal constitution—a right paramount to mere legislation in reference to property. The idea of property may exist by the laws of nature; but title to property is conventional and the creature of political association. The same power that created it can destroy it. Is it consistent with the laws of nature that one man should hold a thousand acres of land, and another man only a hundred, and a third none at all? By what sanction does such an unequal distribution exist? It is by the sanction of municipal law, and not by the laws of nature. Can you conceive of the existence of property in persons by the law of nature? Is it in accordance with the law of nature that one man should be held in bondage by another? No, sir; it is merely a conventional right. The same power, then, which gives efficiency to that right by enabling the possessor to maintain it, can destroy it.

Sir, I acknowledge the title to this description of property to be as absolute as any other in this country; I am as much in favor of its being perpetuated as any other gentleman on this floor; but I don't regard it as property acquired by the laws of nature, but by the laws of human government—the power which created it, which has continued it, and which, I say, is able to destroy it.

Gentlemen have laid great stress on the binding efficacy of contract, in relation to this subject, and I heard on a former occasion, when this question was under discussion, that there was such a contract as would bring any effort to destroy this description of property, within that provision of the constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. I am at a loss to discover the application of this postulate. A constitutional declaration, according to my apprehension, has none of the elements of a contract about it. What is a contract? It is an agreement between parties, able to contract and be contracted with, touching something properly the subject of such agreement.

The government, in the exercise of its legislative function, is prescribing a rule of action; and when an organic law is being framed, that rule has the same relation to the government that ordinary legislation has to individuals. It is true the government may come down from its political elevation, and assuming the attitude of an individual, make contracts with the citizen; but that is a very different affair from the prescription of a general rule of action. The case cited here on a former occasion of a grant of lands to Henderson by the state of Virginia, and the grant of lands in the state of Georgia adjudicated upon by the supreme court of the United States—I refer to the case of Fletcher vs Peck—are of the description of which I speak. But to suppose now that the government has made a contract with each individual citizen of the country, and that any departure from the terms of this contract would be a violation of our compact with the federal government, would be to fasten upon the country the original compact, and deny to a free people the right to modify their government. Suppose the original compact to be the present constitution, for as the last written expression of the public will it is the only compact we recognize; according to the argument in this case, we have assembled here in vain, and any attempt to change it would be a violation of private rights. Does not the argument go to that extent?

For these reasons, and for many others which might be assigned, I am opposed, utterly opposed, to the proposition under consideration—not because I am opposed to the institution of slavery—not that I would favor emancipation—but that I am disposed to place that institution, as well as every other right which I hold dear, upon the justice of the people; I am willing to rest it there; for whenever the people cease to be just, whenever they cease to be virtuous, all our rights and liberties must cease to exist. Without any regard, therefore, to such a proposition as this, or the amendment, (which I regard as preferable to the original proposition,) without feeling any necessity for hedging in this institution with extraordinary laws, I shall rest satisfied that the property of the country, of every description, is in perfect safety.

Mr. CLARKE. This section has been called an abstraction by some gentlemen. It is no abstraction or I think it would have met with more favor from the gentleman last up. This section contains a great principle, and I ask the convention to come directly up to it and act upon it. When we come to submit this constitution to the people of the state, it ought to be clear and distinct, in respect to the great rights asserted in the section proposed. A majority of the people of Kentucky may have no property in lands or slaves, and however sacred that majority does and may hold the rights secured by the section, still it is proper to assert in the fundamental law, that that majority possess no power, while this state remains a republican government, to divest those who have property in lands or slaves of that property. What does the section declare. The section declares that "absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen, exists no where in a republic. Not even in the largest majorities." Now the question is, does absolute and arbitrary power exist in any republic, over the lives, liberty, and property of the citizens?

If absolute and arbitrary power does not thus exist in a republic, then this section and the principle contained in it are true. Does it exist? If it does exist, then the converse is true. This is the great question which this convention is now about to settle. The very moment that a majority of the convention shall determine the power does exist, that very moment they destroy one of the elements, the great elements, that constitute a republican form of government. To take from me my property by a bare majority of the people of this state, without crime or offence being alleged against me, and without compensation and against my consent, is a high handed act of tyranny, the predominance of brute force over right, and incompatible with all forms or principles of free government. The exercise of such a power would be revolutionary and subversive of government itself. If you take away from me my liberty without forfeiture on my part, or my property, without making compensation to me, that instant you exercise such a power, or assert such a right—that moment you sap the foundations of all free government, and regulated liberty. What is a republican government? It is a free government created to secure the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property.

But would it be a free government if a bare majority or any majority could deprive a citizen of his property? It would be establishing without offence on his part, or compensation to him, the very worst system of agrarianism—a principle upon which the labors and earnings of the few might be seized and divided out amongst the many. Would that be a free government? Would it be a republican government? Is that a republican government where ten men, who have not a dollar in their pockets, have a right, because they are in a majority, to take ten dollars out of your pocket and divide them among themselves? It may be the right of the robber, who claims might as right—but no such power exists under a republican constitution. It is that government where the citizen is secured in the accumulation of property, and the enjoyment of it, and of life and liberty, that may justly be denominated republican. And no government is free where those rights are not permanently secured. And the very moment the converse of this proposition is established, we cease to be a republic, we cease to be freemen. Will any gentleman be so bold as to assert that absolute and arbitrary power over the lives, liberty and property of freemen, exists in a republic—that freedom can live and breathe and have a being—when a bare majority having the physical power shall trample down life, liberty, and the rights to property, at will and pleasure. Sir, such a power exists. It has been, and may again be exercised, but its exercise and existence was in revolution—and never in accordance with constitutional liberty, and such a power never did exist under a republican form of government.

Before my constituents I took the position taken by this section. I declared in upwards of twenty speeches that when the convention should assemble, they would have no power to emancipate slaves either in being or hereafter to be born, without making compensation. I went further, and said that they could not do it without the consent of the owner. In this I may have run the principle too far. But I asserted, then, and I here reiterate the sentiment, that the majority of the people of the state have no power, compatible with freedom, to take from the owner of a slave his property without making him just, and full, and ample compensation. I think it is quite seasonable, at this time to assert, yea and in the constitution, the great principle contained in the section, when we find a spirit pervading, more or less, some fifteen states of this Union, a spirit which is calculated to disturb the harmony that ought to exist in the confederacy—when we see congress thwarted in its organization at this moment by this same fell spirit—when from present indications this Union may be shaken to its very foundation—when we see that same spirit and those feelings now pervade the legislative councils of the nation, harrowing up the worst passions of the human heart—and asserting the right of numbers to plunder minorities of just and sacred rights. I ask, in the name of all that is dear and sacred to us and our children, is it not time that we should act, and act promptly and decisively? When we behold all these portentous dangers staring us in the face, it does seem to me that no ground, asserting correct and true principles can be taken which will be too strong. That the principle contained in the proposed section is right, I am prepared to proclaim and defend. That the reverse would be a violation of those rights which existed before the articles of confederation were adopted, none will be so bold as to deny. They existed when we composed a part of the state of Virginia. We brought those rights with us, and no absolute or arbitrary power under heaven can deprive us of them, consistent with regulated freedom. We brought our slave property here under solemn contract. We were told that we would be secure in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property—that such was the object and end of government; that for the protection of these inestimable rights, free governments were first established. How did we acquire the lands upon which are built your splendid cities, your lovely cottages—those broad acres, upon which roam your herds of cattle—by the same description of contract that slaves were acquired. Can a bare majority of this proud and glorious commonwealth, now having a voting population of from 150,000 to 175,000, and a slave population of 200,000, estimated at sixty millions of dollars in value—can a bare majority come up, and without forfeiture by, or compensation to the owners, seize that property and dispose of it consistent with republicanism; never, never, in my judgment without revolution. They can do no such thing. The moment such an attempt is made by society, that moment, if it shall be sanctioned and carried out—that moment this commonwealth ceases to be a republic, and it becomes a revolutionary despotism, in violation of right of principle, and in violation of all guaranties by which the enjoyment of life, liberty and property has been secured.

Having, before I was elected, taken the very ground which I have here taken, I felt it my duty to make these remarks. I never can concede the principle, that if I enter into a society with ten men, with the express understanding that I am to be protected by them, in the enjoyment of life, liberty and property—that six of them, consistent with that understanding, have the power to deprive me of either right, at will and pleasure. To concede it would be a base abandonment of principle—it would be to resign the title of freeman and to become a slave.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was first taken on the amendment of Mr. Mitchell, to strike out "exists no where" and insert "and, from necessity, should not be exercised."

Mr. MITCHELL called for the yeas and nays, and they were yeas 1, nays 87.

YEAS—William D. Mitchell—1.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Ben. Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, A. Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles O. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, T. N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—87.

So the convention refused to amend.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. DIXON.

Mr. MITCHELL called for the yeas and nays and they were, yeas 55, nays 34.

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, William C. Bullitt, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, J. H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, William Johnston, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—55.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Richard L. Mayes, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—34.

So the section was adopted.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved a reconsideration of the vote, adopting the section with the avowed intention to move to strike out the words "except for crime."

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved to strike out the words "except for crime."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT moved to amend, by inserting the following as a substitute:

"That absolute, arbitrary, unconditional power over the lives, liberties, and property of freemen, exists no where in a republic, not even in the largest majority."

The substitute was ruled out of order.

The question again recurred on the adoption of the section.

Mr. BALLINGER called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 57, nays 30.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, Thos. D. Brown, Wm. C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Wm. Cowper, Garrett Davis, Archibald Dixon, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thos. James, William Johnson, Geo. W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Jas. M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Geo. W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thos. P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White—57.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Wm. Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Richard L. Mayes, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—30.

So the section was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS offered the following as an additional section:

"Sec. —. The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction; and the right of the owner of a slave to his property is the same and as inviolable as the right of the owner of any property whatever."

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL desired that the section should lie over for future consideration.

Mr. DAVIS assented, and the section was laid over.

Mr. JAMES said the convention had for some time been laboriously employed, and the reporters had necessarily been still more industrious, and therefore he moved that the convention do now adjourn.

Mr. HARDIN moved that the convention do now take a recess.

The last motion having priority, it was first put.

Mr. RUDD called for the yeas and nays thereon, and they were—yeas 42, nays 44.

So the convention refused to take a recess.

Mr. JAMES then renewed his motion to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 38, nays 47.

So the convention refused to adjourn.

Mr. MACHEN again moved that the convention take a recess.

The yeas and nays were called for, and were—yeas 43, nays 42.

So the convention took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on general provisions.

The first section, which was heretofore passed over at the request of Mr. BULLITT, was taken up and read as follows:

"Sec. 1. Members of the general assembly, and all officers, executive and judicial, before they enter upon the execution of their respective offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation: I do solemnly swear, (or affirm, as the case may be,) that I will be faithful and true to the commonwealth of Kentucky, so long as I continue a citizen thereof, and that I will faithfully execute, to the best of my abilities, the office of ——— according to law, and that I have neither directly nor indirectly, given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge, to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, since the adoption of the present constitution of Kentucky, and that I will neither directly nor indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, during my continuance in office."

Mr. BULLITT. I move to strike out the words "and that I have neither directly nor indirectly, given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge, to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, since the adoption of the present constitution of Kentucky, and that I will neither directly nor indirectly, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person or persons, to fight in single combat or otherwise, with a deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, during my continuance in office."

I am opposed to that portion of the first section which provides that all officers of government, before they enter upon the execution of their offices, shall swear or affirm that they "have neither directly nor indirectly given, accepted, nor knowingly carried a challenge to any person, or persons, to fight in single combat, or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, since the adoption of the present constitution of Kentucky, and that they will not during their continuance in office."

This absolutely excludes the offender from office forever without the possibility of a pardon. As it is a constitutional provision, the executive cannot relieve a person from its penalties under any circumstances whatever. You thereby not only select the duelist as being the greatest offender of all other criminals, and deserving the peculiar vengeance of a constitutional provision, whilst you leave all other crimes to legislative action. You mark it out as a crime so peculiarly atrocious for a man to challenge another to a fair fight—though the quarrel may have been amicably compromised—as to be unworthy of executive clemency forever, and under all possible circumstances.

It is believed that the power of pardoning exists in every civilized government in the world, even in cases of the most atrocious crimes which can be committed. In the governments of Russia and Turkey, the strongest military governments known, the power of pardon exists in the monarch.

In every government, however despotic, this power exists somewhere. The laws must necessarily be general, and it is impossible for the law-maker to foresee and provide for all the cases which ought to form exceptions; hence the necessity of vesting this power somewhere. If the matter is left to the legislature, the governor can extend the executive clemency to all cases deserving a pardon.

The adoption of this section would be an interpolation of a criminal law into the constitution. This convention has power to establish a form of government for the people of Kentucky—to declare what department or body of men shall make the laws—who shall adjudicate on and expound the laws—and who shall execute them—but you have no power to do either of the three yourselves. Your powers are as separate and distinct from the law-making power, as those of the legislative, executive and judicial departments under the existing constitution are separate from each other. The entire constitution, which we are now making, is a restriction on the legislative power; yet we are asked to set them the example, in our own action, of violating the constitution under which we are now acting. If we possessed the power it ought not to be exercised.

It violates all proportion between crimes and punishments, which is necessarily made the basis of every well regulated code of criminal law. Why under our laws are so few crimes capitally punished? Because the lighter punishment is held out as an inducement to the aggressor to refrain from the last act—that of murder. The law should always hold out an inducement to stop the perpetration of crime. Hence robbery is punished more slightly than murder, and consequently the robber does not generally murder; but if robbery and murder were each equally capital offences, the robber would always murder, as thereby his chances of escape would be greater.

Under the existing laws, the man who commits a highway robbery and murder, or poisons his own wife and children, and is cleared by a bribed witness or juror, or is found guilty by a jury, and pardoned by the governor, labors under no disability; whilst the man who, under the most aggravated insult, invites another to fair and equal fight, is to be forever disfranchised, though the moment after he might regret the act and withdraw the challenge—thus punishing mere words, attended with no overt act of criminality, as an unpardonable offence. Here, instead of holding out the wise and humane inducement to its infractor to stop at those mere words, you invite to the crime of murder by withholding from the executive the power of pardoning the lighter offence.

A high principle of honor pervades society, teaching that a man ought to hold his character and reputation as dearer to him than his life. This is an ennobling, high-minded principle, worthy to be cherished and encouraged—one which we have derived by inheritance from our ancestors, and which we should inculcate in our children and transmit unimpaired to our posterity. Although it sometimes leads to excesses and even crimes, the good far overbalances the evil.

Duelling is the fairest mode of fighting known—and although perfect equality between the parties is unattainable by this or any other mode—it more nearly approximates to equality than any other. It is a high protection to females. In the northern papers we hear continually of suits brought by females for breach of marriage contracts and slander, whilst with us they are very rare. The prodigal young man, who may be wholly indifferent to a law suit, would often be kept under a most wholesome check by a fear of bodily chastisement. A certain and immediate punishment is generally found more efficacious than a much greater—if the last is remote and contingent, which any punishment must be—where it depends on the uncertainties of the law.

It operates as a restraint on the bully in high life. With us no man can succeed in politics or at the bar, if he suffers himself to be insulted with impunity. The people never respect a coward. It is notorious, that the most popular man would be defeated in a canvass before the people for any public office, if he permitted himself to be insulted and did not in some way resent it. We sometimes see a large man, from envy of the superior merits and talents of a rival bully, brow-beat and insult one smaller and more feeble in body than himself, for the express purpose of taking his practice from him. Suppose this is carried so far as to rub against, sneer at, insult, and spit in the face of the feebler man; and suppose the latter challenges and kills his adversary, I would ask, would any reasonable human being censure the act?

In this case the challenging party finding, that without any fault on his own part, his opponent is resolved by an unceasing persecution to destroy his utility to himself, his family and country, being the more feeble of the two, is compelled to resort to deadly weapons of some kind, either in a duel or street fight. In the case supposed, the challenger is strictly acting in self-defence, and doing from imperious necessity what nothing else could excuse.

That it might distress a good man to kill another in a duel under even the circumstances described, is admitted. If he permits himself to be considered and treated as a coward, he is certain to be miserable; and of the two I would prefer the first alternative. It is only in extreme cases that I consider the duel at all justifiable. The man who fights for revenge, and not for the protection of his own honor, is a murderer. I never did, nor can believe, that providence designed that one man, because he was weaker in body than another, should therefore submit to insult and injury, else why permit the invention of the revolver, which very nearly reduces the strong to the level of the weak.

It is a saving of human life. Out of the population of the city of Louisville, now numbering 50,000, there have been but two deaths from duels (which I recollect to have heard of, and I think I am not mistaken) during the whole period of its existence since its foundation in 1780. Where the duel is resorted to, men do not find it necessary to carry arms; and consequently, in case of a sudden quarrel, resort cannot be had to them on the instant. A second must be hunted up—arms provided—a challenge sent—time allowed the challenged party to prepare himself—all which usually occupy some days—thus giving time for the passions to cool, and for the intervention of friends, who in nine cases out of ten, effect a compromise; whereas, in a majority of similar cases, if the parties had been armed and a street fight had taken place, the result would probably have been fatal.

So long as public sentiment remains unchanged, you can only succeed in suppressing the duel by substituting in its stead, the common practice of carrying arms, and street fighting, by far, more fatal than the duel. That feeling of honor or chivalry, or by whatever name it may be called, which impels to self-defence, is innate with the Kentuckian, and neither law nor constitution can destroy it. I am authorised to protect the clothes on my back, and should I not be permitted to protect my honor and character the most important thing to me in life?

Until public opinion undergoes a material change on the subject of dueling, no human laws can suppress the practice. If mild, they will be ineffectual—if disproportionate and cruel, juries will not enforce them.

Whenever public opinion no longer requires the duel, it will wear out of itself, and never till then.

The only remedy must be found in a gradual amelioration of public opinion, strengthened and enforced by an able and efficient judiciary, with able prosecutors and upright jurors. For then, the duelist who fights from motives of revenge, or any other insufficient cause, and kills his adversary, will be hung as a murderer. No honest and intelligent jury, in such a case, would hesitate to find a verdict of guilty against the accused. If a man, with malice aforethought, seeks and accomplishes the death of another in a duel, without just provocation, he is to all intents as much a murderer, as if he had waylaid and murdered him. Then the punishment would light on the aggressor—and not as would often occur (under the clause proposed,) on the innocent equally with the guilty.

No punishment ever will be enforced if it be wholly disproportionate to the crime—nor will this people ever consent to inflict the same punishment on the man who is forced into a duel in defence of his honor, which should fall on the aggressor. It may be said that you will not only suppress dueling, but that you will avert the evil consequences of carrying concealed arms. By the imposition of taxes and oaths, you might possibly succeed in suppressing the practice among the upright and honorable, but the base man and assassin would wholly disregard any laws which you could impose; the consequence would be to put the honest man wholly at the mercy of the assassin, taking away from the good citizen the greatest protection which he has against the bad and the vicious.

In a country like ours, of a comparatively sparse population, where the accused is necessarily tried by a jury of his neighbors and acquaintances, it must always be extremely difficult to convict, capitally, for almost any offence—not from the want of a proper moral sense in the community or detestation of crime—but from that sympathy and feeling of compassion for our neighbor in distress, common to us all, which renders us, to some extent, incompetent to mete out to our acquaintance that even handed justice, which we would do to an entire stranger. For this reason criminal laws cannot possibly be as rigorously enforced with us as in crowded cities, where the jurors are unacquainted with the accused. Hence, it is a generally received opinion, that each man amongst us, must mainly rely on his own arm for the protection of his person.

Mr. NUTTALL. I do not flatter myself that I shall be able, on the present occasion, to convince the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Bullitt,) that he occupies a wrong position and is behind the age in which he lives on this great question. I look upon this as pre-eminently the great question of this convention, and one which should receive proportionate consideration. I desire to present some information to the convention on the subject, in the preparation of which I am indebted to the kind aid of another gentleman, and for which I desire here to accord to him my thanks. Since the foundation of the world, so far as history throws any light upon the subject, there have been but four descriptions of duels, and modern duelists would, if allowed, trace back to, and justify the practice by the celebrated combat between David and Goliath, or the famous one between the Horatii or the Curiatii. But there is a marked distinction between the motives upon which these contests were based, and those which govern and influence those who at this day engage in the duel. Devotion to country has, in all ages, been regarded as praiseworthy, and such was the motive which influenced the participants in the two celebrated combats to which I have referred. The Horatii and the Curiatii stepped forth between the hostile armies of the Romans and the Latins and staked the fate of the day upon their single prowess, and in so doing, they were not more guilty, in a religious and moral point of view, than they would have been, had they remained in the ranks and fought there, as they undoubtedly would have done, and slain each other. The ancient Scandinavians believed there was a providential control over the affairs of men, which especially decided between right and wrong, and making a direct appeal to Heaven to favor the right they resorted to personal combat to decide their controversies respecting property or any other of the rights recognized in their communities. This I presume was the origin of the trial by combat of the feudal ages. Was such a controversy based upon personal feeling or malice? No sir; it was a controversy between parties as to legal rights, and in the belief that an overlooking and overruling providence would determine the justice or injustice of the case, they resorted to a trial of arms. This notion became modified in the process of time, until, in the feudal ages what was known as the wager of battle was substituted in its place. The first mention of it is in the Burgundian code as early as A. D. 501. There is, I presume, scarcely a gentleman here—the legal portion of them particularly—who does not fully comprehend the history of, and the manner in which this wager by battle was carried out. It applied only to controversies as to the right of property in land, and for some curious and quaint reasons the parties never fought themselves, but always presented a champion to fight in their stead. Here, clearly, the combat did not arise from any resentment of personal injury or insult. In the appendix to Chitty's Blackstone will be found a description of the last effort made in Great Britain to settle a question of this sort by an appeal to arms. The whole court adjourned, and were cited to assemble in Tothill fields, and there to witness a controversy as to title to land decided by wager of battle. This was very much akin to the celebrated trials in the courts of Knights Errant, where a certain knight proclaiming that his fair mistress was the most beautiful and handsome of any, would throw down his gage of battle to any who dared dispute it. If any such, there were, the challenge would be accepted, and then in a great tournament, they would decide by force of arms, before that assembly of magnates and people of the land, who had the fairest mistress. And what is most extraordinary, this barbarous, cruel and bloody ordeal of trial by battle—withstanding the existence of the wise, learned, and distinguished men who gave being to the great system of English jurisprudence—remained the law of the land down to the time of George III, and was not repealed until the year 1818 or 1819.

Now I come to the origin of the duel as it is now practiced. That is a combat for the redress of personal or family injuries, fought with deadly weapons. It is the offspring of the trial by battle, and is governed by what is called the code of honor. This practice grew into such general use after Francis I challenged the emperor Charles V, that in the first eighteen years of the reign of Henry IV, over four thousand gentlemen fell in the duel. In that day the military spirit was the ruling one, and men were influenced largely by the sentiments avowed here by the gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Bullitt), that he preferred death to the tarnishing of his fair fame and character. This was the ground assumed, and thus the country who needed their services in a military point of view, was deprived of four thousand men, and not only that, but the number of widows and orphans necessarily created thereby, must necessarily have been considerable.

I have thus very rapidly, and I may add unsatisfactorily to myself, given something like an epitome of the rise and progress of the duel, as far back as I am able to trace it, and I will now attempt a similar sketch of the legislation of Christendom with a view to its suppression. The history of legislation for five centuries past is singularly uniform, especially in the results of such legislation. Ecclesiastical and civil enactments of the most stringent character have been made to suppress it. The Council of Trent, (section 25, chapter 19,) declared it to be a detestable custom introduced by the devil for the destruction of soul and body, and excommunicated not only those who fought, but their associates and even the spectators. Philip the Fair, in the 13th century, tried to suppress it, but the spirit of the age was too fierce to be restrained.

Henry II of France published the first edict prohibiting it in that kingdom, but this only seemed to increase the passion for it, and to make men stretch the usual points of honor, on the principle that honor exerts itself most in satisfying those points which are not of legal obligation, or are even in defiance of law. The parliament of Paris in 1599 declared duelists, and all those present either as assistants or spectators, to be rebels and transgressors of the law. Henry IV in 1609 ordained further, that all in any way concerned, all spectators, even those accidentally present who did not strive to prevent bloodshed, and all carriers of challenges, or of offensive or provoking words, should suffer in various degrees, by death, confiscation of goods, fines, imprisonment, loss of place, loss of power, etc. But I will not trouble the convention with further details of the legislation of Christendom, all of the same character, from this period down to the English statute of William. This statute extends to seconds, and all concerned, the punishment of banishment and escheat of moveables, and these statutes are still in force. In the case of Lt. Brundell, in the present century, his antagonist, second, and two others who were held accessories, were all convicted of murder and sentenced to death, though afterwards pardoned. And it will be found that almost all the great and good men of Christendom, although in some instances these were made to yield and fight duels, have always regarded it as a barbarous custom.

I desire now to show to the convention some specimens of the "code" which governs these sanguinary encounters. I will read from a "code of honor" published in Ireland, which is the only one I have ever seen, and which is a very curious affair indeed. If there is an American published "code of honor" I have never yet had the pleasure of seeing it. This purports to have been "settled by the gentlemen delegates of Tipperary, Galway, Mayo, Sligo, and Roscommon, and prescribed for general use throughout Ireland," where I presume it is still in practice. It contains 36 rules, of which the following are specimens:

"1st. The first offence requires the first apology, although the retort may have been more offensive than the insult. Thus A. to B.: "You are impertinent." B. to A.: "You lie." A. must make the first apology, and then, after the first fire, B. may explain away the retort.

"2nd. But if the parties would rather fight on, then after two shots each—but in no case before—B. may explain first, and A. apologise afterwards.

"3rd. If a doubt exist who gave the first offence, the decision is with the seconds; if they cannot agree, the matter must proceed to two shots or a hit, if the challenge requires it.

"4th. When the lie direct is the first offence, the aggressor must, 1st, beg pardon in express terms, or, 2nd, exchange two shots previous to apology, or, 3rd, three shots, followed by an explanation, or, 4th, fire on till a severe hit is given.

"5th. A blow is strictly prohibited—no verbal apology will atone for it. The offender must, 1st, hand a cane to the injured party, to be used on him while he begs pardon; or, fire till one or both are disabled; or, fire three shots, and then ask pardon without the cane.

"6TH. If A. give B. the lie, and B. retorts with a blow—the two highest offences—no reconciliation can take place till after two shots have been given, or a severe hit. B. may beg pardon for the blow, and A. may simply explain for the offence of giving the lie.

"7TH. Challenges for undivulged causes may be reconciled on the ground after one shot. No apology can be received in any case after parties have taken their ground, till after one fire.

"8TH. No dumb shooting, or firing in the air, admissible in any case.

"9TH. All imputations of cheating at play, races, &c., considered equivalent to a blow; but may be reconciled after one shot, on admitting the falsehood, and begging pardon publicly.

"10TH. Seconds must be of equal grade and rank with the principals, as the seconds may become principals.

"11TH. When seconds disagree, and resolve to exchange shots, it must be done at the same time and at right angles, &c., &c., &c."

This is the "code," though I do not know that it governs the duel in Kentucky.

The legislation of every state of this union, upon this subject, has been as uniform as that of the rest of Christendom, to which I have referred. It is true, as the gentleman says, that in the year 1799 there was a law enacted against dueling. That law was followed by the act of 1812, and if gentlemen will refer to the preamble attached to it, they will perceive that it was written by no ordinary man, and that it embraces within a few lines as strong arguments as could be deduced and elaborated in a whole day's speaking. It is as follows:

"Whereas, the commonwealth have repeatedly sustained great and irreparable injury, in the loss of some of her best and most valuable citizens; inroads have been made in private families; their peace, happiness, and domestic felicity destroyed, by the present inhuman practice of duelling; a practice contrary to the precepts of morality, religion, and civil obligation, which originated in a barbarous age, fostered by savage policy, and only perpetuated in this enlightened era by mistaken ideas of honor; for remedy whereof," &c.

The gentleman (Mr. Bullitt) contends that this legislation is all that is needed, but I must differ with him. It is true, that these laws have existed on the statute book from the very foundation of our government, down to the present time; but there has been a shameless and shameful violation of them at every session of the legislature of the commonwealth. If there is a class in Kentucky, who more than any other, have called on the legislature to adopt provisions for their especial use and benefit, I am ready to admit it is the profession to which I have the honor to belong—the lawyers. But from the first time that I had the honor of a seat in the legislature, I always opposed, and if I should be thus honored hereafter, I shall ever oppose this special legislation for the purpose of restoring gentlemen to privileges which they have forfeited by infractions of these laws. I recollect an instance, where one of my particular and especial friends, personal and political, who had challenged a man to mortal combat, made an application of this kind to the legislature, and I spoke against, and calling the yeas and nays, voted against them, and they were not granted. If you could enforce this law against dueling,—if you could in some way inspirit the grand jurors of the country with proper ideas of the obligations of the oaths which they take, and they would indict, and petit jurors could be induced to convict under it, there would be no necessity for this constitutional provision. And I think my friend from Jefferson introduced a strange argument here in support of the position which he occupies on this question. He says that if we have good jurors, able prosecuting attorneys, and independent tribunals, those who commit murder will be punished, and at the same time he goes on to declare, that for certain indignities offered to a man, the privilege of deciding the matter by the duel, ought to be allowed! I cannot see the consistency of such an argument at all. The killing of a man in a duel is the most deliberate, and the most malicious description of murder of which I can conceive, and every man who thus takes the life of his fellow man, deserves to be hung, and if I had the power of a court, I would have no more compunction of conscience in pronouncing the sentence of the law upon him, than I would upon a dog. And the gentleman's idea that dueling is a saving of human life, strikes me as the most extraordinary one that ever I heard promulgated. It is in fact, an argument against himself. Duelling has been practiced in this country ever since its earliest settlement notwithstanding the laws against it, and does experience show that it has caused a saving of human life in the way the gentleman contemplates? He states, that in Louisville, from its earliest times down to the present, but two men have been killed in duels, while upwards of an hundred have been killed in rencontres. Therefore, this practice which has been almost unchecked, does not, as he contends it would, prevent these bloody street butcheries. And I do not think with the gentleman, that we must be cursed with one or the other of these alternatives—a street fight or a duel. I think that legislation can be devised which will suppress either the one or the other under proper constitutional direction, and oblige men to resort to some other means of settling their personal controversies. The bill that I introduced when in the legislature, and which became a law, is a sufficient demonstration of the facts, that with a little more stringent provisions in our constitution and laws, there never will be a duel fought in Kentucky.

Duels formerly were of frequent occurrence in this state, between men with families, dependent on them, but since the adoption of that which made all on the ground, spectators as well as participants, responsible to the wife and children of the man slain, not a married man has been engaged in a duel. It is too great a risk for his antagonist to incur. All this is evidence of what may be effected in correction of this evil. And the experience in Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, are all triumphant examples of the fact, that men can be restrained in this matter, by constitutional enactment, without those direful consequences resulting therefrom, which seem to haunt the imagination of the gentleman from Jefferson. If dueling can be suppressed in those states, by a constitutional enactment, I ask in the name of high heaven if it cannot also be put down in the same manner by the people of Kentucky? The constitution of Louisiana utterly disqualifies every man concerned in a duel, from the principals down to the spectators assembled to witness it, for the holding of office. What has been the result? Not a duel has been fought by the citizens of Louisiana, since the adoption of that constitution. Nor have those direful consequences anticipated by the gentleman, resulted from the prohibition of the duel there. Have we heard of men being slaughtered in public rencontre, or of private assassinations prevailing since that time, to an unusual extent? No sir. And I will say to the gentleman, that in my opinion, the man who at any time would be mean, cowardly and dastardly enough to assassinate his enemy, will assassinate and stab in the dark, with or without such a provision as is here proposed in the constitution. A high minded, honorable man, no matter to what extent his feelings have been wounded or outraged, would rather submit to it, any indignity to which he might be subjected on the face of God Almighty's earth, than to have it charged upon him with truth that he attempted secretly and cowardly to assassinate his insulter. For myself, I would rather be charged with the most heinous offence that blackens the long catalogue of sin, than to lie under the imputation of having, cowardly and secretly attacked my enemy in the dark.

And shall it be said that this convention, who have now in their hands, the power to cut up this evil, by the very roots, has not the moral courage to march up and perform this work. Will they refuse to apply the knife to this corroding ulcer that is eating into the very vitals of the body politic? Will they not at once arrest this deep and deadly poison that is diffusing itself through every vein and artery of the social system? Have we not, I ask, the moral courage to do it, and ought we not to do it? Who is to be injured by it? It is time, and we now have it in our power to throw a bulwark of protection around the citizen, which ten thousand times ten thousand volleys from the artillery of detraction will never be able to batter down. All that the good and virtuous citizen, the friend of peace and good order fears, is the expression of a misguided and mislead public opinion, and I would in this constitution give him a protection behind which he might entrench himself, fearless of the scorn, sneers and detraction of any man on earth.

I would like to know from the advocates of dueling here, what is gained by a resort to that practice. Let us take the case stated by the gentleman (Mr. Bullitt.) I am a larger man than he, and I spit upon him and offer such an offence to his sensitive honor that satisfaction only can be obtained by calling me into the field to fight him. Suppose he calls and I do not come? Well, he would have the pleasure of posting me as a coward; yet every body who knows me, knows that if he would do that he would post himself a liar. But suppose I do go, and fight him, and kill him, what has he gained by it? Or, suppose he kills me; what has he gained even then? He has committed a murder in the eyes of both God and man, and my blood will cry to heaven against him, but he has not acquitted himself of any thing or convicted me of any thing. I know of no offence a man can offer to another, for which, if he is an honorable man, suitable and ample atonement cannot be made. The elder gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) may say that I am a thief. Well, I challenge him for it, and we go forth and fight. I think I would display but little sense in putting myself on an equality with a man who had no more regard for truth than to make such a charge against me. A man outrages and insults your feelings and you challenge him, and what do you gain? He has insulted you and outraged your feelings, and yet you turn around and invite him out to the field and give him an equal chance to kill you in the bargain! That is a kind of philosophy, laying aside the question of morality, which I confess I cannot comprehend. If the result of a duel established any fact or proposition, then I might comprehend the grounds upon which gentlemen support the practice. I know of but one case under heaven, and that is the strongest it is possible to imagine, where blood alone could atone for the injury. A man insults the wife and daughter of another, and will gentlemen say that in such a case a challenge ought to be given? My God, can it be that public opinion will exact of me that I shall place myself on a perfect equality with a demon in human shape, who could be so base and dastardly as to inflict an injury upon the feelings of a woman? A man has attempted to rob you of all that is dear and sacred in human life, and in the next moment you are to call him out and give him a chance to kill you! It cannot be—the proposition is too outrageous. The only way I would treat such a being as that, would be to meet him with a gun, and shoot him down, with no more compunction of conscience than if he was the fiercest wild beast that ever inhabited a forest. And I would fearlessly rest upon a statement of facts and appeal to the people of the country and to the pardoning power to save me from degradation for that act, for I know that such an appeal would not be in vain.

I say, then, that it is our bounden duty to provide in our organic law, that any man who fights or is accessory in any way to a duel, shall be disfranchised from the holding of any office of profit and trust under this commonwealth. I can see no danger that will result from it. I know that many high minded, honorable men differ with me on this subject, but I cannot but think that if they will recur to their recollection from the earliest period to the present time, of the melancholy consequences that have resulted from these encounters, they will not hesitate to place a barrier in this constitution that will operate to prevent any such occurrence in future. Sir, very frequently has the cup of conjugal bliss been turned to gall and wormwood—the parents been robbed of an estimable and promising son—and wife widowed and the children orphaned and thrown on the cold charities of the world—by the result of a duel. And I have known even the virgin heart widowed by this barbarous and cruel practice. It is in many instances, in its results, like running a red hot plough share over the human soul. It is a practice which had its origin in barbarism, and in a christian country like this, should be detested and abhorred. Let us provide for its expulsion from among us in this constitution, by giving tone and protection to a sound, and wise, and christian public sentiment on the subject. That is all that is now needed, and that is all I desire.

My only desire is to act for the best interests of the people of Kentucky, and the only reward I look to is the good opinion of my coadjutors here, and the commendation of that people. Above all things on earth do I despise the fulsome adulation of the man, who like a whining, sneaking spaniel-pup, crouches before me, hoping that I may cast him some vagrant crumbs; or the ephemeral praise of some vulgar, dirty black-guard, who is prompted only by a fear that I may injure him. And if I have the esteem of my compeers in this body, I shall be satisfied, notwithstanding the slanders and traductions that may be heaped upon me by every little whipper-snapper who is so fortunate or unfortunate as to be the conductor of some vile thumb-paper. I have come in with other gentlemen of this convention, for a full share of the vile abuse and the mean and dirty calumny which sundry little dirty pups, who have come into this lobby during the session, have thought proper to vent upon us in their correspondence to certain newspapers. I can live down such calumny, or else I have lived to no purpose. If I cannot live it down, I am not worthy of a seat on this floor. And these attacks excite in me no other emotions than those of mirth. The highest reward I seek, is that when the impartial historian comes to give a full and fair account of the action of this body, it shall appear that I bore some humble part in bringing about this grand and glorious revolution on this great question. And rather would I prefer that when I am borne to my final resting place, a loving family and circle of friends and neighbors shall cluster around it, to drop a tear to my memory, than all the fulsome praise that can now be spread upon me.

I do hope that the action of this convention on this great question, will be proper, wise and just, and if I were a righteous man, and it would not be mockery for me to do it, I would implore kind heaven to so guide the deliberations of this convention upon it, as to advance the happiness and prosperity of our noble old commonwealth.

Mr. CURD moved the previous question, but it was not sustained.

The question was then taken by yeas and nays—on the call of Mr. WALLER—on the motion to strike out, and it was negatived—yeas 32, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Charles C. Kelly, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, William

Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Rogers, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe.—32.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Wm. R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson.—56.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved to amend so as to include all members of the bar within the operation of the provisions of the section.

Mr. TURNER. I hope the amendment will be accepted by the friends of the section. It is right and proper, and its only object is to include the young men of the legal profession.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERS moved to amend, so as to require all officers to take the oath to support the constitution of the United States, as well as the state.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved to extend the prohibition to cases where an individual had worn any concealed deadly weapon except for self-defence.

Mr. HARDIN. I hope this amendment will not be adopted, and I think it is offered by a gentleman who is not very friendly to the section. Those, therefore, in favor of attempting to put down dueling, ought to vote against the amendment. I will not say that the gentleman is opposed to the section, but if I may be allowed to guess, it would be that he is not very friendly to it.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I have no hesitation in stating that I am directly against the section as it now stands. If the amendment I have proposed should be adopted, I do not know that even then I should be in favor of the section, but I should be strongly in favor of such a law. I think it is peculiarly unfortunate that this section is proposed to be introduced into the constitution at all, as it places members in an exceedingly embarrassing position. There are many of us who not only are not favorable to duels, but desire to prevent and to stop them, and yet we do not believe this to be the proper way to do it. Nor do we believe that the penalty affixed to the act of giving, sending, or bearing a challenge, is approximated at all to the degree of the offence. There are other offences known to the laws infinitely worse than bearing a challenge—than giving and accepting a challenge, or than fighting a duel even, which gentlemen do not pretend to provide for in this constitution, by disfranchising the persons who shall be guilty of them. What would be thought of a proposition in this constitution to disfranchise any man who should be convicted of seduction—a crime, in my estimation, infinitely worse than a duel? The punishment is not proportioned to the offence, and it is the wrong place to apply the remedy. And it is extremely unjust, unkind, and uncandid in the gentleman from Henry, (Mr. Nuttall,) to place all those opposed to the enactment of this section in the constitution as being in favor of dueling. I am as much opposed to dueling as any man ought to be. I have never fought a duel, nor do I know that I ever shall; but I will go so far as to say that there are circumstances and conditions in which a man might be placed where he ought to fight. And in such a case it would require some stronger inducement or restriction than this section to restrain a man from giving or sending a challenge.

The gentleman has drawn a mournful picture of the evils which have been brought upon families by this practice—of widowed wives, children bereft of fathers, sisters of brothers, and lovers weeping over their loss; and this section he intends as a remedy for all these evils, and to dry up this fountain of tears. I would be glad to wipe the tears from all eyes, and to stop and stay the march of crime in this land of ours, but I ask gentlemen which has produced most misery and mourning in Kentucky, the duel or the bowie knife? Which, I ask, has shed most blood, the fair and open combat or the knife of the assassin? I do believe from my heart, that if we insert in our constitution a clause such as this, we shall compel men to resort to some other means of redressing grievances than the duel—the knife for instance. And despite all the eloquence of the gentleman, he knows that there are aggressions that may be committed on him or me for which the life of the aggressor alone could atone. The world could not hold us both. What is best to be done in such a case? If we stop the duel, and insults of this kind are offered—and we have it from the lips of Him who “spake as never man spake”—that “offences will come”—something must be done at once to check the other mode of avenging grievances—that of street fighting or assassination. Now, if gentlemen want to correct the public morals, and to stop the flow of human blood, if they seek to dry up the tears of the widow and the orphan, and if indeed they desire to surround the citizen with a panoply which will be a guard against the knife of the assassin as well as the bullet of the duelist, I beg of them to insert this clause of mine in the constitution. I shall vote for my amendment sir, and hope it will be adopted, but I shall vote against the section in any event, believing it to be wrong to incorporate it in the constitution, and that it must make, necessarily, hundreds of enemies to it, and because the punishment there laid down as falling upon that kind of offence with certainty, will not be considered by the people of this country as just and fair and proportionate to the offence itself.

Mr. PRESTON. Is it in order to offer a substitute for the section.

The PRESIDENT. It is not in order.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I will offer it when it will be in order. It is with some degree of pain that I have witnessed the vote upon this subject, and I intend, as soon as the pending amendment is acted upon, to offer an amendment providing that the legislature may take this subject, which is one that should be regulated by legislation, under their control. I deem it most unwise for us here, to place the citizen in such a situation, that in the instances alluded to by the gentlemen from Jessamine and Jefferson, (Messrs. A. K. Marshall and Bullitt,) he will be compelled to take such an oath before he can go into office under this constitution. I am no advocate of the duel, but it seems to me we are seeking to apply a remedy against it that will outrage human nature. What is the proposition here? It is to incorporate in the organic law of the state, what the public sense of justice, of clemency, and of rights, has never permitted to rest in quiet on the statute book. Year after year have you seen your legislatures covering the statute book with evidences that the laws on the subject of dueling imposed penalties which the public opinion of our people could not tolerate. And yet it is here proposed to incorporate those laws in the face of that public sentiment in the organic law! I have now lived thirty two years. Many of my friends and the companions of my boyhood have grown up with me, and many of them were men possessing erroneous principles with regard to the taking of human life, and the revenge of insults. In that time some twelve or fourteen have perished in violent affrays in the streets, and I have never known but one who fell in fair and honorable duel. And why is this? It is because a thousand opportunities exist of effecting a reconciliation between parties where a challenge has passed and a duel is proposed, and the difficulty by the interference of friends may be adjusted; but in the murderous street fight the parties excited with passion, heed no one, and arming themselves, go forth in the thoroughfares and the by-ways, and there in a bloody affray, to the terror of every passer-by, settle their quarrel with the knife and the pistol. That is the way in which it is done. It is murder stalking abroad. By that section in effect, it is said that all this is right and proper, for human passions will have vent; but if it is a duel, the participants shall be disfranchised. Opportunity being thus denied for the honorable adjustment of difficulties, men are to be driven to resort to street fighting! How many are they in this hall who have had friends perish in fair and open duel? Few, very few. But let me ask, how many of your friends have been butchered by the knife of the assassin? Are we then to be reduced to this system of ruffianism. Are we sir, in a spirit of false humanity, to drive the torrent of human passion into a foul, instead of a fair and honorable, though reprehensible channel? I can never consent to do it sir. If the wife of a man's bosom is taken from him and carried by a seducer to a foreign land, if his domestic hearth is thus polluted, it is a crime so far beyond that which the duelist has committed, that it will justify no parallel, and endure no comparison. But what would be said if we, the lawgivers of the land, should here declare that the adulterer should be disfranchised? And are we then to place the men of honor, who carry or accept a challenge, the various great and distinguished men of this country who have given and accepted challenges—the Clays, the Jacksons and the Rowans—upon a footing beneath that of the vilest felon who inhabits the penitentiary? They may be pardoned by an exercise of the executive clemency, and restored to the rights of freemen. With this provision in the constitution you declare it to be out of the executive power to restore to his rights the disfranchised gentleman who has carried a challenge or fought a duel. The vile wretch who murders for hire, may be pardoned and restored to his civil rights, but he who meets his adversary fairly and openly in the field, it may be, through a mistaken sense of honor, is to be excluded forever from all claims for mercy. Behold your fine speeches about mercy and executive clemency; and yet if a man, influenced by a keen sense of honor, meets his adversary face to face, and scorns the use of the bowie knife and concealed weapons, where do you place him? Down below the adulterer, down below the seducer, down below the murderer, and down below the vilest felon in your prison. I tell you the feelings of the people of Kentucky will not tolerate this most extraordinary injustice. They have not tolerated it to this extent in other states, and will not in Kentucky.

I have never in my life given a vote with more cheerfulness than that to-day, to prohibit the bearing of concealed weapons. But if combats take place in this state—and they are as certain to occur as any other violations of law, arising from misdirected and ungovernable passions—let us induce them to be of a character where opportunities of reconciliation may be afforded—where difficulties may be adjusted, and in which the great and magnanimous character of the people of my native state will not be reduced to the ruffianism of the worst portions of the south. Preserve and guard us from the bloody rencontres which have occurred during the last summer. The same feeling which prompts a man to the duel, has—as is often the case with other misdirected feelings—given birth to the noblest sentiments that elevate and adorn the human character. It is that feeling, in a great degree, which has ever given dignity, strength, and manhood to our delegations in congress, and made our people among the most gallant and chivalric of the soldiers ever engaged in the battles of our country. Venerable age may tell me that I am in favor of instituting a bloody code, but I deny it. I only desire to fall back upon it, because it is the least of two evils, which the experience of the past, fraught with wisdom, has demonstrated. I have never borne a challenge in my life—I have ever refused to do so, and I have often attempted, and on some occasions with success, to reconcile differences. The very procrastination incident to the arrangement of a duel, gives an opportunity for its adjustment, which is never obtained under the ruffianly practice of street fighting. And this is the main reason why I protest against the introduction of such a feature as this in our constitution. If I speak on this occasion with warmth, it is because I feel that I speak honestly and sincerely; not that I ever expect to claim the benefit of this bloody code, for I abhor it. But why should we especially seek to place the man who commits a crime of this character, utterly without the pale of mercy? Why not leave the matter to the regulation of the legislature, the sovereign representatives of the people, who may assemble hereafter? Suppose this provision had existed in our constitution at the time the statesman of "Ashland" engaged in a duel with Humphrey Marshall, or when he of Tennessee was similarly engaged, would not the country have been deprived of those great services and talents, the high character of which is conceded by all, however opposed to them? Either this would have been the case, or else they would have resorted to the barbarous alternative of the street duel.

But the sense of justice of the people would have torn such a provision from the constitution, rather than to have suffered such men to be disfranchised and degraded, and deprived of all the honors of the state, for all time to come. I am willing to let the duelist remain—so far as regards the operation of the law—in the same position with the seducer and the culprit, stained with all the offences that blacken the catalogue of human crime—I am willing to leave his transgression subject, like others, to the control of the legislature; but never put such a feature as this in the constitution. Do it, and the result will be like the laws of Massachusetts, which, instituted by the pilgrims, after the Mosaic code, punished fornication and adultery with death—it will never be carried out. They were too rigid for the frailties of erring human nature, and experience has demonstrated the futility of laws so tyrannical that mankind will not execute them. Take the law against dueling now on the statute book, and you will find that year after year, in obedience to the sense of justice and mercy pervading the people, the legislature has exempted individuals from their penalties, until the law itself has almost been virtually repealed. Why then is it now sought to incorporate its provisions in the constitution? Do you expect in this way to compel or repress public sentiment in Kentucky? Shall we put that in the constitution which the people will not permit to remain on the statute book? That is the point, and the true point. Here is what I intend to offer and to stand by, and what I hope the convention will accept:

"The general assembly shall have power to pass laws for the suppression of dueling, and for excluding from the right of suffrage, and eligibility to all offices of honor or profit under this commonwealth, all persons who may hereafter be engaged in duels."

This is what I desire to have done. I desire that gentlemen, and particularly the challenged party in a difficulty of this kind, shall be within the reach of executive clemency, and not be placed on a worse footing than the murderer, the adulterer, and the common felon. Adopt this provision in your constitution, and not only will this be the result; but you exclude and forever disfranchise distinguished and talented immigrants from other states and other lands, who might have been engaged in affairs of this kind, and who might desire to settle in your state. You declare to them, that they shall forever be excluded from all stations of honor and emolument in this state. Should the heroic and courageous Kossuth himself, he who stands in the front rank of the advocates and defenders of human freedom, and who would be an acquisition of which any country might be proud—proscribed and driven from his crushed and bleeding country—seek a refuge in Kentucky, it would in effect debar him, had he, under the sentiments of honor which prevail in his land, participated in a duel. He would, under this section, forever be deprived of the privilege of every American citizen—that of eligibility to office. Away, then with such a principle. I tell you it is wrong. I feel that it is wrong, and when I feel so, I know that I can denounce it. My sense of justice has never been so outraged by any act of this convention, as by this proposition to put forever under the ban of constitutional disqualification—without the pale of repentance—the hope of reprieve, or the power of pardon, every unfortunate gentleman who has been forced into an affair of honor.

Mr. HARDIN. I was very much in hopes that the session would draw to a close in the course of eight or ten days, and have not been disposed to trouble the convention with more than a word or two on a subject at a time. But to-day the debating has taken a new turn to my mind, and every gentleman who makes a speech puts me in mind of the boy who had a large piece of bread, and a small bit of butter; so anxious was he to have bread and butter, he spread his butter over his bread so thin, he could not taste the butter at all. So with the speeches, they are so extended they lose their whole force.

The act of the assembly of 1811 on dueling, was drawn up by myself, and carried through the house of representatives by the aid of a gentleman one year younger than myself, Mr. Solomon Sharpe, one of the ablest and most eloquent men ever born and raised in Kentucky. And with the exception of a single verbal error in the printing—"have" for "has"—it now reads precisely as it was drawn. I thought then, and I still think it to be a most excellent law. We had, sir, ever since Great Britain and France advanced a step beyond barbarism, and in this country ever since its foundation, the severest possible laws against dueling. In the course of my reading as to the history of mankind, I have turned my attention some little to this subject, and sir, from the days of Nimrod, the mighty hunter of Babylon, down to about three hundred years ago, I have not found a single instance where a private, personal quarrel was settled by a duel. In every case where there were personal combats, they were for public and not private considerations. The private combats before the walls of Troy, and the walls of Jerusalem, were fought by men in each of the armies opposed to each other, and in behalf of each army. Such was the character of the case referred to by the gentleman (Mr. Nuttall) between the three brothers of the Horatii and the Curia-tii. There the fate of the battle, it was agreed, should turn upon their success. There is no instance of the modern duel presented until we come down to time when Francis I, of France gave the challenge to Charles V, king of Spain and Emperor of Germany. There the practice took its origin, and it has been in existence ever since. And why is it? Because there is a notion, a ridiculous kind of opinion going abroad, invisible, intangible, and which no man can touch, called the code of honor, which compels a man to fight in certain cases. Thus: do you want to kill me? No. Do I want to kill you? No. But there is some imaginary insult,—some supposed injury, and some sickly sensibility feels itself insulted, and asks for an explanation. The man who is asked is a little too proud to give it, and the parties correspond a while, and finally fight—and all about nothing. In a case where a real insult is offered, and a man gives another the lie, it ends generally in a fist fight, and there is an end of it. If it is an outrageous insult, such as seducing a man's wife, or his daughter, the offender is generally shot down at once, and he is served pretty near right in having the thing administered to him in that way. It is only for small, imaginary and idle insults that men fight duels.

But says one gentleman, we must have a provision against the carrying of concealed weapons if we desire to guard against this terrible shedding of human blood. I should have no objection to that if it were possible to carry it fairly out, but we all know how indefinite such a provision would be. Here is a miserable old penknife that I carry, and it is a weapon.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. Deadly weapons are referred to.

Mr. HARDIN. It would be a deadly weapon if used as Jesse Swearingin did once an old penknife upon Mr. Gentry. He struck him with it in the breast, and it just touched his heart, and killed him instantly. But there is no need to make the carrying of concealed weapons a test of office, because the very conviction of a man for such an offence, would be punishment enough to deter him. But if you arraign the duelist for his offence, where will you try him? We all know what public sentiment is on such a subject. Have you ever heard of a man in Kentucky, being convicted of killing another in a duel? No sir, and why? Because the public sentiment—though in the teeth of the law—will not convict a man for that crime. The statute of 1811, for eight or ten years after its passage, did a great deal of good, but after the legislature got into the practice of relieving them from the effect of its operation, and during the last five and twenty years, I think I hazard nothing in asserting that every year has witnessed the addition to the statute book of a relief law of this kind. And instead of requiring the oath to go back to the passage of the law, the oath only goes back to a certain day in the last session of the legislature.

What I desire is, that there shall be created a sufficient apology to public opinion for the man who will neither give nor accept a challenge. No man wants to hazard his life or jeopardise that of another, or to give a challenge, or to accept one—but he makes the sacrifice in obedience to a false notion of honor. All I desire is, then to furnish an apology to public opinion for a man's refusing to be bound by this false notion of honor. But, says the gentleman, if you do not allow challenging, you will have street murders. Do we not hear of them being committed now all over the country? And who are the perpetrators of them? Why, by the young Hotspurs of the land. This provision is not now in the constitution, why do they not resort to the duel in these cases. Just because it suits them better to kill without a duel than with it. They become excited, and under the hope and confident belief of being cleared from the consequences through the influence of their own family and powerful friends, they are tempted to commit the crime. I could name to you as having occurred in the last ten years, some of the most flagrant and atrocious murders where the parties could have fought it out in a duel. But there is a desire in the country on the part of a great many men, to indulge their violent and angry passions because it gives them a reputation of being brave men.

Sir, there are a great many men who are skilled in the use of weapons, and are ready to show their bravery by fighting and killing you, that would not storm a battery as quick as you, if they were at the head of an army. They practice themselves in the use of weapons—some with the small sword and others with pistols—until they become exceedingly expert and they are able to come on the ground with a confidence in their superior skill that unnerves their antagonist and gives them additional nerve. Nor are these combats on an equal footing in other respects. Here is a young gentleman with no wife and family, to whose reckless feelings life is nothing, and he is ready enough to fight. Another young man of five and twenty has a wife and family of four or five little children so near an age that you can hardly tell which is the oldest, and all dependent upon his daily exertions for their bread. The risk therefore is all on his side. One of Alexander the Great's successors called Antigonus, noticed among his soldiers one who was conspicuous in the army for his daring courage and disregard of danger. Sending for him, he observed that the soldier looked pale and sickly, and he asked him what was the matter with him. Said he, "sire I have long since lost my health." The king ordered his physician to attend him, and save his life if possible. He complied with the injunction, and restored his patient to robust and vigorous health. The king observing that he no longer exhibited that courage and daring which previously characterized him, sent for the soldier a second time, and asked him what had caused this change in his conduct. "Sire," replied he, "your physician has made me a coward. When I was sick my life was a burthen to me, and I did not care how soon I lost it, but in giving me health, he has given me the enjoyment of life, and I fear to lose it." This thing depends greatly on the temperament of a man. Some are reckless and willing, at any moment, to risk their lives. Others who did not hesitate an instant to hazard their lives against an enemy of their country, and shed the last drop of their blood in its defence, would, in no case, engage in a private encounter.

We know that dueling does not stop killing in the streets, or assassination on the highways. No sir, this is a mistake, and nothing will stop it but a sense of certain, positive, and speedy punishment. And how are we to stop the practice of dueling? We are to furnish men who are in doubt as to a point of honor, with a competent apology for avoiding a duel. That is all we want. There is not a man in the world, enjoying health, and who has friends and connections around him, that does not love life. Look at the man in the last agonies of death, and see how he clings to life. And why? Because he loves life. And yet a false notion of honor, or rather a false public opinion, will force the man in fine health to hazard his life to a false notion of honor. Frederick the Great of Prussia was one of the ablest and bravest men who ever fought at the head of an army, and yet what did he say to the duelist? Why, that if a duel was fought, he would hang all concerned in it, and if he could find out where was the place of meeting, he would go there himself with his hangman, and hang up the survivor without a trial. Has not Great Britain lately hung up several men who killed others in duels. A Colonel Campbell there, killed a man in a duel, not long since, and was hung. And other instances might be mentioned.

And Kentucky is the only country where no man has ever been punished for giving, accepting, carrying a challenge, or killing his antagonist in a duel. What inroads have been made in the family of Alek. Pope, my old friend with whom I practiced law until he died, by the dueling propensities of those two young men, Henry and Fountain Pope. One was killed in Arkansas, and the other near Louisville, without any cause, if the parties had understood each other. The parties fought at a distance of twenty yards, with shot guns. Did I not know, while in Washington, Barron and Deatur, two of the first men at that period in America, come up in mortal array within sixteen feet of each other, because one was near sighted, and the rule was that both should take deliberate sight before the word to fire was given? They both fired and fell with their heads not ten feet apart from each other. And before they were taken from the ground each expecting both to die, they spoke to each other, and a reconciliation took place. They blessed each other, and declared that there was nothing between them. All that was required to have prevented the meeting was an explanation between them. There was the case also of McCarty and Mason, own cousins, who fought one of the most murderous duels on record, because McCarty voting for another man, Mason being a candidate, felt aggrieved, and challenged his vote on the ground of not being twenty one. McCarty first proposed they should sit over a keg of powder and set fire to it, but Mason declined. Next he proposed they should go to the top of the capitol and hand in hand jump from the parapet wall to the ground, a distance of ninety feet. This Mason also declined. Then McCarty proposed that they should fight with muskets with three balls a piece, which Mason accepted, and then they went out and fought eight feet apart—about nothing. McCarty has told me that the duel was forced on him by one of Mason's seconds. Such are the bloody scenes which illustrate this code of honor, as it is styled. In the poems of an old English satirist, Churchill, by name, is a satire against dueling, which I remember made a strong impression on me when I first read it, many years ago. In speaking of the duelists' honor, he says:

"His honor is like a maiden-head
Which if in private brought to bed
Flaunts and flutters about the town
And is never missed until the loss is known."

Such is just about the character of the insults for which men fight duels. A real insult is resented at the moment, and an uncertain or imaginary one leads to the duel. In the last case the parties correspond and consult their friends and seconds, who generally are young hotspurs, who take a great deal more delight in acting as second than principal. A great many of these seconds, no doubt, feel very much like the lawyers in a case in court; they would a great deal rather see their clients pull their hair the wrong way than get at it themselves. And in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, an amicable arrangement of the difficulties between the parties is prevented by the seconds. In the recent case of young Pope, I have no doubt that had my young friend over the way, (Mr. Preston,) been one of the seconds, he could have stopped it. The gentlemen who did act as seconds were equally respectable and worthy, but perhaps they were not so prudent and discreet in going back to the origin of the quarrel, and having it arranged, as they might have done. The evil is in these controversies, in ninety cases out of a hundred, the parties get into the hands of men who believe they will be brought into consequence by becoming seconds in a duel.

I hope the convention will not adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisville, (Mr. Preston,) to leave this matter to the control of the legislature. Can there be any law proposed which does not now exist? No. Is it not death if a man is killed, to all the persons concerned? It is; and if it is, it is the strongest kind of disqualification to hold any office in the future, I warrant. But is there not a law now in existence disfranchising from office any one who gives or accepts a challenge? There is; and what good can be attained by the passage of any further laws on the subject? If left to the legislature, they will continue to pass special laws, relieving men from the penalty, and thus nullify the statutes. What more, then, can you do? You can furnish to the man who desires not to fight, an apology to public opinion for refusing to give or accept a challenge. Let the constitution contain this disqualification, and you will attain this object by putting it out of the power of the legislature to absolve a man from the penalty. These were the sentiments I uttered thirty-eight years ago in the legislative halls of Kentucky, and I was supported in them at that time by a young man one year younger than myself, and one of the most eloquent and able men Kentucky ever knew—I mean Solomon P. Sharpe.

I hope the amendment in regard to the carrying of concealed weapons will also be rejected. The laws are sufficient to punish that practice in a great many ways. You are to bear in mind that it is the punishment between the offence and the punishment that makes a law a living law. Suppose the law punished men for getting drunk or gambling by imprisonment in the penitentiary—it would be found that nobody would enforce them. I have seen a man prosecuted, and did it myself, because the grand jury having found an indictment against him, I was obliged to do it, for keeping a kind of gambling wheel. I had bet on this wheel, and I saw on the jury seven men who had done the same, and the jury, without leaving their box, found a verdict of not guilty, though seven had the strongest evidence of his guilt. I recollect once in Marion county that some twenty men were indicted for keeping what they call a Spanish needle. I argued before the jury that the punishment was too violent and disproportionate to the offence, and was cruel and inhuman. The jury brought in a verdict something like this: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty; for, although we know he played the wheel, we consider the punishment cruel, extravagant, and disproportionate to the offence." Judge Green sent them back, and they again returned with this verdict: "We, the jury, know the man kept the wheel, but in our consciences we do not believe him to be guilty under the constitution." They were sent back again, and on the fourth day they returned with an unqualified verdict of not guilty. You must adapt the scale of punishment to the grade of the offence. If a man kills another, it is not too great a punishment to hang him; or if he steals a horse, it is not too great a punishment to send him to the penitentiary. But if a man gets drunk, it would be a cruel punishment therefor to put him in the penitentiary. I would not make the punishment for the carrying of concealed weapons too stringent. A fine of $50, $100, or $200, is quite sufficient. I am against the carrying of concealed weapons for aggressive purposes, and voted very cheerfully for the section on the subject. But I would not here make it a disqualification for office. The same reason does not exist for it, as in the case of dueling. In the latter case the object is to give to the friend of peace and good order a sufficient apology to public opinion for refusing to have anything to do with a duel. Kentucky is behind most of the states of this union on this subject, and I hope this section will be adopted.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. GRAY moved an adjournment. The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays on his amendment, and the roll was partially called, when he asked and obtained leave to withdraw it.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the section.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays thereon.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE asked for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT replied that the section was indivisible.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE said a question was always divisible when it was susceptible of division. He was willing to take the first part of the oath, but not the second.

Mr. TRIPLETT inquired if it could be divided with the general consent of the house. As it stood, it would place several of them in an awkward position.

The PRESIDENT said the section could not be divided.

The clerk then called the roll, and the yeas were 62, nays 28.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Thos. D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Jas. Dudley, Chas-teen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfield, Jas. H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, George W. Kavanagh, James M. Lackey, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Wm. D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, J. W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Johe L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robt. N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—62.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Benj. Copelin, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Thos. J. Hood, Jas. W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thos. P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Johnson Price, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe—28.

So the section was adopted.

The convention then adjourned.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. NORTON.

SPECIFIC AMENDMENTS.

Mr. CHENAULT. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the committee on the revision of the constitution and slavery, be requested to inquire into the expediency of submitting the constitution, about to be formed, once in every period of ten years, to the qualified electors of this state, and if a majority of all of said electors shall vote for amending the same, the next ensuing legislature shall pass an act presenting one, and not more than two, specific amendments, to be voted on at the next succeeding election, and should a majority of all the qualified voters decide in favor of said specific amendment or amendments, at two successive elections, the same shall be engrafted by the legislature, as a part of the organic law of this commonwealth."

It is known to this house, that since the formation of the constitution of 1799, there have been serious objections to that constitution; and had it been in the power of the people to amend that constitution in some other way than by the mode therein specified, in my humble judgment, this body of delegates would not now have been assembled here. But as that instrument specified the particular manner in which any amendments should be effected, and as there was no alternative but to comply with its requirements, we are compelled to follow the course prescribed. It seems to me, however, that a plan might be adopted which, while it would answer all the purposes of that requirement, would, in future, obviate the necessity of our meeting together in conventions similar to this. I submit that once in every ten years, when any specific amendment is desired, it should be presented to the people at their elections to decide upon without being mixed up with various exciting questions, and a definitive vote taken on the matter. This, it appears to me, would be preferable to the mode now provided for. There have been various propositions to this effect offered to this body, and some gentlemen appear to be startled and afraid lest the question of slavery should, by this means, be made an open question. I think, however, that under the old mode of altering the constitution the question is left equally as open, and is subject, on that ground, to objections equally as forcible. If the convention prefer to adhere to the old method rather than to adopt this plan of specific amendments, I have no choice but to submit.

I move that the resolution be printed and referred to the committee of revision and slavery.

The resolution was ordered to be printed and referred.

DUELING.

Mr. HAMILTON gave notice of his intention to move a reconsideration of the vote adopting the first section of the report of the committee on general provisions.

Mr. PROCTOR moved to dispense with the rule which requires a motion to reconsider to lie over one day.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was then stated to be on the reconsideration.

Mr. PROCTOR. My object in moving this resolution, is to insert after the word "challenge," in the eighth and twelfth lines in the first section, the words, "in this state."

I hold, sir, that this is a question, the consideration of which, by this convention, is not at all called for by the people of Kentucky at the present time. It was not discussed before the people when this convention was determined upon, and from the disposition manifested in this convention, it appears that a large number of members are opposed to this clause. Under the old constitution the legislature had all power in this matter and could carry out the will of the people. If you insert this provision in your constitution you are both arraying gentlemen against each other, who believe that this is a matter on which the legislature has sufficient power to act, and arraying the public mind against the work of your hands in framing this constitution. You have been told by my friend from Nelson, who has often told us that we were running too much into detail, that this provision will endanger the popularity of the constitution. I am opposed to running into detail; I am opposed also to the practice of dueling. If I take the life of a man I do it in action—on the spur of the moment. I never either received or gave a challenge; but I do not believe a clause ought to be inserted prohibiting a man from going into another state, if insulted, and he should have an opportunity of thus defending himself. Let me put a case. We send a man to congress where he meets with men from every state of the union; many of them are aware that such a provision exists in the constitution of Kentucky. Will they not, knowing how his hands are tied down, seek every opportunity to insult him. I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of the gentlemen who compose that body; but who is there that does not know that there are not a few of them who would avail themselves of any opportunity, under such circumstances, to insult a Kentuckian? He is not placed upon an equal footing with the members from other states. Send your delegate to congress, and let an insult there be passed upon him, and it will be out of his power either to defend himself, or his honor. I am willing, if this amendment is adopted, to go for the section; but as it is, I cannot give my sanction to it; hence, I voted yesterday in favor of reconsidering this proposition.

Mr. HARDIN. If that amendment is adopted, all that will be necessary when a duel is determined upon, will be for one gentleman to send to another that he wishes him to go over into Madison, Indiana, or any where else out of the state, in order that he may send him a particular communication. When there, the communication will be a challenge.

This is a matter in which I have no personal interest, for no man will ever challenge so old a man as I am, with but one hand, and that a left hand. I think it is no evidence of courage for a man to fight a duel; but to go out to fight the enemies of the country I think is evidence of it. If a man wanted to show his courage, he could have done it in the attack on Monterey, on the field of Buena Vista, or under General Scott in any one of the seven battles he fought. I do not believe there is one man in a thousand, in Kentucky, who has not courage enough to fight the enemies of his country.

The gentleman says a member of congress may want to fight, and must have the liberty to do it. A member of congress must have the liberty to do a little fighting! The best way in the world, if one gentleman insults another, is to end it in a fist fight; or, if that is too low, cane him or "rock" him; but do not go into a system of diplomatic negotiations, each trying to secure an advantage over the other. Talleyrand and Metternich never went into negotiations more fully than two duelists. They make every effort to get the advantage of each other with regard to weapons or distance, and when they come to the ground they throw up for position.

When Decatur and Barron fought, they stood within sixteen feet of each other, and Decatur's friend got him killed. He took his stand on the right of Decatur—Elliott, Barron's friend, went and whispered to him, "now watch his mouth, and you can catch the words sooner than Decatur. By doing this he got the fire on him, and killed him. There is no fairness in this mode of fighting.

With regard to the matter of going out of the state, it can be done, and the law be evaded.

There were once some strong laws with regard to fighting a duel in the vicinity of London. The Marquis of Wharton insulted the Duke of Marlboro' in the house of lords. The Duke sent word to the Marquis that he wanted to take a ride into the country for an airing, and he would have a friend with him, and would like to meet with him there. The Marquis understood the object, and declined to take the airing. It was no challenge, but he understood it so. If you send a note preparatory to the challenge, as you can do in this case, you might as well dispense with the law. I have no particular objection to the amendment, but I do not want to offer any defence for men who have been engaged in duels at all. They are never fought but in obedience to a sickly, fastidious public sentiment.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I am no duelist, nor am I an advocate of it; but I have some objection to that section, because we are not making a constitution which will apply to Kentuckians all over the world. If it were to be confined to Kentucky only, I should have no objection. I protest against the adoption of the section. I recollect that some years ago, when several officers of the navy of the United States were on a foreign station, one of them went ashore and was insulted by some British officers. He was unable to knock all of them down; and what redress had he? Why, he challenged every officer, from the highest to the lowest, or from the lowest to the highest. He fought the highest in rank, and killed him, and the others then retracted all that they had said, and there ended the difficulty. Now, would you disfranchise such a man, under these circumstances, who had promptly taken up, when on a foreign soil, an insult offered to his country? It is not at all times that we have it in our power to knock down the man who insults us. For instance, a small man insults me, would I take a cudgel and knock him down? I could not do it. But if a large man were to insult a small one, a cudgel in his hands might not place them on an equality. It is said public opinion sanctions dueling. That has been the burden of the argument on this floor. Did we come here to make a constitution to control public opinion? We came to frame a constitution which is in accordance with public opinion, and shall we introduce a provision which, the gentleman from Nelson says, is contrary to public opinion?

Mr. HARDIN. Public opinion is sickly on this subject.

Mr. MERIWETHER. It is sickly, the gentleman says. We do not come here as doctors, to cure it. Were we sent here as physicians, to cure it? I have stated my position.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will barely state the object of the committee in framing this provision. I yield very cheerfully to the distinguished gentlemen who differ with me, and who I believe differ honestly. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Jefferson, that if his position is true, this provision ought to stand. The simple question is, whether dueling is right or wrong. Do the people wish to see the practice of dueling carried out? I think I have heard no gentleman on this floor, who did not set out with the declaration, that he was opposed to dueling, and that he would not fight a duel. That section requires that it should be put down if public opinion requires it. The statutes have failed to do it. Is it not the duty of this convention to carry out public sentiment? I think so, and such was the object of the committee. Such, I think the true policy of the state. I am willing to give my vote, and trust the constitution upon the single question, whether the people of Kentucky desire to see dueling prevail, or dueling put down.

I am opposed to the amendment, because I know that if it prevails, the constitution will prove as inefficacious as the statutes have been. A gentleman can remove to Ohio temporarily, and fight a duel while there, and in two or three months remove back again to Kentucky. I have seen the practice of confining a statute of this kind to citizens. We have a statute now, that a lawyer while practicing at the bar shall not send a challenge or fight a duel. But he has only to give up his practice till the legislature releases him from the effect of the statute. As soon as a relief measure is passed, he is released from that obligation, and he comes back to his practice again at the bar. Would not precisely the same state of things exist in regard to many men, especially young men, if you attempt to confine it to a mere citizen of the state? Would not a mere temporary change of residence release them? They would not be slow to remove their residence, and after remaining a short time, they would come back.

The object of this convention should be to reprobate the practice of dueling, to let our children be brought up with the idea that public sentiment, and the feeling of Kentucky are against it. There is not a gentleman on this floor who, if asked the question, whether it is not so, would not give me an affirmative answer. Suppose my friend is under bonds to keep the peace, and I know that fact, and go up and insult him. What would public opinion say with regard to a man who should do this? It would be to consider him as worse than a coward. It would be like insulting a woman, and public opinion would fix on his forehead the indelible mark of the most miserable coward that ever trod the earth. So it is here. Let the constitution demand that dueling shall not exist within our borders, and those who insult another would have the same sort of epithets heaped on them, as they would have if they insulted a woman.

The gentleman from Jefferson has cited an instance of a man who boldly fought a duel abroad, in defence of the honor of his country, and asks if this convention would have disfranchised him. I say yes, sir; disfranchise him, and it would be giving utterance to a high moral principle. What great conservative principle is there, to which occasionally there will not be harsh exceptions? The greatest act of that distinguished man whose portrait hangs over your chair, (pointing to the portrait of Washington,) when all the great attributes of his character were called into display, was when the amiable and accomplished Andre petitioned him to spare him the disgrace of suffering on a gibbet. Young, gallant, ardent, he found himself condemned to death, and he appealed to the great leader of the American army, in whose bosom he knew ran the milk of human kindness, to spare him, and to spare his nation the disgrace of suffering on a gibbet. What were the impulses, and the struggles that overcame that great man, when he had to answer that request? If left to himself—if left to his own feelings, and to what he believed the justice of the appeal, he would have said yes. But he looked not to mere individual interests. The interest of a nation was in his hands, and however unjust, however cruel and trying, he said, Andre must suffer, and he must be hung. He must be hung as a great example. That was necessary to carry out a great principle. What patriot is there, who would not willingly be disfranchised if the honor, the safety, or the integrity of his country is to be preserved by it?

Sir, the highest example a man can give of patriotism, is to be willing to be disfranchised, to deny himself a seat on this floor as a legislator, or any other, that a great moral principle, by which his country is to be served, may be carried out.

I think these individual examples prove nothing, and if we want to act for the public good we must not let these individual examples affect our judgments. They must give way to public justice. The simple question is whether dueling is bad, and whether it should be reprobated? If so, let us shut the door to all the little avenues which the ingenuity of man can invent to defeat this great object.

It is to put down this practice, and to show our children by our acts, as well as by the constitution, that we are determined to set our faces against it, and my word for it, dueling will be stopped. Look at the state of Tennessee, look at Virginia, and you will see men who are as distinguished as any the country has produced, who bear their disfranchisement cheerfully and patiently. I know one young man in Virginia, who, although opposed to me politically, I here say is perhaps as promising a man as that state has produced within the last half century. Let him be asked, although he has been disfranchised, would you be willing to see that anti-dueling law struck out, and he would say that he bore his disfranchisement with pleasure, and he would not strike it out. These are the views which actuated me, and which I believe actuated the committee.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I want to ask my friend from Kenton one question. He asks the question, if dueling is not reprobated in this country, and if we should not take every step to put it down? Is not the murderer reprobated as much as the duelist? Why do you not extend our constitution all over the world against the murderer?

Mr. STEVENSON. As far as I know all criminal laws do extend against the murderer, to the limits of their jurisdiction. The murderer is as much reprobated in another country, though we could not punish him here. He is not disfranchised, because we suppose the people of Kentucky would hardly send a man known to be a murderer, to the legislature.

Mr. BARLOW moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

On the motion to reconsider, the yeas and nays were called for, and were—yeas 50, nays 41.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsay, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Rogers, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—50.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, George W. Williams—41.

So the convention reconsidered, and the question recurred on the adoption of the section.

Mr. PROCTOR moved to amend by striking out the words: "and that I have neither directly nor indirectly, given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge, to any person, or persons, to fight in single combat, or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, since the adoption of the present constitution of Kentucky, and that I will neither directly nor indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge, to any person, or persons, to fight in single combat, or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, during my continuance in office"—and to insert the following—"and I do further solemnly swear, (or affirm,) that since the adoption of the present constitution, I, being a citizen of this state, have not fought a duel with deadly weapons, in this state, nor out of it, with a citizen of this state, nor have I sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, with deadly weapons, with a citizen of this state; nor have I acted as second, in carrying a challenge, or aided, advised, or assisted any person thus offending. So help me God."

Mr. TAYLOR. After the unanswerable and spirit stirring speech of my friend from Louisville, yesterday evening, it would be an attempt "to gild refined gold or paint the lilly" for me to try to add anything to what he and others have said. It is not so much the principle contained in the section adopted, as the language in which it is couched, that I object to. It brings men into judgment for their thoughts. Now I had believed that there was but one power that brought men into judgment for their thoughts.

But here is a tribunal to be set up on earth to bring men to judgment for their thoughts. By this section a man who under peculiar circumstances may have accepted a challenge, will be disfranchised even though he does not fight. To this I object. It is a matter which should be left to the legislature, and with which we should not burthen the constitution.

Mr. GARRARD moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. PRICE called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and being taken they were yeas 58, nays 34.

YEAS—Mr. President (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Rogers, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Jno. Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—58.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Thomas N. Lindsey, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Wm. R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, George W. Williams—34.

So the convention adopted the amendment.

The section as amended was then agreed to.

The eighteenth section was next read, as follows:

"Sec. 18. Any person, who shall, after the adoption of this constitution, either directly or indirectly, give, accept, or knowingly carry a challenge to any person, or persons, to fight in single combat, or otherwise, with any deadly weapon, either in or out of the state, shall be deprived of the right to hold any office of honor or profit in this commonwealth, and shall be punished otherwise in such manner as the legislature may prescribe by law.

Mr. MERIWETHER suggested that the section should be modified so as to make it agree with the first section.

Mr. GARRARD moved to strike out the words "or otherwise" after the words "single combat," and insert the words "with a citizen of this state."

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL asked if this section would prevent a person who had fought in any other state from coming here and enjoying the privilege of a citizen.

A brief conversation ensued on this point which was terminated by the previous question on the motion of Mr. Dudley.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays on the amendment and they were yeas 56, nays 38.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfelde, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, William Johnson, James M. Lackey, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, John T. Robinson, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, —56.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Thos. D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Benjamin Copelin, Lucius Desha, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James P. Hamilton, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jas. M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe—38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The section was then adopted.

The convention next proceeded to consider the amendment offered by Mr. GRAY, as additional sections, as follows:

"Sec. 19. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this state. All property, on which taxes may be levied, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law. No one species of property shall be taxed higher than another species of equal value: Provided, The general assembly shall have power to tax merchants, brokers, hawkers, peddlers, shows, theatrical performances, law process, seals, deeds, licenses, stocks, playing cards, corporations, and privileges, as may, from time to time, be prescribed by law.

"Sec. 20. The general assembly shall have power to authorize the several counties, and incorporated cities and towns, in this state, to impose taxes for county and corporate purposes, respectively; and all property shall be taxed upon the principles establish in regard to state taxation: Provided, A poll tax may be assessed for county and corporate purposes."

Mr. GRAY moved to amend the 2d of his proposed sections, by adding the following:

"And the expenses of grading and paving streets, alleys and sidewalks, and digging and walling wells, may be assessed upon the owners of lots in cities and towns, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by law."

Mr. HARDIN. The position I hold in reference to the state debt, imposes upon me the necessity of making some further explanation. The specific tax the gentleman proposes to repeal, amounts to $14,301 50. The tax on carriages amounts to $3,207; the tax on buggies $1,542 50; the tax on pianos $1,540; the tax on gold spectacles $600 50; the tax on gold watches, $5,934; the tax on silver levers, $1,418.

This was the taxation the year before last. I presume on account of the increased number of these articles, that tax now, may be fairly set down at $15,000. The auditor says that no portion of the specific tax is appropriated to the sinking fund. He told me, that he had transferred five parts out of nineteen of the specific tax, thinking it would come fairly within the meaning of the law.

The income of the sinking fund consists of five cents upon every hundred dollars of the total valuation, and of five nineteenths of the specific tax I have now read. It will yield the present year $140,000. The year before last it yielded $123,000. The next item of the sinking fund is the dividend on bank stock. The Northern Bank of Kentucky furnished $13,074 75, at the last semi-annual dividend, which will make something more than $26,000 per annum. The Bank of Kentucky furnishes a dividend of $60,000; the Louisville Bank $1,624; and in addition to that, the present year, there will be the rent of the Lexington and Ohio railroad, which is $14,635 62. There will no longer be any rent coming from that source. Hereafter the road may divide something. It will, however, be two or three years before there is any income from that source. There is a rent from the water powers of $480; turnpike roads, $34,09 564; and there are some other miscellaneous receipts. There is what is called the Craddock fund, the history of which is, an old gentleman named Craddock, left $20,000 in the hands of his executor, Judge Underwood, to lay out in stocks according to the terms of his will; but the judge, instead of doing so, got the state of Kentucky to take it and pay interest on it. And that is what is called the Craddock fund. There has been $5,525 paid in, and this sum is placed to the credit of the sinking fund. I would remark there will be taken from this whole amount $14,635, which is now derived from railroad rent, after this year. Last year an act was passed that in 1850 the whole avails of the slackwater should be passed to the support of the free schools, and the amount last year was $10,000. The next year it may be more. And if we take away the avails of the slackwater, the rent of the railroad, and also take away three or four thousand dollars, as required by the gentleman's amendment, what is to become of the sinking fund? I would ask the very identical question which was asked in congress many years since by Mr. Lowndes, the chairman of the committee of ways and means. A man came to him and very politely asked him to dispense with a certain item of taxation from which a revenue of several millions was derived. Mr. Lowndes replied that he had no objection whatever to dispense with this item of taxation provided the gentleman would provide a substitute for it. And that ended the subject. And no doubt my friend here has provided a substitute for the sinking fund. It now yields the government about $15,000, and the gentleman now proposes to take away from the government the principle of specific duties. I say it is the easiest tax paid. We pay to the United States government not less than $1,153,000. Our duties at the custom house amount to not less than a million of dollars. There is the profit of the importer of the articles, the profit of the wholesale merchant and the retail merchant, and when you put these three profits together, before Kentucky consumes the foreign article, we pay in the shape of duties and profits a sum of not less than $1,350,000. But we do not seem to know it, because it operates on our ready means. If you cannot pay half a dollar for a pair of gold spectacles, exchange them away and get a pair of silver ones. If you cannot pay one dollar for a gold watch, sell it and get a silver one. A man who rides in a carriage is supposed to be able to pay the necessary tax upon it. A man who rides in a barouche, is expected to pay a tax. Many a man rides in his barouche and pays a dollar for it. But put it down to forty cents, and he will not be so ready to pay the tax. Those who enjoy luxuries are supposed to be able to pay for them. It may be necessary some day or other that we should raise the sum of $50,000 more to add to the sinking fund, instead of taking from it. Go over the list, and put a fair valuation upon it, and it now amounts to about $15,000.

Every man in the state should contribute according to his means toward the support of government. And if it be necessary, I want to resort to the income of a man. I can resort to an officer's income. I can tell the officer of a bank, who receives $5,000 a year, pay a tax on your salary. I can tell a judge your salary is your means, and pay on that. I can tell a lawyer, your profession is worth $3,000 a year, and you do not pay a cent, you must pay three or four dollars. So I would say to the doctor, your profession is a lucrative one, you can pay three or four dollars; and to the clerks and the sheriffs, I would address similar language. Give the legislature the power of selecting the articles and objects to be taxed. You tax a farmer for his land and negroes which do not yield three per cent. A man may have $10,000 worth of land and negroes, and they will not yield him three hundred dollars a year, and he will pay full one per cent. of his clear profits. A man may have an income of $3,000, and if it does not consist of land and negroes, he does not pay a dollar, not a cent. I do not propose any additional tax; but I want to give the legislature, from the time of the going into effect of the new constitution, the power to select the articles to be taxed, as I have already said. Are not pianos a luxury? And if a man cannot afford to pay the tax, he can afford to do without the piano. It is not like taxing land and horses. A man must have his land and his horses.

I again ask, is this convention going to tell the legislature that, in all time to come, you never shall select any specific article of property for taxation, and you shall never resort to taxation on the income of officers of this government? I do not propose such a tax, but I propose leaving the power to the legislature.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I had supposed that under the present law, when a professional gentleman makes money, he is taxed as well as any other citizen; if not before the money be realized from his profession, at least immediately after. Now, my friend from Nelson seems to think that professional men are not taxed; but are they not taxed in every sense of the word in the same manner as every other class of citizens? Have they money at interest? Is not that taxed like every other man's money? And surely you would not tax that money which he has not yet received. I hold that the government of a country acts as a general insurance office, and that each man should pay for the maintenance of that power which secures him in the enjoyment of his property in proportion to the amount which he has at risk. If he has property to the amount of $10,000 at risk, he should pay in a proportionate ratio to the man who has only $5,000. This is the principle involved; tax each man according to the amount he has at risk.

Mr. GRAY. This matter has been agitated a great many years, and I suppose every man's mind is pretty much made up on the subject. My friend from Nelson. (Mr. Hardin,) seems very particular on this matter. He is monstrously afraid of the legislature, when you talk of allowing them to make as many judges as they please. You must not trust the legislature then, for fear they run the people too much into debt in trying causes for them; but when you come to say you must have a revenue based upon principles of eternal justice and equality, that won't do for the gentleman from Nelson, but we must have this specific taxation, and the particular items selected upon which it is to be levied. Now, it seems to me that there is nothing more unjust than this. We are taxed to support government which guarantees to us the enjoyment of our rights, and the right of property is one of the greatest and most sacred of our rights. If then our property is protected, should not all the property of each individual be taxed, and all protected alike? We have said that slave property should be regarded as sacred as any other species of property. Now, if money thus invested, means carriages, buggies, barouches, spectacles, and watches, or any thing else, should a man be deprived of this any sooner than of any other species of property? No sir. If the gentleman is anxious to tax a man's profession before its products are realized, I have nothing to do with that. We are met here to tax property, not imagination. I trust in God that Kentucky will never be so hard run as to have to resort to any such mode of taxation as that; because I think we would have to institute some other kind of officers to any yet known to the law, to ascertain the exact value of each lawyer or doctor's profession. Some of them, I presume, will hardly make enough in a year to support themselves, much less to pay out by way of taxation. There is no principle of equality in it. This proposition operates only as regards property. It has been a settled principle all over the world, that property has been, and should be, the basis of taxation; and the revenue of a country has always been derived from property, because it was something you could estimate, something you could fix a value upon, something that you could collect a tax from; but surely gentlemen did not think of collecting a tax from a man's intellect, or from any salary that might be given him for services. What sort of a principle would that be? First of all, you say a man's services are worth so much; and then you say you must take back so much out of that for taxation. Had we not better say at once "we will reduce his salary by so much, and we will keep this portion back in the treasury?" I hope never to see such a principle as that advocated in this commonwealth. The gentleman says that spectacles, watches, carriages, buggies, barouches, and what not, should be taxed. I have no objection to tax them. But he says that will not be enough. Now, I do think the old woman should not be taxed fifty cents for her spectacles because they may happen to be gold spectacles. It is a very small matter, and in my opinion it is a disgrace to a state like that of Kentucky.

Now he wants to make it out that that has some connection with the sinking fund. The first answer I have to that is, that it constitutes no part of that fund, and that the sinking fund has nothing at all to do with it any more than with the revenue derived from any other property; but if the sinking fund is not sufficient, then make it upon a just principle of taxation; tax every man according to what his property is worth. That is the way to supply a deficit if there is any deficit. But sir, there is no deficit. There are about eleven or twelve thousand dollars derived from specific taxation. Now take that on the uniform principle of nineteen cents on the hundred dollars, and you would realize vastly more in proportion than you will by getting occasionally a dollar for a carriage or fifty cents for a pair of spectacles. And here again is the injustice. You tax the splendid carriage of the millionaire just as much as you do that of the poor farmer who has a miserable two horse affair to take his wife to church. Is there any equality in this? Not at all. The old carriage that is thrown by, and has not turned a wheel for years, is taxed just as much as that which is running in all the splendor of novelty. Is there any justice in that? Is there any equality in that? Then a watch that is worth $300 is taxed the same as the one that is worth but $50. Is there any honesty in that?

But sir, the revenue is increasing and the debt is being diminished. I suppose that is the reason why the legislature took away a part of the sinking fund. The income of the slack water has been taken from the sinking fund and applied to the school fund. I think that is wrong. Whatever has been set apart to the sinking fund should be held sacred. I am willing to vote for that, and that it should remain so till the entire debt is discharged. But sir, I would not go to supply the means of sustaining the sinking fund by any such unjust and iniquitous principle as this. If it is to be supplied, let it be supplied by taxes from property according to its value. Now, if you leave your constitution open, what shall be done? Some suppose our slave property should be taxed. Well if you tax the old woman's spectacles worth $5, why not tax a man's slaves worth $5,000? How would that operate? We must adopt some principle. If the gentleman can embrace any other ideas than those in the article I have proposed, I am willing to submit. All I want is, that taxes should be equal and uniform, and that all property should be taxed alike, according to its value. That is the great principle which I think ought to govern a legislature in taxing the community of a great state. These are the reasons why I offer that amendment. I don't want to deprive the sinking fund of anything! Kentucky is in debt, and she is willing to pay that debt. All I ask is, that the burden may fall alike upon all according to their means.

Mr. HARDIN. Sir, I acknowledge there is sometimes a carriage worth over $500; but a carriage would have to be worth that sum to be taxed. Now suppose a carriage of the value of $500 was taxed, is there any man in Kentucky that would be likely to give it in at $1,000. Some men, it is true, might do so for the sake of vanity and show, but in that case there would be no oppression—not even the appearance of it. The gentleman may have seen some carriages in this country worth more than $1,000; I have never seen one. Sir, we know the tax on gold watches yields $5,934. Now what would it yield if given in, one watch with another? Would they yield $100. What would gold spectacles yield? The gentleman from Jefferson says he knows carriages worth $1,200; but we know the average value of carriages will seldom be given in. Now take barouches and buggies. We know that these, which cost $275 will seldom be returned at more than $150. I venture to say that if we take the manner in which these articles are usually given in, we lose an income of at least $11,000 a year.—They will give in the finest kind of a gold watch worth, probably, $500, at not more than $100, or at most $120. They will give gold spectacles at $10, and all other articles at a similarly reduced value.

The most that I object to is the taking away from the legislature the power of specific taxation. Let them exercise it, or not, as they please—but certainly give them the discretion.

The honorable gentleman from Jefferson got up and made a wonderful discovery. He discovered that if a lawyer or doctor had a tract of land, or money at interest, he was taxed according to its value or amount. Well, if the farmer clears $300 upon a capital of $10,000, he pays nineteen dollars. I have often enquired of farmers, and they tell me that three per cent. was the full amount they could realise on their capital. The amount of tax which they pay is upwards of five per cent. upon what they make. I am therefore against going beyond the nineteen cents upon the visible, tangible farming property in this state. All taxation should, as near as possible, approach the income; and not only so, but it should be diversified as much as possible, so that every man would pay according to his means of paying.

The gentleman says I was afraid to go to the legislature in relation to the court of appeals. If I recollect right, the gentleman compromised that matter; and when two men have quarreled, and a compromise has been entered into, I deny the right of going behind that compromise.

Mr. GRAY. I did not refer to the court of appeals at all, but to the circuit judges.

Mr. HARDIN. The whole bill was compromised; and I lay it down, that if two nations quarrel and fight, and then enter into a treaty, they are not to go behind that treaty. And, sir, I protest against the gentleman again referring to what was the subject of that compromise. Shall Brutus' ghost haunt me eternally, and meet me here and there, and disqualify me for the last battle with Mark Anthony and Cæsar? I compromised my own opinion on several occasions; I came here to make compromises in relation to this constitution; I have been compromising from the first day; and with all my compromises, I can, with pleasure, vote for this constitution. I believe we are making a good constitution. I believe we shall save $27,500 a year by holding the legislature biennially. I can see in the circuit courts we have saved $7,500; and we have only lost $1,500—the salary of one additional judge of the court of appeals. We are effecting the great cardinal points for which we came here—to regulate the franchise, to give new strength, new life, new vigor to the government, and to do it more economically; and if ever an expression has escaped me unfavorable to the constitution, it must have been in jest; for, like my friend from Henry, (Mr. Nuttall,) I jest frequently. But I do firmly believe that the great ends for which we were sent here will be accomplished, even if the gentleman should succeed with his amendment. I believe we have all labored for the best. I yield all I can, and every gentleman here has to yield something for the constitution.

Mr. TURNER, after stating that, as a general thing, he was opposed to specific taxation, said that it would not be very wrong to tax bowie knives and pistols. This he thought would be in accordance with what they had done on the subject of dueling. He believed it would be the most wholesome exercise of power that had yet been exercised by the convention. It would doubtless save many valuable lives, and have a great tendency to improve the morals of the community. He then moved the previous question.

The main question was ordered to be now put. The question was then taken on the amendment offered by Mr. GRAY to the last section, and it was rejected.

The question next recurred on the substitute of the gentleman from Henry, as follows:

"The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws compelling any citizen of this commonwealth to pay taxes upon more than he, she, or they may be intrinsically worth."

Mr. NUTTALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were yeas 14, nays 75.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, Alfred Boyd, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Edward Curd, Jas. Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Alexander K. Marshall, James M. Nesbitt, Elijah F. Nuttall, John T. Rogers, Michael L. Stoner—14.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Lucius Desha, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Jas. P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, J. W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, George W. Johnston, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—75.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. MERIWETHER asked for a division of the question, on the adoption of the proposed sections, and the question recurred on the first section.

Mr. ROGERS called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the first section, and they were yeas 52, nays 38.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James,

George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, Wm. D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Henry B. Pollard, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—52.

YAYS—John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, James S. Chrisman, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, George W. Williams Silas Woodson—38.

So the section was adopted.

The second section was adopted without a division.

Mr. ROGERS moved the adoption of the following as an additional section.

"That every citizen of this state has the right to sell any and every article produced, made, or manufactured by him in the state, without tax or license."

Mr. CHRISMAN moved to amend, by inserting after the word "state" the words "except spirituous liquors."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The yeas and nays were called for on the proposed section, and being taken were—yeas 12, nays 77:

YEAS—William K. Bowling, B. L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Edward Curd, Nathan Gaither, James W. Irwin, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, John T. Rogers, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler—12.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, Wm. Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY moved an additional section, as follows:

"The general assembly shall have power to tax bowie knives, pistols, and incomes."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LINDSEY moved the following, as an additional section:

"That in all criminal prosecutions, the courts having jurisdiction thereof shall be judges of the law, and juries of the facts, as in civil cases; and where an impartial jury cannot be obtained in the county where the offence was committed, competent jurors—citizens of the commonwealth—shall be summoned from other counties, in such manner as may be provided by the general assembly."

Mr. President: It is known that in some of the circuit courts, the judges have decided that they have no power, on the motion of the commonwealth or the accused, in a criminal case, to instruct the jury upon the law; while in other circuits the judges have decided that they have the power, under the present constitution, to instruct, and they do instruct the jury, on the motion of the parties. Uniformity in decisions and in practice, is as important in criminal as in civil cases, and we should have the principle fixed, one way or the other. If it is the sense of the convention that juries shall be judges of law and fact in criminal cases, and that the judges shall have no power to interfere with counsel in arguing what is the law to the jury, so let us say in the constitution, as it is the only place where we can act upon the subject. For, if the legislature were to attempt its regulation, the judges, differing as to the true construction of the constitution, one side would adjudge that the legislature could give no authority to the court to decide the law, as the constitution had given it to the jury, and the other side would adjudge the contrary, and we would be precisely where we are now.

I remember some years ago, in a neighboring circuit, a man was indicted for larceny, and from the proof was undoubtedly guilty. The counsel moved to quash the indictment, for the want of such description of the property as the law required, in his opinion; the object being, if successful, to get delay, as the grand jury had been adjourned. The court overruled the motion, and the trial was had. In argument to the jury, the counsel took the ground before them, as he had taken it before the judge—that there was a defect in the indictment, for want of proper description of the property—and that the law was this: "if the accusation was not sufficiently set forth there was as much impropriety in finding the accused guilty—although the proof was clear—as there would be to find 'guilty,' on a good indictment without proof." Strange to tell, the jury found a verdict of not guilty.

In a recent case, tried in this circuit, the indictment was for murder, under which the lawyers know man-slaughter may be found; a whole day was consumed by counsel in reading and discussing law to the jury and in explaining what was the law called murder, and what man-slaughter. The prisoner was acquitted. A juror giving a description of what had taken place in the jury room, said they concluded first to take the question on whether the accused had committed murder or not, and they voted by ballot. The ballot was unanimous that he was not guilty of murder. They then voted in the same way as to whether he had been guilty of man-slaughter, and there was found two ballots that he was guilty. One remarked that it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the accused was insane when he committed the act. One of those who voted guilty, replied that he concurred in the opinion expressed, that the accused was insane, and therefore ought not to be found guilty. Yet, as the question taken had been, whether manslaughter had been committed or not, he had voted in the affirmative, as a man had been slaughtered.

These are the judges of law and fact in some circuits. Is it right that it should be so?

For what purpose do you have a judge, if it is not that he may instruct the juries as to the law, and see that the law is properly administered. Is it intended that a judge shall sit upon the bench and decide questions as to the competency of witnesses, and all questions of evidence upon the sufficiency of the indictments, and that counsel may disregard his decisions and make the same questions to the juries? If the true constitutional principle is, that juries are judges of law and fact, what right has the judge to interfere even on questions of evidence, after the jury is sworn. If the juries are to be the sole triers of law and fact, the judge's power should end after the jury is sworn.

There is, to my mind, much of the ridiculous in requiring a grave judge to sit upon the bench merely to keep order in a criminal trial and be compelled to say nothing, although counsel may pervert the law to the prejudice of the commonwealth, or the accused, in the argument to the jury. Where are the boasted protections to the rights of a prisoner in having an impartial trial, when the prosecuting counsel may argue principles to the jury, not law, and the judge cannot instruct them to the contrary. The court should see that the law, and nothing else, is stated to the jury, and should have the power so to state the law, that the jury may understand it, and that counsel should not travel outside of it to the prejudice of the commonwealth, or the accused.

I have not as yet found out where the courts derive their authority to grant new trials in criminal cases, if the constitution gives to juries the exclusive right of judging of the law and the fact, and yet judges who have decided that they cannot say what the law of a case is, take upon themselves to grant new trials in every case where the juries convict, as they may deem improperly.

Let the law be one way or the other throughout the whole commonwealth. If we are to make a tribunal to determine law and fact in the jury, so let us express it; or if we mean to have judges to decide law, and juries facts, let us so determine and make the rule operate the same in every circuit.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BOYD moved the following, as an additional section:

"No charter shall be granted which will confer banking or trading powers, without providing that the private property of stockholders, be made liable for all the debts and obligations of any such corporation or chartered company; but the general assembly may submit such charters, without any such restriction, to the people at a general election, for their approval or rejection."

Mr. HAMILTON offered the following, as a substitute:

"All corporations hereafter established in this commonwealth, in case of failure, the stockholders shall be liable, individually, or collectively, to an amount as large as their stock in such corporation. All banks which now are, or may hereafter be incorporated, shall forfeit their charters, when they refuse to pay their liabilities in gold or silver, and they shall not be re-chartered."

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was then taken on the substitute, and it was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section offered by Mr. BOYD, and they were yeas 29, nays 55.

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Thomas Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe—29.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Jas. Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thos. W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—55.

So the section was rejected.

Mr. MERIWETHER moved to reconsider the vote, rejecting the second of the two sections offered by the gentleman from Christian, (Mr. Gray.) He said on reflection he was satisfied that section should be adopted.

After a few words from Mr. CLARKE, and Mr. RUDD, the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the section.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I presume this is designed to compel individuals in cities and towns to pave the streets before their own doors. I move to strike out the words "streets and alleys, digging and walling of wells." That leaves the side walks. In a certain city that I will not name, they claim the right to make a man pave the streets in front of his lot. That sometimes costs more than the lot is worth. It is unfair, and should be paid out of the general revenue.

The PRESIDENT. The motion is not now in order.

Mr. NESBITT. I shall vote against this amendment, because I do not want the constitution to show that we voted respecting pumps and side walks, and things of that sort. If the legislature have power to tax, that will be sufficient.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am opposed to the whole section. We should leave the matter in the hands of the people. If the principle is to be adopted in the constitution, that we are to be taxed to raise a revenue, and an opposition at once to our work will arise. Let us fix on correct and fundamental principles, and leave the legislature to carry them out. I am opposed to this partial and local legislation.

Mr. KAVANAUGH. I do not know where this principle is to apply, or what it includes. It appears to me to conflict with the section in which we declare that the county revenue could not be assessed on slaves.

After a few words from Mr. RUDD, the question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, which Mr. GRAY had offered as an addition to his second section which was again moved by Mr. MERIWETHER, and it was agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. TURNER, the word "towns" was inserted in the proviso, after the word "county." So that it will read: "Provided, a poll tax may be assessed for county, town, and corporate purposes."

The question again recurred on the adoption of the proposed section as amended.

On the motion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE the section was amended by the insertion of the words "except titheable and poll tax on slaves."

After a few words from Mr. HARDIN and Mr. GRAY, Mr. KAVANAUGH, called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section, and they were yeas 49, nays 36.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thos. James, George W. Johnston, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall,

Martin P. Marshall-David Meriwether, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—49.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, Jas. S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, William Hendrix, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—36.

So the section was adopted.

The convention then took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. CLARKE. The call for the previous question on the nineteenth section, offered by the gentleman from Christian, (Mr. Gray,) prevented me from offering an amendment to it, and with a view to move a reconsideration I voted for it. I was a member of the legislature in '42 or '43, and the pressing demands on the treasury, to pay contractors and laborers on the public works, and the heavy burden of taxation on the people rendered it necessary that some other means should be resorted to, to increase the public revenue. In the absence of any other resource, I voted, although satisfied at the time, that I was wrong, and was violating a great principle, for the specific tax on watches, spectacles, etc. If the motion for reconsideration prevails, I intend to move to strike out of this nineteenth section, the words "merchants and pedlers." I do not think the legislature should possess the power to impose specific taxes on this class of citizens, for they will not pay it, but the mass of the people generally. They would increase the price of their commodities so as to reimburse themselves for the taxes they would have to pay, and thus indirectly the tax would be one on the people. This no man can deny, and I am opposed to holding out an idea to the people that we are taxing merchants and pedlers to raise revenue, when it is only the people themselves that we are taxing. It is upon the principle that the consumer pays the duties imposed on articles imported into the United States. We go against specific taxation because it is unequal and against the minimum principle, because it is fixing a fictitious value on property, and entertaining these views, I cannot consistently vote for a section professedly imposing specific taxes on merchants and pedlers, but indirectly levying it on the people themselves. I only consented to vote for the specific taxes of '42 and '43, because I believed the debt they were to meet, had benefitted particularly those portions of the state where were most of the articles upon which the specific taxation was levied. I believed it but fair that those who had received the greatest benefit from the money borrowed, should bear the heaviest burden for its repayment. I yielded to the necessities of the case then, and voted for a specific tax, believing then as I now believe, that it was wrong, and I cannot consent to vote now for any section in the constitution, which gives that power to the legislature. I move then, with the views I have indicated, a reconsideration of the vote by which this section was adopted.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I am glad that the gentleman has moved to reconsider, and I hope the motion will prevail; though not particularly on the ground of the policy or impolicy of specific taxation. On this subject, I think a sound public sentiment will, and must control through the tax imposing power. I am willing to go so far as to say that all taxation shall be equal and uniform, upon land and negroes, in view of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Daviess, (Mr. Triplett,) of any possible danger at a future day of so inordinate a specific taxation on negroes as to render them worthless to their owners. But, in any other respect, I would not say to the legislature, that no matter what might be the emergency, they shall not impose a specific tax on any property. It is a matter for public sentiment to control, and the very fact that the legislatures have not yet repealed the present specific tax is an evidence that it is not against the general public sentiment. With these views, I shall vote for the motion to reconsider.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail. As the section now stands, I am inclined to the opinion that it would prevent, in cities, the exercise of that species of specific taxation known as assessments, by which only a system of public improvement in cities can be carried on. It was a graduation of the taxation upon the owners of property, in proportion to the benefits they derived from the improvements. All gentlemen from cities would understand this, and it would be a death blow to the prosperity of those cities to deny them this privilege. As to the general question, it is one which should be left to the control of the legislature under the influence of public sentiment and public emergencies.

Mr. GRAY. I hope the vote will not be reconsidered, and that the convention will adhere to the decision it has so solemnly made. I think we ought to lay down in the fundamental law, a certain general principle of taxation, right in itself, which should govern the legislature. It would certainly be a strange proposition to throw out to the people, to say that there should only be two kinds of property—land and negroes—on which taxation should be equal and uniform, as proposed by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Wickliffe.) I am for making the application of the principle general. Nor do I agree with the principle as declared by the gentleman from Simpson, (Mr. Clarke,) that when you tax pedlars and merchants, it is the people who pay the taxes. Tax or no tax, they will as now, put as high a price on their articles as the people will pay. As to the effect of the proposition on cities, I think the gentleman from Kenton, (Mr. Stevenson,) is mistaken. They could carry on their improvements by general taxation, as is the case in most of the towns now. I am aware that some property derives greater benefit from these improvements than others, and for that reason, I was willing to make an exception in the section to meet such cases, but as the section has been adopted, I think it hardly worth while to reconsider for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad that the motion to reconsider has been made, for I am opposed to the whole section, because I believe that this power of raising revenue ought to be confided to the legislature. What is the use of this section? It declares that the legislature shall possess the power to impose certain taxes, but has not the legislature that power as fully and completely without that declaration as with it? Most certainly; and why make the declaration in the constitution then? I voted for the section myself, when I saw the previous question moved, with a view of moving a reconsideration, and thus affording an opportunity for that full and free discussion which should be given to all subjects proposed to be embodied in constitutional law. I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail, and I shall vote against the whole section.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is against this inhibition of the power of cities to lay specific taxation, on the petition of the owners of the property assessed themselves, that I protest. I have nothing to say against the general proposition; on the contrary, there is no more firm advocate of uniform taxation than myself, but I know that the cities cannot exist without the power to which I have referred.

Mr. PRESTON. If the section is reconsidered, I shall move an amendment to obviate the inconvenience under which the cities will be placed. If not, then I shall offer an additional section, with the view to the attainment of that object.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. Will it strike the people that there is any thing dangerous in declaring that taxation shall be equal and uniform? It seems to me to be a rule which it is imperatively the duty of this convention to adopt and engraft in the constitution. Is there any thing wrong or startling in it? If there is, let us try the reverse of the proposition, and say that taxation shall not be equal and uniform throughout Kentucky. Do you think that would look well in the constitution? Or would it look well, or be calculated to give strength to the constitution, to say that all property on which taxation is levied shall not be taxed in proportion to its value? The object of gentlemen seems to be to reach indirectly what the convention refused to do directly this morning. It is to give to cities and towns a power which, in my judgment, ought never to be given to them, and which is not necessary to their prosperity. I have heard of an instance in one of our cities, where, for the opening of a street, a citizen was made to pay more than his lot was worth. Then the work formed a pond on the lot, which was declared to be a nuisance, and then he was obliged to go to the expense of filling up his lot to abate the nuisance. All this may be very necessary for ought I know to the prosperity of cities, but it looks wrong to me. I do trust this convention will not exhibit this disposition to change, that will have a tendency to give an idea to the public of uncertainty in reference to our action here by this continual reconsideration of what is done. I do not like the rule of the witness, who having once sworn that his horse was sixteen feet high, determined to adhere to it, for that is not right. But there is a rule which I think ought to be adopted, and that is to measure the horse, and know how high he is before we swear to it.

Mr. DAVIS admitted the general correctness of the principle contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Christian, (Mr. Gray,) but doubted its practicability and policy, and maintained that the public treasury might hereafter be in such exigency as to require additional revenue, which could only be obtained through those sources which the principle of the amendment would cut off.

Mr. TURNER concurred in these views, and hoped the motion to reconsider would prevail.

The question being taken—by yeas and nays on the call of Mr. BROWN—the motion to reconsider prevailed; yeas 75, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Wm. Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Cope-lin, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benj. F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, Wm. Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Chas. C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. N. Lindsey, Thos. W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jas. M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Jas. Rudd, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Geo. W. Williams, Silas Woodson—75.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Wm. Bradley, William C. Bullitt, Jesse Coffey, Milford Elliott, Nathau Gaither, Jas. H. Garrard, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, Alexander K. Marshall, Johnson Price, Ignatius A. Spalding, Andrew S. White—16.

Mr. CLARKE moved to strike out the words "merchants and pedlers."

Mr. BROWN asked for a division—the question to be first taken on striking out the word "merchants."

The motion to strike out the word "merchants" was rejected, as was also the motion to strike out the word "pedler."

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL moved, with a view, (as he said,) of testing the sense of the convention, to strike out all of the section except the words, "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state."

Mr. TRIPLETT. I move to strike out the whole of the section, and to insert the following:

"The legislature shall have no power to lay taxes on land or slaves, except on the ad valorem principle; or a higher tax on slaves, in proportion to their value, than on land: Provided, That a poll tax may be assessed on slaves for county and corporate purposes."

The amendment explains itself, and attains all that I ever sought to attain by voting for the 19th and 20th sections. I believe the great object the convention has in view, is to protect slave property from excessive taxation, and in this there will be no difficulty, if we link it with landed property. All other subjects I am willing to leave in the hands of the legislature. The great object that we have in view is to lay down land-marks and general principles, the carrying into execution of which we must leave to the legislature. All must concede the impossibility of carrying out in the organic law any principle of mere detail. The experience of this convention has demonstrated the difficulty and impossibility of thus carrying out matters of detail. Let us therefore confine ourselves to the laying down of general principles and land-marks merely, for the guidance of legislation. And as such, I hope that either this proposition, or one having the same object in view, will be adopted by the convention.

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. Mr. President: I regard this as a grave and important question. I do not doubt, no man doubts, the correctness of the general principle involved in the amendment under consideration. Slaves are property, lands are property, and they should be taxed equally. This, as a naked proposition, I mean not to contest. But, sir, there spring out of the institution of slavery, risks, dangers, and expense, of a peculiar kind; expense which, in my judgment, ought not to be defrayed by the community at large, but should be met by that particular interest, on account of which it is to be incurred, and but for which no such danger, and no such charge, would impend or could happen. While all of us, sir, are determined in defence of the property itself, to interpose the constitutionalegis to the utmost extent that justice can require; still, sir, that institution should not be permitted to become, not only a source of danger, but a ground of charge and expense, to other and distinct interests of the state.

At this particular period of our history, the whole subject of slavery presents matter of deeper feeling, and more excitement, than any other property we possess. Our land we know to be firm, and stable, and safe; our slaves we feel are not. Sir, the safety of that property is dependent first upon a well ordered public sentiment in regard to it. It is well known that that sentiment in Kentucky is now in favor of sustaining the institution. The people, a large majority of whom hold no slaves, feeling that we have been induced, by laws recognizing and founding the institution, to invest our money in this property, are disposed to protect us in it; but while they are ready to do this, they are not prepared to protect the slave holder in the enjoyment of his peculiar property, at the expense of their own. I shall therefore be in favor of this amendment, if there shall be added to it something like this: "And all expenses which the commonwealth shall incur for the protection of the slave institution, shall be assessed by a specific tax on that property." Then the gentleman's amendment will square with justice, and meet the public sentiment of the state.

Mr. TRIPLET. I suppose the gentleman's object is, that whenever a slave is executed, his expense shall be borne by those who own slaves.

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. More than that, sir. That, to be sure, is one of my objects, and one in which, I doubt not, the people of Kentucky will sustain me, as just and proper. But farther than that; difficulties, growing out of this subject, are occurring on our border, and other questions will arise. Sir, I am a slaveholder. Upon my farm I hold and work a number of slaves, like the balance of you. Interest should enable me to view this subject justly, at least so far as the rights of the class to which I belong are concerned. I have endeavored, (and I think I have succeeded,) to approach it with as fair a purpose as can influence the mind of any man. Our border is in a disturbed condition, stretching as it does along a river front of near eight hundred miles, with three free states facing and coterminous. Our neighbors beyond the Ohio, with active means, are inciting the slave to leave his master; they make this property hard to hold. If this state of things continue, the burden will become intolerable to the slave holder, throughout the long line of that great river. Then will be suggested and the government of the state will feel the necessity of organizing an armed police, a coast guard, to protect such a number of her citizens, and such a mass of property, against the efforts equally subtle and energetic, of this abolition frenzy. When the occasion fairly to be anticipated shall occur, it will cause an expense which no man here can estimate. The revenue necessary to defray it will be a question for the consideration of the legislature. I tell you sir, that the border counties in the northern part of the state now hold their slaves by a tenure so frail, a chain so slight, so fragile, that it only wants the will and the knowledge on the part of the slave, not to break, but to glide from his fetters. These things are drawing to a head in the northern part of the state. The necessity has come for the exertion of the power of the state to protect this class of her citizens and this description of property.

Sir, I repeat it, for the protection of a great but peculiar interest in this property, there must soon be an armed police along that border, sufficiently strong in numbers to guard this interest, and this sir, will be placing the state in armed and hostile array against the powerful organization, the fierce and "methodical madness" of abolition beyond the Ohio. When this thing shall be done, are you prepared to say, that the lands and other interests of this commonwealth shall be taxed to support something like a standing army, for the protection of this institution? Is there a mind among us that believes the people of Kentucky, a law-abiding people, as they are, will ever consent to this? Five-sevenths of them own no slaves; the other two-sevenths trembled under the call of this convention for the security of this property, at once great and feeble, vast in point of interest, insignificant almost in the numerical force, the political strength directly interested in its support. In this state of things, this overwhelming majority of five-sevenths, forgetting all other feelings, discarding, merging all other considerations of reason or of policy, or of a separate interest, in a regard for what they considered the vested rights of a minority thus feeble, surrendered this convention to their control. They have excluded from this hall, some of the wisest and ablest men of the state, merely because they feared rather than believed, they might desire to interfere with these rights of the weak. They have sent a proslavery convention, merely because of their sense of justice and honor, their respect to a property peculiar in its kind, feeble and comparatively limited as to the number interested. Sir, in the present state of the question, in the sweeping tendencies of the age, could higher evidence be found of the sense of justice and honor, that lofty sense of justice and honor, which compels the deference of power to right, the proud submission of strength to weakness, than is furnished by the composition of this assembly? Sir, the monument is here before us, an everlasting monument of the capacity of the non-slaveholders of Kentucky, to guard their own rights, to protect their own interests; and it is to be found in that caution, that tender caution, which they have shown for the rights and interests of others, when overwhelming power was in the other scale. I have said, sir, forgetting all other feelings, discarding all other considerations of reason or policy, save a regard for vested rights, the people of Kentucky have thus acted. I repeat it, do not place it in your minds that the people of Kentucky believe slavery to be a blessing, or that they have so decided. There are not a dozen well-balanced minds in this house that believe slavery to be a blessing.

With few exceptions, you believe it to be a social and political evil. Few of you, indeed, under the broad light which experience has thrown on the subject, were the question of the introduction of slavery now open, few of you indeed, I am persuaded, would impose it upon Kentucky. Can these facts be denied? Can any gentleman here look over the population of his own county, and fail to acknowledge that on the abstract question of the social and political evil of slavery, a large majority entertain the views I have stated? Not one of you can do it. And when this people have generously surrendered to the minority all control over the subject, I ask you, if with that power in your hands, thus obtained, you do not make a poor, I will not say ungrateful return, if you fail to provide, that the institution shall sustain itself? I ask you further, if the matter is not likely to force upon the country other expenses besides those to which I have alluded? The expense of executing slaves heretofore has been light, and the ad valorem taxation has been sufficient to pay for the capital punishment of condemned slaves. But should the institution, either by the influence of the fanatic frenzy of abolitionism, or the mistaken enthusiasm and awakened hope of the slave himself, bring on this fair land the dark horrors of a servile insurrection, there may be, independent of the cost of suppressing the insurrection itself, a thousand slaves executed in one year. These must be paid for under the existing law of the land, and if the gentleman's amendment shall pass without amendment, in such an emergency a debt will be thrown upon the treasury which it will not be able to defray.

In framing a constitution which is to last, we hope for all time to come, we should not be governed solely by the existing condition of things, but should have a due regard to the possible contingencies that may arise in the future. If such an insurrection should occur, throwing on your treasury an expense, say of $500,000, would you think it fair to lay the tax upon lands as well as negroes, to pay the slave-owner for the use of his property? And yet such is the effect of this amendment. I most solemnly warn gentlemen of one fact, that whenever the institution of slavery, from any cause, becomes obnoxious to the sentiment of the country, then is it indeed in danger. Whenever injustice is perpetrated wilfully and plainly by the slaveholders, upon the other property-holders, to sustain the institution, then will they feel themselves absolved from the high obligations which have caused the representation on this floor, and at perfect liberty to take the subject into their own hands. And when they do, they will not deal as tenderly with it, as I might think justice would require them to do. I am proud, and justly proud of the population whom I here represent, and who although slaveholding in part, entertain the same views in regard to this question which I do. From every part of that county, I was told not to interfere when here with slave property; but to resist every attempt at emancipation. That although they regarded it as a social and moral evil, yet they desired it to be left to the operation of natural causes, to work its own cure, and not to be subjected to legislative enactments. I stand here the representative of the sentiments of the people of Fleming county, thus avowed and expressed, and I challenge gentlemen to point out any thing more noble, elevated, and just. Yet, sir, intelligent as they are, were the question put to them, whether in all time to come, they would sustain the institution at the expense of the non-slaveholding portion of the community, they would say no. They would say the men who enjoy the property should pay the public expenses of it; that it was but just and proper that by a positive law of the state, the institutions should be made to sustain itself.

I am not aware that in any part of this proposed constitution, a provision is made for the payment to the owner for slaves taken for execution. If there is not there should be, and I will vote for the amendment if it shall be so qualified as to provide that these charges upon the treasury shall be met by a tax on slave property. This property now is not taxed any more than land for such a purpose. A change in this respect is desired by those who own no slaves, and who are paying an ad valorem tax necessary for the extinguishment of the public debt. Do not understand me as favoring the idea of taking a slave for public use any more than land or any thing else, without due compensation. I hold no such principle, and will occupy no such attitude. It is most clearly the policy of the state to pay for negroes so taken. It is a policy pursued ever since the formation of the government, and without complaint. The object is to remove the temptation from the master to carry offenders out of the reach of justice.

But at the same time I insist upon it that expenses thus accruing, should come out of the pockets of the slaveholders. The institution of slavery stands on its own basis. The permanence and safety of society does not require its introduction, nor is it at all a necessary element of civilization. On the contrary, the greatest advance of society, and the highest grade of civilization known to ancient or modern times, is and has been where property in man is unknown. It is merely property by municipal regulation, and depends for its existence upon the existence of these regulations. All that I ask is that the institution shall be fitted to public sentiment and not become a burden and an expense to those not interested in it. If my views are understood, I have accomplished my purpose.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. I am opposed to the section as it stands, and the proposition of the gentleman from Daviess. I look upon this question as one of great magnitude, and as I should like to give my views on the subject, I move that the convention adjourn.

The convention then adjourned.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER, 8, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. NORTON.

MODE OF AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. MERIWETHER, from the committee on the revision of the constitution and slavery, reported the following article, prescribing the mode of amending the constitution, and on his motion, it was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

ARTICLE —.

When experience shall point out the necessity of amending this constitution, and when a majority of all the members elected to each house of the general assembly shall, within the first twenty days of any regular session, concur in passing a law for taking the sense of the good people of this commonwealth as to the necessity and expediency of calling a convention, it shall be the duty of the several sheriffs, and other officers of elections, at the next general election which shall be held for representatives in the state legislature, after the passage of such law, to open a poll for, and make return to the secretary of state, for the time being, of the names of all those entitled to vote for representatives, who have voted for calling a convention; and if, thereupon, it shall appear that a majority of all the citizens of this state, entitled to vote for representatives, have voted for calling a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next regular session, direct that a similar poll shall be opened, and return made, for the next election for representatives; and if, thereupon, it shall appear that a majority of all the citizens of this state, entitled to vote for representatives, have voted for calling a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, pass a law calling a convention, to consist of as many members as there shall be in the house of representatives, and no more; to be chosen in the same manner and proportion, at the same time and places, and possessed of the same qualifications that representatives are, by citizens entitled to vote for representatives; and to meet within three months after their election, for the purpose of re-adopting, amending, or changing this constitution; but if it shall appear by the vote of either year, as aforesaid, that a majority of all the citizens entitled to vote for representatives did not vote for calling a convention, a convention shall not be then called. And for the purpose of ascertaining whether a majority of the citizens, entitled to vote for representatives, did or did not vote for calling a convention, as above, the legislature passing the law authorizing such vote shall provide for ascertaining the number of citizens entitled to vote for representatives within the state. All cases of contested elections, and where two or more candidates for delegate to any convention which may be called under this constitution, shall have an equal number of votes, shall be decided in the same manner as may be provided by law for similar cases arising in elections to the house of representatives.

Mr. TURNER presented the following as another plan which he had prepared, to provide a mode of amending the constitution:

"ARTICLE —.

"In the year — it shall be the duty of the several sheriffs and other returning officers, to take the sense of the good people of this commonwealth, as to the necessity and expediency of calling a convention, at the several places of voting in their respective counties, on the first Monday in August, by opening a poll for, and making a return to the secretary of state, for the time being, of the names of all those entitled to vote for representatives, who shall vote for calling a convention. And, if thereupon, it shall appear that a majority of all the citizens of this state, entitled to vote for representatives, have voted for a convention, a similar poll shall be opened and taken for the next year; and if a majority of all the citizens of the state, entitled to vote for representatives, shall a second year vote for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, call a convention, to consist of as many members as there shall be in the house of representatives, and no more; to be chosen at the same time, manner, and places, and in the same proportion that representatives are chosen, and to meet in three months after the said election, for the purpose of re-adopting, amending, or changing, this constitution. The qualification of delegates to the convention, shall be the same as members of the house of representatives, except that ministers of the gospel shall be eligible as members of the convention. If it shall appear by the vote of either year, as aforesaid, that a majority of all the citizens entitled to vote for representatives did not vote for a convention, none shall be called; and a similar poll shall be opened every — year, until a majority, as aforesaid, shall, for two years in succession, vote for a call of a convention; and when such vote shall be given, the general assembly shall, at their next session, call a convention as above prescribed, and pass such laws for carrying the call into effect as may be proper."

He said the old plan of revising the constitution authorises the question to be brought before the people every year, and, as a matter of course, the slave question can be agitated every year, thereby keeping the public mind in a state of continued excitement. It goes into the legislature, and if two or three persons happen to be there who wish to agitate the question of emancipation, they can raise it there, and debate it, and thus keep the community in a state of constant anxiety. I think, sir, the mode of specific amendments, suggested by some gentlemen, is open to the same objection, because it would be productive of the same evil. You place it in the hands of the legislature, and on every occasion, when that body is assembled, this question of slavery may be brought up.

Now, the mode which I propose is, that at stated periods, the people themselves shall vote whether they will have a convention or not. The politicians are to have nothing at all to do with it. The people vote upon it; and if there is, for the time being, a majority of electors against any suggested amendment, it is put over until the next stated period when such amendment can be again agitated.

The intervals, in the resolution I have offered, are left blank; if the general principle of the resolution should be approved by the convention, these intervals can be filled up as they may deem most conducive to the general welfare.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I am anxious that this convention should not appear to give the slightest indication of any idea that the right of property in slaves is to be abolished, but that the fullest possible guaranty should be given to every man holding property of this description, that he shall hold it inviolate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am pleased, at all times, to see gentlemen offer different propositions for amending our constitution; but I will say, that some of the gentlemen upon the floor of this convention, who profess to be pro-slavery men, have taken a course calculated to do more harm than all the preachings of all the emancipationists in the country. From the course which has been adopted by some gentlemen here, we are putting the strongest kind of arguments into their mouths, and we are strengthening their hands against ourselves.

Every gentleman appears to have made up his mind as to the mode by which the constitution, at any future day, should be amended; we are well instructed upon that matter; but in regard to the question of slavery, I do think the house have no discretion—no power; and I protest against our taking such a course as will give emancipationists an opportunity of drawing arguments from our words or our proceedings, to justify them in their fanatical course on this question. From the discussions which have taken place here, I much fear that we have supplied arguments which may hereafter be used in attempts to weaken the stability of this institution. I am not a slaveholder; I came here to represent a constituency not holding slaves to any large extent; but I am a pro-slavery man—I am in favor of slavery for the sake of slavery. But when we argue this question in the mode in which it has hitherto been argued on this floor, we are, I am satisfied, only putting weapons into the hands of our enemies, which may be used against us. Let us then, make a constitution to meet the requirements and the wishes of the people, and leave this question of slavery to be settled by those whose business it is to settle it.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will vote for the printing of the resolution, and its reference to the appropriate committee, as indicated by the gentleman. I have entire confidence in the intelligence, integrity, and wisdom of this convention, and I have no fears that any proposition, no matter how inflammatory in its nature, or erroneous in its positions, will either corrupt or mislead them. But sir, it does seem to me, that if we have come up here, instructed upon any one subject whatever, it is to settle, as far as possible, and place beyond controversy and agitation, that most exciting of all other questions: the question of slavery. It seems to me, sir, to insert in the constitution we are about to frame, a clause, that a convention shall be called, or voted on every five, ten, or even twenty years, would be all the emancipationists would want, or, under existing circumstances, could ask. Insert this clause, sir, and they would at once proclaim upon the house tops, that Kentucky, at the expiration of the time fixed in the constitution, should be rescued from what they denominate, the curse of slavery. They would bring up their men, armed and equipped for battle, from the north and from the south, from the east and from the west, and you would thus enable them to destroy the very interest and institution we came here to secure. All I ask, is for gentlemen to consider this proposition before they vote upon it.

Mr. R. N. WICKLIFFE. There, sir, is a resolution, providing another mode of amending the constitution, but I think this is not the proper time to discuss it. The subject will come up in a few days on the report of the committee, and that, in my judgment, will be the appropriate time to discuss this resolution. I therefore move the previous question.

The main question was ordered to be now put, and the motion to lay on the table and print was agreed to.

Mr. WALLER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in the constitution formed by this convention, the same provisions in relation to slavery should be inserted as in the present constitution, with an additional clause prohibiting the emancipation of slaves, to remain in the state."

He moved that it be laid on the table and printed, with an intimation that he would ask for its consideration on Wednesday next.

The motion to lay on the table and print was agreed to.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the additional section of Mr. GRAY to the report of the committee on general provisions, to which Mr. TRIPLETT had moved an amendment.

Mr. W. C. MARSHALL. Under somewhat of impulse last evening, I requested this convention to adjourn, with a view that I might have an opportunity of presenting some remarks this morning, on the subject which was then under consideration. If I had felt then as I do now, I do not know that I should have been tempted to offer one remark upon the subject, but in all probability would have contented myself with giving a silent vote upon this question. The positions assumed by the gentleman who closed the debate last evening, were to me somewhat novel and startling, and I candidly confess, excited me; and whilst laboring under that excitement, I asked the convention to adjourn, in order that I might have an opportunity of replying to the positions assumed by the gentleman from Fleming: I had hoped, sir, that the interrogatories propounded to the gentleman during his remarks, would have caused him to pause, and in some degree, to retrace his steps. In this, however, I was mistaken.

Having asserted the proposition, as he did, in a somewhat excited manner—in a manner peculiar to himself—(because the position which he occupies upon this floor, and elsewhere, is of a character that gives him position in society—that gives him position in a body like this—that gives him position in any place)—I felt, Mr. President, after those propositions were asserted, and the manner in which they were asserted, that we were going too far upon this question. I regretted, exceedingly, that the proposition introduced by my friend from Daviess had called forth a discussion, out of which no good can ever grow to our state; and I still more regret that it should have become necessary for any gentleman on this floor, entertaining the views that I do, to be constrained to oppose them.

Mr. President, in the years 1841-2, I had the honor of a seat on this floor; I then occupied the seat I now occupy. When a question was presented by the governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky, showing the condition of the finances of the state; when it was discovered that the treasury was almost entirely exhausted, and that the means which we had to meet the demands against it were wholly inadequate. The legislature was appealed to, by every sense of honor and justice, to save the state, and relieve it from its embarrassments.

A proposition was introduced into this house in that year, with a view to raise the taxes to meet the deficit, but that proposition was defeated. The banks of Kentucky came forward and paid off the interest of the debt due to the bond holders. They became the creditors at home, instead of obliging us to seek credit abroad. They stepped forward in this great emergency, relieving the credit and character of Kentucky, and the legislature was appealed to for the purpose of paying off that debt and relieving the state of the burdens that then hung around it. In what manner was the proposition received by this body? A proposition was made for an increased taxation to the amount of one cent on the dollar upon a fair valuation of all property, and out of one hundred members on this floor, there were only three who raised their voices to provide means for paying this debt. That proposition was opposed on this floor; it was asserted that the debt had grown out of a system of extravagance and improvident expenditure in carrying out our system of internal improvements, and that the people looked to these improvements now as a means whereby this debt should be discharged. These improvements had failed to meet the expectations of their projectors, and it was thrown in the teeth of every gentleman on that floor who advocated that system that they must devise ways and means by which this debt should be paid; that taxation, for the purpose, was improper, and that the people of the state were unwilling to bear it. I heard it with pain and regret. I, who represented but a small county, whose people are poor—a county whose borders are swept by the Ohio, and looking to that as the natural outlet to our trade, having failed to secure any of the benefits of our system of internal improvements—not a dollar having been expended within its limits, still sir, I heard it argued with pain and regret that these improvements should be made to pay this debt, and that no means should be resorted to to save the state from the emergency in which it was then placed. On that occasion I stood upon this floor representing a small county, mountainous in its character and sparsely populated. But I came here not to represent that county alone, I came here to represent the people of Kentucky; and I was proud to say that when I cast my vote, I represented the unanimous sentiments of the people of my county, and sir, I was proud to occupy the same seat which I now occupy, because I had determined that I would never be the willing instrument of disgracing my county and my state. Yet, sir, those means were unprovided; and what were we to do? In the language of the gentlemen from Bourbon and Jefferson, equality of taxation is beautiful in the abstract. Who can object to it? None; none; but I ask gentlemen, and all who hear me on this occasion, let a crisis come like that, and place them in the position I occupied then, and what would they have done. Sir, I am proud of that vote. The gentleman from Simpson was present and voted with me. He said he felt constrained as an honest man to give that vote, and yet he regrets it as the worst vote he ever gave; while I regard it as a vote reflecting more credit upon him, than any given by him during that session.

At that time, sir, while Arkansas and Mississippi had repudiated, and Indiana was on the very verge of repudiation, Kentucky stood high, and her bonds were held at par all over the world. I ask that gentleman, and all who hear me, if an emergency like that should arise, would any gentleman on this floor be unwilling to provide the necessary means to relieve the state from such an embarrassment? No man, I am sure, would rise from his seat and say, in the presence of the congregated gentlemen on this floor, that he would be willing to refuse to do all in his power to save the credit and the honor of the state. Let, however, such a proposition as this pass, and there is no power in the legislature; your government is disarmed and has no power to meet an exigency that might come upon us as it did in the year 1842. I am as unwilling, sir, to tie up the hands of the legislature, as I am to manacle the people of Kentucky.

Of all subjects, sir, that of taxation is the most delicate; nothing but a high sense of duty and of moral honesty can force a man to come up to the mark that honesty and justice demands at their hands; and I ask you to look at that section, proposed to be inserted in your constitution, and say whether we are not tied up, hand and foot, and the legislature rendered powerless. That is the position in which we are placed, and I see not how it is to be remedied unless we look to that state of things in which Kentucky never can be in debt. While, however, she is in debt, the interest must be provided for as well as some means of ultimately extinguishing the principal.

These were the motives, sir, which induced me then to vote for this specific law, so odious in the estimation of many gentlemen present. I voted for it then; and two years afterwards, when I had the honor of a seat on this floor, and a proposition was made to repeal that law, I voted against its repeal. And why did I do so? Because it was imperative that the state should provide for her exigencies; that she should meet the demands which were made upon her treasury and her sinking fund. And on whom, and on what did that tax fall? Upon the wealthy citizens of our state; upon the luxuries of the country. Sir, of all portions of Kentucky who walked up boldly towards meeting the demands upon the treasury, those who live in the wealthy portions of our state are the first to respond to that call. It is those who pay least that complain the most; while at the same time those who pay the most, pay it most cheerfully; and this was to meet a crisis which, I trust in God, may never occur again.

Whilst I am opposed, sir, to the proposition of the gentleman from Christian, I am equally opposed to that of the gentleman from Daviess. I think it is wrong, sir; and but for the proposition submitted by my friend from Daviess, and the remarks made by the gentleman from Fleming, I would not have addressed the convention this morning.

Why all this excitement, Mr. President, on the subject of slavery here? Why all this talking about rebellion and insurrection, and the instability of our institutions, and about keeping out the incendiaries and the fanatics of the north? If our institutions are placed upon so frail a basis as this, if we are to be alarmed at every corner, and by every brawling demagogue who takes it into his head that slavery is a great moral and social evil—if our institutions stand upon a foundation so precarious that every breath, however foul, may sweep them into oblivion, why it is better that they should go at once. I ask my friend from Fleming, who, though he says he is a pro-slavery man, yet affirms that slavery is a moral and a social evil, and that every gentleman on this floor admits it to be so, though I differ with him on that subject—I ask him why all this talk, all this excitement, all this dread in reference to this institution? He regards it as a moral and a social wrong. I have never regarded it, nor do I yet regard it in that view. The question is asked, as a new proposition, "if slavery had never existed in Kentucky would you introduce it now?" I do not think it necessary to answer that question at this time; but as it exists now, I am not prepared to admit that it is a moral and a social wrong. Kentucky, wherever she is known, stands high in character for chivalry, bravery, intelligence, integrity, honor and purity; and what is it that keeps her pure? In my judgment it is nothing but the institution of slavery. Strike that out and what do you get? A mongrel people; your identity of character is gone; your chivalry is gone; your purity is gone; your whole character is destroyed. These I believe, are the effects of the institution of slavery; and so far from its working moral and social wrong, I am of opinion it is working moral and social good. The gentleman says, "Do away with slavery and the stalwart sons of the north will supply the place of the slave? What north? The north of this Union? No sir, with men from the north of Europe. And what are their habits and qualifications for business? Is it to cultivate your soil? Are they capable of arts and manufactures? No sir, they are fit for neither. Drive out your slaves and fill up your country with a population of this description and you have lost all, sunk all, thrown away all that has ever contributed to give Kentucky a name among the states of this Union.

You have heard a great deal said about our sister state of Ohio, and the rapid progress she has made in civilization, art, improvement and wealth; but I tell you that God has made a wide difference between the state of Ohio and the state of Kentucky. Ohio has her lakes on the north and her river on the south, both affording the most admirable outlets for her produce. She has all the facilities that a country could desire, to promote her commercial prosperity. On the other hand, Kentucky may be said to be an inland, and consequently, a purely agricultural country—not commercial—compelled to depend entirely upon her own productions, the only outlet for carrying off her surplus produce being the Ohio, on her northern border. We depend upon slaves for carrying on those pursuits. You build up your towns and cities in other states, and carry on your commerce with every portion of the civilized world; but in such case your great agricultural interests must be neglected, and dwindle into insignificance. Such must be the result in this state, if you attempt to follow such a course. Your lands now, which, on an average, are worth from seven dollars to seven dollars and fifty cents per acre, would not be worth half that amount. Drive out your slaves, and so far from increasing the value of your lands, that value will be woefully diminished, and a decrease in the quantity of your produce, and in the value of your lands, must, of necessity, bring about a decrease in the revenue.

I know that these views are not entertained by some; but so far as I have been able to bestow reflection on the subject, this is the deliberate conviction of my mind. I have seen those "stalwart sons"—I have been in Ohio, and seen how business is carried on; and so far as I have been in Ohio, I can tell my friend that those "gentlemen" who come from Europe are not qualified to carry on the great agricultural pursuits of our country in the manner in which we carry them on here; and that, were we to introduce them into Kentucky, we should be losers rather than gainers by the operation. But is that all? If the question rested merely upon this, I should not have made a single remark.

But strange to say, we hear of rebellion and insurrection. Living, as I do, on the margin of the Ohio, I think I may safely say that I understand the feelings which operate upon the minds of the whole people of northern Kentucky; but I was startled last evening when I heard the gentleman from Fleming say that if insurrection should arise, if rebellion should be brought about, it would come from the north of the state. Insurrection, sir! In what way? brought about by whom? Insurrection! brought about by the negroes! Insurrection! brought about by the citizens of our own state—by the fanatics of the north! But it matters not from what quarter it may come; he tells you that in such case—in case of insurrection, slavery must sustain itself; that the whole cost of suppressing such an insurrection must be met by the institution itself.

Mr. President, I ask how does Kentucky stand in relation to your slaves and taxation? She pays into your state treasury every year, $70,000 as part of your revenue—she pays in her counties about $40,000—she pays to your sinking fund $35,000—to your school fund $14,000, independent of the actual revenue paid into the treasury of $70,000. There is, besides this, a poll tax on all slaves over sixteen years of age, and of these there are eighty-nine thousand. Of slaves under sixteen, there are about one hundred and eleven thousand. They pay, then, $70,000, as revenue; expenses of this convention; $14,000; school tax, $14,000; sinking fund, $35,000; and for county purposes, $40,000.—Take the whole amount of tax that they pay to the commonwealth of Kentucky, and it will reach $173,000. And is that all they pay? No. Independently of this $173,000, which is paid in the shape of taxes, every negro over sixteen years of age is bound to work upon the roads. Calculate that, and you will find that the whole amount of labor will bring it up to $40,000 more, making a total of upwards of $200,000. Now, what is the amount realized from all the lands in the state? About $200,000. If the negroes, therefore, pay a revenue into the state treasury of $70,000; of $14,000 to the school fund; $14,000 for expenses of convention; of $35,000 to the sinking fund, and of $40,000 for county purposes, and $40,000 more for road purposes, they pay a sum equivalent to $213,000; making a larger amount of tax paid by the slave population of the state, than is paid by all the lands in Kentucky. And yet, the gentleman says, if an insurrection should come—if a rebellion should be brought about by the citizens of our own state—if they should invite the slaves to rebellion—if the man who owns no slaves in your state—the man who has no interest in your country, should create an insurrection—if such a man should create an insurrection, your lands, your carriages, your buggies, your watches, your spectacles, are not to be taxed to maintain the general peace! Oh, no; these must not pay a cent of the expense—not a dollar to meet this demand. I ask, is this right? Is this equality? Is there any fairness in such a proposition as this?

I go further. A slave is kidnapped from Kentucky, and goes into Ohio; the owner of the slave follows him, (I saw an instance mentioned in the papers the other day, of a man who went to Cincinnati in pursuit of a slave, and a fight occurred)—well, a slave is kidnapped; the owner, in accordance with laws existing mutually between the states, follows him; a fight occurs in his attempt to recover his slave, and the white man should be the cause of it in consequence of this attempt; there are those who say that the whole expense incurred in such case should be met by taxation upon the owners of slaves—in other words upon the slave population of Kentucky. If his position is true, he might carry it out in all its bearings, and what would be the result, if brought about by one of your own citizens—a freeman of your own commonwealth—no matter that the right to bring back his slave is guaranteed to him by his own constitution, and the constitution of the United States—if such a result be brought about, these expenses are to be met, and to be met alone in that form. I ask the gentleman, in all candor, if he intends to go thus far?—if this is the point at which he is driving?—this the end which he aims to accomplish? I trust not.

But again, if a slave is executed in Kentucky, the gentleman says that this must be a tax upon the institution. And why, in all conscience? Those who own slaves (and I can hardly say that personally, I am interested in this matter, for I do not own slaves to any extent—I can only boast of three—but it is the interest I feel in the question as a Kentuckian, that induces me to speak)—why, I say, in case of the execution of a negro, is the slave population of the state to be taxed? I ask, how is this to be done? Are you to create a separate fund? And when, and how is this tax to be levied? If an emergency should arise in the commonwealth, and a necessity for taxation should arise, how are you to carry out that principle? Are you to wait till the slave is executed? If you lay a tax higher than the emergency demands, it is an oppression upon the slaveholder without cause or necessity. But he does not propose to wait till the emergency arises. If he does, how is he to carry out the principle? It cannot, in my humble judgment, be done. But suppose it could be done, would it be right? The amount of the slaveholding population in Kentucky is, say 200,000; the total amount of population is, say 700,000. The lands and other taxable property of the 500,000 are to be relieved from all participation of the burden, and the cost of these emergencies, and it is to be placed on the slave population alone. I say this is wrong. It is unjust, impolitic, impossible. Why not come out at once, and say to the slaveholding people of the state, "these burdens shall fall upon you; therefore, I propose to carry out my peculiar notions upon the subject of slavery. My notions are of such a character, that they require you, in carrying them out, to make these sacrifices. If wrong is done among you, you must settle it among yourselves; if expenses are incurred by this system, those expenses must be met by yourselves."

I ask the gentleman to take this back. I ask if there be either justice or propriety in a position like this? While you take away my rights you hold sacred your own; while you are willing to impose taxes upon this species of property, and this class of citizens, you quietly fold your arms and say, "I am secure and cannot be reached." I ask if this is equality, if this is justice. It occurs to me sir, that there is neither equality, nor propriety, nor justice in a demand of this kind. Sir, carry this principle out. Why do you say that the institution of slavery should sustain these burdens? The answer is, that it is based upon wrong to hold a slave. I ask gentlemen on this floor who hear me now—what difference is there between a slave, and a horse, a mule and land, or anything else, so far as property is concerned? The law makes no distinction—no difference. If there be no difference in point of law, if the law recognises all equally as property, what reason can be propounded why we should tax that species of property while we hold exempt all other species of property, and say to the owners of negroes, "these are the demands we make upon you, these are the sacrifices you are required to make if you continue to hold this species of property?" Sir, is it right? Why does the gentleman ask this? My mind can suggest no other reason for it than, as regarding the institution of slavery, believing, as the gentleman says he does, "that it is wrong in itself," that it ought to be stricken down, that all protection; all idea of property in slaves should be expunged from the constitution, and that all the slaves in the country should go free. But sir, so long as slavery does exist, so long as our institutions recognize it, so long as the people recognize it as it stands upon your constitution, why make this distinction—a distinction which neither in principle nor practice can ever be carried out. If my land be taken for turnpike or railroad purposes, the constitution guarantees to me the certainty of my remuneration whatever that may be. Is it concluded then that this species of property shall be taxed to support itself, as well as to aid in the protection of all other property? Is this right, is it just, is it proper?

Mr. President, when you talk about equality, and propriety, and justice, I say to that gentleman, that there is neither equality, nor propriety, nor justice, in a demand like this. So long as the institution remains, let it remain upon the same equal footing with other property; let it be taxed like your lands and other species of property, subject to taxation, and then, sir, there will be no cause of complaint. I say now—for I deny that slavery is either a moral or a social wrong—attempt not to throw up any walls around it; let the institution stand as it is; leave the power of taxation in the hands of the people, and let it be regulated through the legislature, and I tell the people, in such case, their institutions are safe. Throw up no walls around them; it is needless to do so when no enemy is approaching; fight not against phantoms. Take my word for it, there are those who are standing at the out-posts, and listening to and gathering all that falls from us here, and they will catch it, and use it, too. But let us stand firm, relying upon the guards already thrown around this institution, and, mark my word, that will be the greatest security that can be given to the slave property in this country.

Do you believe, sir, when they talk about the five hundred thousand of the non-slaveholding population of Kentucky—do you believe when they are appealed to and told the amount of tax which is paid upon negroes in this state—do you believe that when you tell them their taxes must necessarily be increased as you strike this vast amount off—do you believe that when you thus appeal to their common sense and judgment, they will not soon see the result—and aid you, for their own sakes, in the maintenance of this property? Strike off the slave and let free population come in; do so, if you can; but I tell the gentleman that the institution of slavery will stand in Kentucky as long as time shall last. We require no guard, no walls around this institution. It addresses itself to the intelligence, the good sense, and the pockets of the people of this country; and while these are appealed to, you may depend upon it your institutions are secure.

Mr. President, further about this institution permit me to remark. Strike out the proposition of my friend from Christian, and what is the result as it regards the amount that goes into the sinking fund? Strike that out I would say, because if that section is engrafted upon the constitution, the legislature is disarmed of all power; you strike out $35,000 going to the sinking fund, and the demand must be met from some source; and how I ask does he propose to meet the deficiency? Is the gentleman willing to strike out from the resources of the sinking fund the sum of $35,000, and propose no means for making up the deficit thus created? There is none proposed; and I trust no delegate in this house will feel authorized to vote for that proposition until some feasible proposition is presented for meeting this deficit.

I hope the proposition of my friend from Daviess will be laid upon the table. I would rather fall back upon the constitution as it stands.

I would not, Mr. President, have said a word to this convention on the subject now before it, had it not been for the reasons which I stated in the outset; and having asked the convention to adjourn, and as they were kind enough to adjourn, I express my thanks to them for that courtesy, and also for the patience with which they have heard me to-day.

Mr. BRISTOW. I regret to see every question run into the subject of slavery or cities; but this question has got into both. I wish there could be some check put to the tendency to speak of slavery in connection with every other question. That is a settled subject; we came here instructed to leave it as we found it.

The simple inquiry now before the convention is, how can we settle in the best manner a principle of taxation? Shall we leave it to the legislature, or shall we settle it? If a tax has been raised improperly on articles specified, that principle should be done away: Gentlemen say that $14,000 has been raised in this way, and unjustly, and therefore you must not do it away. If the sum raised was $100,000, the argument I suppose would be still stronger, for the difficulty of supplying the deficit would be so much greater. If it is right, go on with it; if not, do it away.

I know how to appreciate the motives of the gentleman from Bracken when he was operated upon by a proper desire to prevent repudiation and disgrace to the state. But I would ask what would have been his condition, if the same principle had been in our present constitution, for which he now contends? He could not have departed from the straight forward principle. Where did this principle start? I hold it never did start at home. It commenced in the legislature, and would not have started there, but the legislature had raised a debt, and they endeavored to justify themselves for this tax on that ground. Tell me not it is laid to protect the yeomen of Kentucky. I know how to sympathise with that class. They do not ask injustice to be done for their benefit. The gentlemen who represent peculiarly the mountain section, and the people who live in that portion of the state will tell you that they do not need, nor wish to be considered objects of charity. They want only justice. Can we give it? I say we can do it without interfering with the rights respecting cities or slaves.

Gentlemen say we cannot do without these specific taxes, and that it is easier for men of wealth than for others. One man vests his means in one species of property which is profitable, and another in another species, which is not, and it is said it is more convenient for the man who has vested his means profitably to pay the tax on specified articles. Let us not make these distinctions. The fine carriage is taxed just the same as the mere convenient article of the poor, worth perhaps fifty dollars. Legislators say they do not know how to avoid this difficulty. If you must tax articles of luxury, let it be according to their value, and then the old lady who owns the mere article of convenience, the humble carriage, will pay only what it is worth, and the $1,000 carriage of the nabob for what it is worth.

But it is not yet settled that this specific taxation is so clearly a benefit to the poor; it depends on the feelings of the man, and his own tastes and inclinations. If he spends his property for luxuries, he will have to meet the taxes on them, and if he lays up his money like a miser, then he will not pay this specific tax. But this tax will not operate equally. The man who is worth $100,000 will own but one carriage and pay a tax on that. The man who is worth but $5,000 or $10,000, will have his carriage. Ten men will have more of these articles than one man who is worth as much as all of them. Then the old lady's spectacles, a mere memento of some friend, or the gift of some friend, to accommodate the old lady, must be taxed specifically.

Gentlemen say we have had this fund so long, and gone so far, that we cannot get clear of it, and must leave the matter to the legislature. The gentleman from Bracken would do this. I would settle it now, as one of the principles by which the legislature should, in all time to come, be governed and controlled. We have had all these difficulties because that principle was not first settled. Let me show you in what manner the states around us have settled this principle, states having larger cities than any we have.

Mark how short and succinct the principles adopted by the states around us. First, look at the state of Tennessee.

"All property shall be taxed according to its value."

That settles the whole principle, and excludes the idea of specific taxation.

Here is Louisiana;

"Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state. After the year 1848, all property on which taxes may be levied in this state, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

Here is the language of the constitution of Illinois:

"The mode of levying a tax shall be by valuation; so that every person shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of the property he or she has in his or her possession."

That is very distinct, short, and clear. Here is Missouri still shorter.

"All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

The same principle is carried out in Arkansas, and in Texas, and other states. I have not looked over them all, but I see here the principle is settled; the same principle which I wish to see settled. The gentleman says circumstances may spring up that may make it necessary to tax the people in this way. We only lay down the general principle. Kentucky is a state of that character that we cannot anticipate it will be necessary to depart from this principle. It is an agricultural state. Shall we, the farmers, be taxed unequally? Surely not. All who are protected, shall be protected in proportion to the value of their property.

I may be peculiarly situated in this respect. I argued this through my county, and I did not find one man against the principle. We, in my county, are not very rich nor very poor, as a whole, though some are very poor. They are all in favor of this principle of taxation in proportion to the value of property which a man is worth. A beautiful speech may be made on taxation of incomes and that sort of thing, but there is no necessity for it in Kentucky. When we leave the state, to tax every man just in proportion to what he is worth, what more can we ask? We just simply take away the power to do wrong. Every man agrees that it is wrong that this specific tax should exist, and is only right from necessity. But such a necessity can never come, provided you put it in your fundamental law that you shall not resort to specific taxation. I have no doubt it was the very thing which many in the legislature would have rejoiced to have had in the constitution, when driven to the necessity which was brought before them. What else did they do? They even taxed collateral inheritances—a man's children, brothers, and sisters, to keep up the revenue. If the legislature may do that, do we know how far they may go? Gentlemen say they have already gone far enough to receive $14,000 per annum, and use that as an argument to go on. How far will they go, unless we restrict them from saying that a class of persons, or species of property, shall be taxed separate from the rest? I intend to vote for taxing property according to its value, and no further. I have a proposition which I desire to offer, by which I propose to provide, that after the year 1853, all taxes levied for state purposes, shall be equal and uniform; nor shall any one description of property be taxed higher than another, in proportion to its value. But the general assembly may authorize the several towns, cities, and counties to impose taxes for town, city, county, corporate, and other purposes, respectively, in such manner as may be authorized by law.

I put in 1853, in order to give time to the legislature to meet the loss of this $14,000; and I get justice, at least for the great body of the state. I am willing to leave the matter of taxation which is peculiar to cities and corporate towns, to the legislature. I am aware that we do not meet all the injustice that may exist. We do not go into detail, but simply assert that taxation shall be in proportion to the value of property, and that counties and towns may have poll taxes.

Do gentlemen know what is the practice with regard to specific taxation? The general opinion is, that when an article is taxed specifically it is not given into the list, according to its value; but that is not the law. The attorney for the state has settled the question, and the auditor has issued his instructions to that effect. Then, do you see the injustice to which the legislature went? They first authorized to tax in proportion to value, and then in addition to that, they were taxed specifically. That is the law. Suppose they are not taxed now according to value, then we shall not lose so much when that portion of the revenue is taken away. Then, when we do tax according to value, the carriage worth $1000, which now pays only one dollar, if the gentleman from Nelson is correct, will pay nineteen cents on a hundred dollars, which will make one dollar and ninety cents; so that you will not lose so much as has been stated by some gentlemen.

I want the whole to be raised in a different way. One cent upon every hundred dollars would overrun that amount which would be lost from specific taxation, and make something like $30,000. A man worth a thousand dollars will pay ten cents. The taxes will be paid by the rich, and in proportion to value of property, and the protection they receive from the law of the land.

There will be no partial favors in regard to the law, at least, and if the legislature will travel out to reach licenses, let them do so. There are cases which I do not know how to reach.

Whilst I have the floor, in order to save time—as I am very anxious to complete the business for which we were sent here, and adjourn—I will say a word in regard to the abstract resolutions, or sections, which have been, and may hereafter be, urged before this convention, with the design of making them a part of the constitution. I shall vote against them, as I have already done, under the firm conviction that we, as practical men, should not consume time in debating mere abstract questions, which can have no practical bearing. I am aware that it is the wish of delegates to render more secure the rights of owners to certain property. I pledged myself at home to make no change on that subject in our constitution, except to provide for colonization, as connected with future emancipation, so as to prevent the further increase of the free colored population in our state. I regret that excitement on that subject should cause so much discussion here. The people settled it at the polls. Resting upon the provisions in the present constitution, which should remain unchanged, and the justice and magnanimity of our people, and the rights of slaveholders are entirely secure. And my conviction is, that it is our duty to resist every effort to add to, or take from, the present constitution on that subject. And whilst gentlemen may honestly believe that they the better secure that property, by adding sections and declaring against the power of the people and future conventions, to interfere with it, I am clearly convinced that they but weaken the tenure. They thus multiply and change issues, and place themselves in a false attitude; and instead of contending against the justice, propriety, and moral right of interfering with their property, they challenge the power of the people, by asserting that such power does not exist. Power, in the abstract, is innocent, and only partakes of the qualities of good or evil as it may be put in practice. Then make no issue on the abstract question of power, but leave the question as we found it—to the guards and sanctions of the present constitution, and the justice and magnanimity of our citizens, and their response will always be such as will do credit to Kentucky character.

Mr. HARDIN. The gentleman from Todd has made a very strong speech; when on the wrong side he can, like Belial, make the worse appear the better side. The truth cannot be denied, that the true principle of taxation is that every man should pay according to his means. The income of the county should be called upon to contribute to the support of government. That is true as a general principle. As I said yesterday, we pay a tax of $1,350,000 on imports, and yet we hardly know it. We pay to the customs about a million of dollars, and we pay a profit to the importer, the wholesale merchant, and the retailer, all of which comes out of the pockets of the consumers; but it is not felt because it falls on the means of the country, and no man buys unless he can afford it. We pay this year by way of direct tax, about $562,000, and we find it very inconvenient and oppressive. By the great body of the people it will be felt very sensibly; they do not feel the indirect tax, because it falls on those who can afford to pay. It will fall on the man who wears a fine coat, and not on him who makes his own coat; and it will be admitted, I suppose, that if a man will disguise himself in fine clothes he should pay for them. The tax on tea and coffee is small because they have become necessities of life; and we pay but little tax on foreign salt because it is also a necessary; but whatever can be dispensed with enters into what is called the superfluities or the luxuries of life, and upon it government must have the power to raise revenue.

I care very little about the specific tax of $14,242; but the proposition of the gentleman would take away from the legislature, in all time to come, the power to discriminate between the necessities and the luxuries of life. The constitution which we shall form, we hope will last some fifty or a hundred years, and does the gentleman really so far distrust the taxing power as to take from it the ability to distinguish between luxuries and necessities? Can the poor woman dispense with her horse, or her cow, or her bed? And yet the gentleman would tax her as much, according to value, as you tax the watch and the carriage of the rich: that is, nineteen cents on the hundred dollars. The gentleman from Todd shakes his head, but if it does not mean that it means nothing. I contend that the power should remain with the legislature to discriminate in respect to the articles of taxation. Such a discrimination should always be made, in a well regulated government, by diversifying the articles so as to make the tax fall upon the means of the county, and not upon its visible and tangible property. We know that there is a tax upon cattle; and the gentleman would prevent any discrimination after 1853 in favor of the poor man. Nor could we exempt the scientific apparatus of a college or a university. All the college books—all the college apparatus is to be taxed. Sir, what a strange spectacle it will be, to tax the articles belonging to our schools; but yet you will be able to exempt nothing. You will not be able to exempt a poor woman's property to the amount of $50. She must pay at the same rate that would be paid on a piano. I know the tax falls very heavy on some of us. It falls very heavy on me. My ridiculous pride makes me carry a gold watch. My friend from Christian (Mr. Gray)—I will not say it is ridiculous in him—also carries one, and I have no doubt he will have a pair of gold spectacles. According to the old saying, "lawyers live well, work hard, and die poor." Some of us have not only a gold watch, but a gold guard chain, and if over fifty years of age, a pair of gold spectacles. Our old lady too, must have her gold spectacles, of course; and rich or poor, we must have our carriage, and if we have a daughter, she must have a piano; and to what does the tax amount? Why, take one lawyer with another, I think this specific tax will be about four dollars per annum. I repeat then, sir, that it is a tax which falls upon those who have the means to pay it. The gentleman's profession is worth $2,000 per annum as his income, and the farmer's income is not more than $300 upon $10,000 worth of property, and his tax will be about five per cent. Now certainly you can better tax the piano of a rich man, than the cow or the horse of a poor widow. I would rather do it; and I would rather tax the fine gold watch, or the fine carriage of a gentleman of fortune than the college books. The gentlemen from Todd and Christian—and there are no gentlemen on this floor for whom I entertain a higher respect—should bear in mind that the specific tax falls upon the means of an individual; it falls upon the vocation of professional men, whether of medicine or of law. The farming community is unequally taxed. It lacks but a fraction of being five per cent. on his net income, for you may take all the lands, and negroes, and stock of this country, and I do not believe they yield a clear profit of three per cent. And yet they are taxed about five percent. upon their income.

"Ah!" but says the gentleman, "we can increase the tax." Yes, you can increase the tax. The British government said, "we will impose a tax on tea." What was the consequence? Why it brought about the revolution. And in levying and increasing taxes here, I would say to the gentleman, "take care, for in overloading a horse, the last feather may break the horse's back."

A word or two as to the debt due to the school fund. The tax of two cents on the $100, which was imposed last year will not pay the interest on the school fund. It will take three cents. How much then will raise the $50,000 surplus to extinguish the debt? It will take another cent; that will be a five per cent. tax on the agricultural products of the community. I was down in the second auditor's office when the gentleman from Todd, (Mr. Bristow,) came to enquire whether the articles specifically taxed, were included in the valuation, and he said he could not tell, but Mr. Page told me that the attorney general said they ought to be. If the attorney general has given an incorrect opinion, it will be easy to leave it to the legislature to say that articles specifically taxed, shall not be included in the valuation. I do not say anything in regard to the opinions of attorney generals, but I will say that I have not always a great reverence for those opinions. Why, we had not been here more than ten days, before a "bed of justice" was held on this convention, and an opinion was given that if we staid here over sixty days, our pay would be brought down to two dollars per day. "No you won't," said I, when this was told to me; "we can unfrock you as quick as queen Elizabeth unfrocked the archbishop of Canterbury. You had better be a little careful what you are about, and not hurt our feelings." I considered the remark an insult to the convention.

Such, sir, is the way these opinions are given. There was once an opinion given by an attorney general that the governor had a right to remove his secretary of state, but the court of appeals decided differently, and so did the legislature, and the whole people of Kentucky. There was once an attorney general in France, Fouquier Tinville, who gave his opinion on individual cases that came before him, that certain persons should be guillotined, not because they were guilty, but because it was a matter of state policy. When Danton and Desmoulines were put upon their trial, and the jury 'hung' as we say in Kentucky; they refused to convict until they were told by the attorney general that conviction was necessary as a matter of state policy, and then they were sentenced to be decapitated, as it was a political measure.

Mr. President, attorneys general were always consulted when Caligula and Nero found or thought it necessary to cut off the head of any one, and they never failed to do it. Isaiah was a true prophet when he said, "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib." He told the truth, and no wonder that he was able to prophecy the destruction of Babylon, the great whore of the world. A member of congress once said of mankind, "He is a monstrous big rascal." [Laughter.] The scriptures say the same thing when they say "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Cromwell said, "God save me from Sir Harry Vane," and I say, "God save me from attorney generals opinions."

If I understood the gentleman from Fleming, (Mr. M. P. Marshall,) last night, to whom I listened with great pleasure, he contended that negro property should be taxed, to cover the loss of those negroes who absconded. How are you to prevent the citizens of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois from tampering with slaves? Are you to do it by the erection of block-houses at different points from the mouth of the Big Sandy to the mouth of the Ohio? Are you to do it by indemnifying a man who runs to Ohio, Illinois, or Indiana, in quest of his slave? That would be very difficult. Are you to do it by contributing to the expenses? I could make a suggestion to my honorable friend, and I think he will then see the fallacy of his argument. In 1815, immediately after the war closed, there were innumerable applications to congress for indemnity for private property destroyed by the enemy. How was it destroyed in the city of Washington? Private rope-walks, and much other property was burnt or otherwise destroyed to the amount of millions of dollars. The committee of claims had a most important duty to perform in the settlement of the great principle which was involved. The United States were called upon to pay all these claims, and the committee of claims, of which I was a member, decided and reported that the United States ought not to pay them, for the reason that if they were to do so, the effect would be to change the character of war in the future, for if the government was liable for the property thus destroyed, the object of the enemy would be to destroy all they could in order to cripple the government. But if we do not pay them, the enemy will not destroy it. All nations set their faces against the wanton destruction of private property.

Now, I would ask if the emancipationists come over here, and induce our negroes to run away, are we to indemnify every man, to the amount, it may be, of $500, for every negro he may lose? Sir, I regard this as neither more nor less than an emancipation law, in its tendency.

Take the position of the gentleman from Fleming (Mr. M. P. Marshall) in all its bearings upon the slaves of this country, no man could keep his slaves. The taxes on them would be so heavy as to become insupportable. The result would be, that men owning slaves would either move out of the country with them or sell them; and in either event, Kentucky, in less than ten years, would become a non-slaveholding state, and the whole object of the emancipationist would be fully accomplished, and that by our own solicitude, and the over anxiety of the pro-slavery men to guard with unnecessary vigilance the right to retain their slaves, and protect them in the use and enjoyment of that kind of property. If, by any system of measures either direct or indirect, Kentucky was to become a non-slaveholding state, what would be the result? It would give to the non-slaveholding states a majority of sixty or seventy members in the house of representatives and four in the senate in the congress of the United States. The political consequences would be this, that the non-slaveholding states would in congress commence and carry on such measures, so at war with the institutions of slavery, as to compel the slaveholding states either to give up their property or separate from the other states and dissolve the Union. The latter alternative would be adopted, and the Union dissolved. I ask what would be the situation and condition of Kentucky then, would she attach herself to the north or south? If she went to the northern confederacy, what would be the result? A heavy tax would be laid upon all her products and manufactures sold to the tobacco planters, cotton growers, and sugar makers. The slaveholding states in the south furnish a market for nearly all Kentucky has to sell; she sells but little elsewhere. A heavy duty she would not submit to, and at the same time compete with Tennessee and Missouri, when those states would pay no duty. Louisiana once belonged to Spain, and so did Florida. Kentucky was the first state formed on this side the mountains—all our produce had to be sold to Spanish America. Spain levied a duty of six per cent. upon all we sold within her possessions, and six per cent.—an export duty—upon the money we brought from there, amounting in all to twelve per cent. Spain erected forts—one about six miles below Memphis, and the other at the Walnut Hills. These two forts made all the boats, descending the Mississippi, land and pay the six per cent. import duty. The export duty was levied and collected when our traders attempted to bring home the avails of their sales. These two duties—the import and export—were too heavy and oppressive. Kentucky could not bear it, and the government of the United States failed to obtain better terms and conditions from Spain. The people of Kentucky were much excited on this subject during the years 1793, '4 and '5. In 1795, the leading men in Kentucky sent the late Judge Sebastian to Orleans to obtain from the governor of Orleans a reduction in these duties, and to procure better terms and conditions in our commercial intercourse with Spain. I have said—and I repeat it—that the first men in Kentucky—great too as any in America—concurred in sending Sebastian to Orleans to make the commercial arrangements with Spain. The original papers connected with that transaction, were given to me near twenty years ago, either by Judge Sebastian himself, or his son, Dr. Charles Sebastian. I have some of them now in my hand—one signed by George Nicholas, Harry Innis, William Murray and Benjamin Sebastian—declaring the necessity of such a treaty, and appointing Sebastian to make and conclude such a treaty, or commercial arrangement, as the necessities of Kentucky required. I have also a copy of the treaty in the hand writing of Judge Sebastian.

The signatures of George Nicholas, Harry Innis, William Murray and Benjamin Sebastian, are genuine. I have shown them to their acquaintances and relations, and they recognize their respective signatures. I also had a paper of a similar character, signed by near one hundred gentlemen of Kentucky, to the same import, or nearly so. I cannot now lay my hands upon it; if it is not mislaid, I have it at home. Sebastian went to Orleans, and in pursuance of his instructions, he made the treaty. It reduced the import duty to four per cent., and took off the export entirely; nay, the treaty went further—we had the permission to trade to all Spanish America on the same terms. It is the best commercial treaty we ever had with Spain. I am, Mr. President, greatly rejoiced that I have this opportunity to vindicate the names, characters, and memories, of the illustrious men who figured in this country in the days of other years—days that tried the souls of men—men who have been slandered by some of the histories of this country, in which they are branded as traitors and Spanish conspirators—men that I feel proud of, and so ought my country to be proud of. Thirty or forty years ago I knew most of them. I see in my mind, and can recollect exactly how they looked. They then had the aged and venerable appearance of the senators of Rome, seated in the senate chamber, when the Gauls took and destroyed the city.

I will read the papers I referred to here. They are genuine, and any person may inspect them:

"We consider it as essentially necessary to the interest of our country, that the application made to Mr. Sebastian by letter from the governor of New Orleans, should be seriously attended to. We are induced to be of this opinion, from a conviction that, the navigation of the Mississippi is indispensably requisite to the prosperity of the western country; and that there is now no longer a hope of our obtaining it by the intervention of the general government. Situated as this country is, there is no other mode in which communications respecting this important subject can be made but by, and to individuals; and as we have been addressed by the governor, we think we ought to meet his communication. It is therefore, with our unanimous consent and desire, that Messrs. Innis, Murray and Sebastian, or any one or more of them should go to New Madrid to meet governor Gayoso, to receive such communications as he may be disposed to make; to know in what manner, and upon what terms his Catholic Majesty is disposed to open to us that navigation; to point out to him the impossibility, arising from our situation, of sending agents empowered to negotiate with him; that it is the most favorite object with the citizens of this country to be on friendly terms with his Catholic Majesty and his subjects, and to carry on a free commerce, on terms of reciprocal advantage to both countries; that from the extent of our territory, and the rapid increase of our population, it will be impossible long to preserve peace, unless we are permitted to enjoy that commerce; to make a true representation of the present population of the western country, and of its probable amount within a very few years; of the different articles of export, which we can now furnish, of the quantity of each which could be exported at present, and of the increase of each kind which might be calculated on in a few years, if there was a certain prospect of a market for them; of the advantages that might be derived to both countries, should his Catholic Majesty make such regulations as would enable his American dominions to receive their necessary supplies from the western, instead of the eastern part of the United States; and of the opportunity which now occurs, of attaching the inhabitants of the western country to his Catholic Majesty, and his subjects; by voluntarily doing them that act of justice, which they no longer hope to be able to obtain by the aid of their own government.

"In testimony of our concurrence in every thing above stated, we have hereunto affixed our signatures this 19th day of November, 1795, in the state of Kentucky.

"G. NICHOLAS,
"HARRY INNIS,
"WILLIAM MURRAY,
"BEN. SEBASTIAN."

"His Catholic Majesty having taken into consideration the relative situation of his province of Louisiana and its dependencies, and that part of the United States of America, lying west of the Apalachian Mountains, and being of opinion that a commercial intercourse between the two countries will be productive of the harmony and reciprocal interest thereof, has been pleased to concede to the people of the said western country, during his pleasure, the following privileges:

"1st. The people of the said western country shall henceforth freely use, and exclusively enjoy, for the purpose of commerce, the navigation of the river Mississippi, and all the ports and places thereon, under the government of his Catholic Majesty, subject to the same regulations and restrictions, and no other, by which the commerce of the subjects of his Catholic Majesty is now governed. And whereas the people of the said western country are now subject to the payment of six per centum, ad valorem, on all the produce of the said western country imported into the government of Louisiana and its dependencies, and also to the payment of the same duty on the exportation thereof, and his Majesty, being willing to remove every obstacle to that friendly intercourse which he is desirous to establish and maintain with the said western people, does hereby concede, that the said western people shall hereafter be subject to the payment of a duty of four per centum only, whether the produce imported be disposed of in the markets of Louisiana, or exported to foreign markets, and that the duty to be thus paid by the said western people shall be regulated by the valuation of their produce hereto annexed.

"2d. That there may be no impediment or obstruction to the fullest and most advantageous enjoyment of the privileges hereby granted to the people of the said western country by his Catholic Majesty, such of the said western people as may choose to reside in the government of Louisiana, for the purpose of carrying on commerce, shall henceforth be permitted to acquire by purchase, or otherwise, both real and personal property, in any port or place on the said river, Mississippi, or at any other place within the government of the said province of Louisiana and its dependencies, and shall be protected by the said government in the enjoyment thereof, the said residents being amenable, during their residence, to the same laws and regulations, by which the subjects of the said province are governed; and should the said residents, or any of them, die in the said province, or think proper to remove to the United States, or elsewhere, their property, both real and personal shall, in the first case, be disposed of according to the will of the decedent, and, where no will has been made, shall descend to, and be distributed among the legal representatives of the deceased, agreeable to the laws of the said province; and in the last case, the removing resident shall have the liberty of disposing of the absolute estate in the whole, or any part of the property which he has either carried to, or acquired in the said province, and to transport the proceeds thereof, free from duty to any part of the world.

"3d. His Catholic Majesty, to evince to the said western people, his disposition to encourage the commerce of their country, hereby permits them when they cannot get a satisfactory market for their produce in the province of Louisiana or its dependencies, to export the same to the Havana, or to any other port or place either in the United States or Europe; and the said produce, being exported to the Havana, or to any of the said ports in the Spanish dominions, having paid the duty in the province of Louisiana, and the proprietor thereof, taking from the proper officer in the said province authentic documents of the payment, shall not again be subject to the payment of any duty in any port or place in the said Spanish dominions, to which the said produce shall be exported, but the same may be disposed of in such port or place under the same rules and regulations which, at present, govern the disposal of the produce of Louisiana.

"4th. To prevent any misconception, or improper use of the privileges hereby granted, it is explicitly declared, that the importation of all articles of commerce, of what nature or description soever, which are not actually the production of the said western country, is absolutely prohibited; and if any person shall hereafter attempt, under any pretext whatsoever, to introduce into the province of Louisiana, or its dependencies, down the Mississippi, the products or manufactures of any other country, (unless specially permitted by the government,) the same are hereby declared to be contraband, and liable to seizure.

"5th. As the commutation of the products of one country for those of another, is the foundation of commerce, his Majesty, in order to establish that reciprocity of interest between his dominions and the said western country, without which, no commercial intercourse can be permanent, will cause a preference to be always given in his markets to the products of the said western country, and therefore expects, that the people of the said western country, acting under the influence of the same principle, will, in the purchase of such articles of commerce as they may need, whether foreign or domestic, prefer his markets to any other. And as a further inducement thereto, his Majesty, contrary to a long established rule of his government, does henceforth permit the people of the said western country to carry out of his dominions whatever money may remain to them, after completing their purchases, free from any duty or impost whatsoever."

Kentucky enjoyed the benefits of the regulations made by Sebastian until Spain transferred that country to France, and France to the United States; and after enjoying the benefits of Sebastian's labors for years—when the necessities for those regulations had passed away—Kentucky, for a time, forgot his services, and the whole legislature attacked him in 1806. Those that sent him who were alive—for some were dead—gave him no aid or assistance, and he sunk under the assault and fell a victim to the rage of popular fury. I trust in God that the present generation will do his memory justice for the consolation of his posterity.

Mr. President, I would vote very cheerfully for the amendment of my honorable friend from Daviess, if I did not think like my friend from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor,) that we are making a little too much noise about slavery.

I protest against wrapping up negro property as some midwife would wrap up a woman in sixteen blankets, because she has had a hard labour. Just let us put in the constitution what my friend from Woodford, (Mr. Waller,) proposed to day. That is my doctrine. Your negroes should not be set free, pay or no pay, unless they leave the state; and what is more, no free negro should come here. Slave property must be protected in this country. I am for protecting it upon another great principle, and here I know I shall be met hand to hand, by my friend from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis.) Whenever the foreigner comes here from Europe, I would say, naturalize him, and give him all the rights to which he may be entitled, but do not encourage foreigners to come to this state. New York has increased in her population, by reason of immigrants from Europe, at the rate of twenty per cent. Ohio at fifteen, and Pennsylvania, at fifteen. I thank God that the negroes keep them out of Kentucky, and that the northern states keep the foreign convicts and paupers generally, within their borders.

I have another reason; it is that the slaveholding population is the finest population the world ever saw. In a non-slaveholding country they view liberty as a political right; but in a slaveholding country they view it as a personal privilege, and would die sooner than surrender it.

I heard the gentleman from Bracken, to-day, and he spoke very much to my satisfaction. Like when Tom Owens tried the question whether a government could condemn a town for public purposes by paying the owner therefor—that question was tried as to Bardstown, in this federal court. Martin D. Hardin, and myself appeared for the town, and we argued the case three or four days. Judge Trimble delivered the opinion, and he was the clearest, most distinct judge in giving an opinion that I ever heard. He divided the subject out so handsomely, and with such perspicuity and order. While he was giving his opinion, one or two of the people of Bardstown, went up to him, crowded up very close, and stood there with their mouths wide open. (Laughter.) So it was with respect to the argument of the gentleman from Bracken, to-day. I was affected much in the same way, except that I did not open my mouth. (Laughter.) He presented the argument truly, but he did not go far enough. He made a mistake in one thing, and that is, that the negroes pay more than one-fourth of the revenue. They pay nearly one-third. The negroes work the roads, while the whites are talking politics. I recollect going on a road in my county, where I saw sixteen hands, eleven of them were whites and five of them were blacks, and the whites were sitting on the bank on the road side, talking politics, while the negroes were working. (Laughter.) That was the way they spent their time. I recollect a mud hole in a fifteen feet road was to be stopped up in my neighborhood, and the overseer called out my hands to work, and I liked to have lost my whole crop of corn by it, (Laughter,) after that I petitioned the county to appoint me overseer, and I was overseer for twenty-five years, and I never called on a single hand all that time for work, for I did it with my own hands. No man can run against me for overseer in that neighborhood. (Renewed laughter.)

I say, the negro population do pay for three-fourths of the work done on the highway. They pay nearly one-half of the county levy, and within a fraction of one-third of the revenue. I hope I have not given any offence on the subject of taxation, to any gentleman. Many a man's fire has burnt over into another man's barrens. May be the speech of the gentleman from Todd, has burnt into the gentleman from Christian's barrens. (Laughter.)

Mr. President, Before I take my seat, I will in part recapitulate what I have said, and correct some inaccuracies I perhaps fell into. The specific duties of last year were as follows:

Carriages and Barouches	$3,207
Buggies	1,542 50
Pianos,	1,540
Gold Spectacles,	600 50
Gold Watches,	5,934
Silver Watches,	1,418
Total.	$14,242

The specific duties for this year, are as follows:

Total number of carriages, buggies, pianos, gold watches, gold spectacles, and silver watches, listed for taxation in Kentucky, for the year 1849:

	Number.	Tax.
Carriages and Barouches,	3,411	$3,411 00
Buggies,	3,576	1,788 00
Pianos,	1,628	1,628 00
Gold Spectacles,	1,289	644 50
Gold Watches,	6,242	6,242 00
Silver Lever Watches,	2,933	1,466 50
	19,079	$15,180 00

One third of this belongs to the sinking fund, the remainder to the common revenue. Take off the specific duties, and tax the same property according to its valuation, and it would not yield a revenue of $4,000. There may be a few carriages valued at more than $500, yet out of the 3,411, the number now given in, there would not be ten but would be valued by the assessors at less than $500. They would not average more than $200. Take the 3,576 buggies, and they would not be valued at more than $100 each. Take the 6,242 gold watches, they would not be valued at more than $100 each. The

2,933 silver watches would not be valued at more than $40 each. The 1,289 gold spectacles would not be valued at more than $10 each. The 1,620 pianos would not be valued at more than $200 each, and it is in vain to tell us, as some have done, that to take off the specific duties and to prevent the legislature in future from ever imposing duties on the luxuries and superfluities of life, will be for the benefit of the poor man; such an assertion Davy Crockett would have called "not good nonsense."

Mr. BRISTOW. I have ascertained that I can accomplish my object in another way. I therefore move to amend the section, and in this I have the approval of the mover of the original section, by striking out all after the words, "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this" and inserting the following, "commonwealth, and after the year 1853, all tax levied for state purposes shall be equal and uniform, nor shall any one description of property be taxed higher than another in proportion to its value. But the general assembly may authorize the several towns, cities, and counties, to impose taxes for town, city, county, and corporate, and other purposes, respectively, in such manner as may be authorized by law."

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection to the language of that amendment. My object is to introduce into the constitution a just mode of taxation.

Mr. TRIPLET. There should be some way by which we can accomplish two objects, provided both are good. If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Christian, (Mr. Gray,) it aims at that at which I have been aiming since I first took my seat here. I think there are at least eighty-four members of this body in favor of the object which I would accomplish, and there are not more than thirteen who have a different object in view. We are placed in a peculiar situation indeed, when by the rules of this house or otherwise, the will and settled determination, as I believe, of three-fourths of this convention cannot be carried into execution. It ought not to be so. Delegates, whatever is our will, we should have the power to execute. It is demanded at our hands by our constituents. I am opposed to the taxation of slaves for improper purposes, but I am willing they should be taxed for proper purposes, as high as other property. If any man will oppose that principle, let him rise now. Then how many are there who wish slaves taxed for improper purposes? Would not that be to deprive the owners of their slaves by legislation? It is emancipation by direct taxation. Let me not be mistaken. The object I aim at, and at which you aim, if you are honest and mean what you say, is the same. If men are not honest, and do not mean what they say, then it is our duty to head them. (A voice, amen.) Amen. Yes, every gentleman in this house will say amen.

Does this house wish to place itself in a position by which they cannot attain that object? I do not believe they will do it. I have made one proposition to the house. If gentlemen do not like that, still I say, attain your end before you stop. Is it possible this convention will determine, that although the slaveholder cannot now be deprived of his property without compensation, it may hereafter be done? Does the gentleman from Christian deny that he aims at the same end which I would attain? Why do you introduce that proposition if not for this? Turn down all but the first line, and it aims at the same end. But I have learned to speak out, and the difference between me and some other men is, that I have learned to speak, and do speak in plain English. Is there any difference between the proposition of the gentleman from Christian and mine, except that mine authorizes the legislature to tax luxuries or articles which are not the necessities of life, which his does not? Then what do you aim at? It is to protect slave property. We all aim at that end. And I cannot and do not believe we have so trammelled ourselves by rules of order, which were made, or should have been made, to facilitate the transaction of business in the convention, instead of embarrassing it, that we cannot attain that object, and at the same time attain another but minor object, by leaving the legislature at liberty to tax, at their reasonable discretion, the luxuries, or such articles as they may deem to be the luxuries, as contradistinguished from the necessities of life—such as carriages, pianos, gold watches, &c. My amendment, at the same time that it accomplishes the first object, of preventing any future legislature that might be so disposed, hereafter, from laying specific or special taxes on slaves for the illegitimate purpose of rendering them of no value to their owners, leaves them subject to all legitimate taxation for the purposes of revenue; and, also, leaves the power with the legislature to tax the luxuries I before mentioned; whereas, the original proposition of the gentleman from Christian, (Mr. Gray,) deprives the legislature of this latter power entirely—and to that I object, and I believe a large majority of this house will object.

But, before I leave this subject, I want to get the vote and aid of my friend from Fleming, (Mr. M. P. Marshall,) my old friend and only schoolmate now living in Kentucky. I want his vote; and he says he concurs with me in the main great object I wish to accomplish, and he will willingly vote with me, provided another object is attainable which he thinks justice requires—and that is: that all expenses incurred by the state in preventing the escape of slaves from the state may be taxed on the slave property; because he believes the institution of slavery should maintain itself; and his plan is, that such a police force shall be stationed along the Ohio river, as will prevent the escape of the slaves from their masters. Now sir, a cordon of sixteen thousand troops, reaching six hundred and twenty-four miles—for that is the estimated length of the frontier of Kentucky on the Ohio river—could not protect this property, even in day light, because one man could not see all the way to another; and, unless they are in sight, or nearly so, of each other, they could not prevent the escape of the fugitive slaves between them; and at night, ten times that number would not be sufficient to afford efficient protection to this property. And if you were to place your police, or other force, on the river, I tell you the whole navy of Great Britain extended on the Ohio river would be unavailing to attain that and. You therefore aim at an impossibility. When it is demonstrated to be so, neither taxation on slaves or all the balance of the property of the commonwealth can attain the object.

What is the other position of the gentleman from Fleming in relation to slaves executed for crimes? I am perfectly satisfied that my friend from Fleming is the last man who would claim that the commonwealth should pay for a slave executed for crime from slave property only. Why is the life of the slave taken? Is it not for public security? Five sevenths of the voters in Kentucky are land holders. And all who are land owners, and a large proportion of those who are not land holders, are interested in that public security—indeed all the settled population of the state have the same interest; then by no calculation can you show that slave holders alone should pay for securing the public safety and security, which requires the execution of a slave. The slave is private property, and the constitution, as it now stands, as well as every principle of justice and common honesty, requires that private property should not be taken without full compensation to the owner. And the state pays for the slave because the slave is executed for the public good. I hope therefore, I shall attain his vote. I think I have a proposition which will attain the object aimed at by the convention. Is there no way by which we can prevent slaves from being taxed for improper purposes? When gentlemen see that this is one of the means proposed to accomplish emancipation, directly or indirectly, by driving the slaves from the state; will they hesitate what course to pursue? If we do not interpose this provision in the constitution, by and by the course taken will be this: You tax them twenty dollars this year, and by and by a hundred, and when a specific tax to that amount is laid upon them, they cease to be of value, and are, at least, really driven from the state. If we have the power, ought we not to exercise that power? Yes sir; and now or never is the time to do it. Just this day you must exercise the power you have, if you want to protect your slave property from improper taxation; for if the sun of this day sets without this power having been exercised, it is gone, and gone forever. Let us exercise it by some means or other by placing the necessary restraint on the powers of the legislature, on the subject of taxation, which is the only power they can exercise under this constitution to attain their end, should they aim at driving the slaves from the state.

My object is to leave to the legislature also the power to tax incomes. I agree with my friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) that no means of raising a tax is borne more willingly by the people of Kentucky, than the tax on incomes, direct or indirect. Instead of taxing interest on notes, we now tax notes themselves. This is an indirect income tax. I would go further, and would tax incomes as incomes. Shall we deprive the legislature of that power? No. I am opposed to that. Then shall we go further, and deprive the legislature of the right of taxing the superfluities of life? No sir; because all who buy them do it with the understanding that they are to pay the tax which is upon them. There is no injustice in regard to them. When I bought my watch, my spectacles, or my carriage, I knew there was a tax on them. I thought with myself in this manner: Am I willing, in order to enjoy the luxury of a piano for my family, to pay, in addition to the price of the piano, one dollar per annum to the state as a specific tax? So all reason with regard to these articles, and a hundred others, which the legislature might tax. It is a part of the contract when the article is bought, and of which the purchaser has no right to complain.

The specific tax amounts to about $15,000 per annum. That is a matter of some importance. A portion of this goes to the sinking fund, and I do not want to deprive that fund of one dollar. Here is an argument which I will address to the gentleman from Fleming. What has become of the money raised by the taxes on slaves, when they have for years past paid one-third of all the taxes raised in the state? What has become of the $3,000,000 borrowed on the faith of the state, for the purposes of internal improvement? It never came into the treasury. It has gone to add to the value of the lands of the state, through these internal improvements. Look and see how the lands along the line of these improvements, whether by rail roads, slack water, or other means, have increased in value. These improvements have more than doubled the value of your lands, and what have we got for it? Not one solitary cent. Our slaves paid one-third of the money, or will have to pay it; and your lands got the benefit. We did not complain of that. All that we now ask, all that I ask for my constituents is, that you will not deprive the legislature of the power of laying any kind of tax hereafter on the luxuries and superfluities of life, for the purpose of paying off the principal and interest of that debt, as far as it will go. Five ninetieths of the money now raised by the specific tax goes into the sinking fund. It is not right nor just to deprive that fund of this money without supplying some other means. If it is taken off from these luxuries, you must put it on lands, or slaves, or some of the necessities of life. This specific tax is not complained of so far as I know.

The objects at which I aim I think can be obtained by my proposition; but on the request of my friends, I have agreed to withdraw it for the present, in order to know whether the proposition of the gentleman from Todd will be adopted by this house. If that is adopted, then I want to provide also, that the legislature may lay a tax on the luxuries of life.

It is my habit when I have a proposition, to go for success, and I care not who furnishes the means. Accordingly, I shall withdraw my proposition, and shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Todd, and then it will be our duty to add the section which will give power to the legislature to tax the luxuries of life.

Mr. MERIWETHER. A good deal has been said here about the poor man, and many gentlemen have professed very great love for him; but I ask those gentlemen to examine the principle of specific taxation and see whether it acts on the poor and the rich alike. Take the instance of a carriage. If an individual rides in a carriage that cost $1,200 or $1,300, and pays a specific tax, he pays no more than an individual who rides in one of less value. Take the magnificent barouch and the costly buggy, and you will see that they pay no more tax than those of small value.

Mr. BRISTOW called for the yeas and nays on his amendment, and they were—yeas 53, nays 35.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, James M. Lackey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—53.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Jas. S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Thomas J. Hood, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Meweum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, James W. Stone, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—35.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. KELLY moved to amend by striking out all after the word "value," and inserting the following:

"Provided, That the general assembly may impose specific taxes; And provided further, That said specific taxes be graduated according to the value of things taxed; and that slaves shall not be specifically taxed, except the poll tax for county, city, and town purposes, and that cities and towns may be allowed to tax specifically for corporate purposes."

The PRESIDENT decided that it was not in order to move to strike out that which the convention, by a vote, had inserted.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the section, as amended.

Mr. MERIWETHER moved to amend by adding a provision to tax corporate stock specifically.

After a few words of explanation from Messrs. HARDIN, DAVIS, MERIWETHER and PRESTON,

Mr. MERIWETHER modified his amendment so that it would read as follows:

Provided, That corporate stock, privileges, licenses, and franchises, may be taxed specifically.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the section, and the result was—yeas 39, nays 50.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Nathan Gaither, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, James M. Lackey, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, William Preston, Johnson Price, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—39.

NAYS—John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Jas. S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Garrett Davis, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—50.

So the section was rejected.

Mr. MERIWETHER then gave notice of his intention to move a reconsideration of the vote adopting the twentieth section, which had become inapplicable since the rejection of the nineteenth section. He moved that the rule be dispensed with, which required a motion to reconsider to lie over.

The motion was agreed to.

The vote adopting the section was then reconsidered, and the section was rejected.

The amendment submitted by Mr. DAVIS on Thursday was then taken up for consideration, as follows:

"Sec.—The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction; and the right of the owner of a slave to his property is the same, and as inviolable as the right of the owner of any property whatever."

Mr. TURNER. I want to ask the gentleman from Bourbon if we should make a constitution, and say in it that involuntary servitude shall not exist except for crime, whether slavery will still exist in this commonwealth? If he contends for that, I shall understand where he is, and what is his position.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not intend to solve that proposition, but I will use this language—that this convention has no right to pass an agrarian law. It has, however, as much right to make a provision to take and distribute our property in land, as it has to take away our property in slaves, without paying for them. They have as much right to take away our property and apply it to a system of common schools, as to take away our slaves without our sanction.

Mr. MITCHELL. This section contains two propositions, and I therefore ask for a division of the question. For the first I cannot vote; the second I am prepared to support.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the question is taken, I desire to modify my proposition by the addition of the words, "and its increase," after the words, "and the right of the owner of a slave to his property."

The PRESIDENT. The gentleman has the right to modify his proposition.

It was so modified accordingly.

Mr. GHOLSON. I hope there will be no division of this proposition, but that the question will be taken upon it as it stands. If there is any proposition that is true—if there is truth in the declaration that man has certain inalienable rights, of which he cannot be deprived but by violence—then this must be true. I hope, therefore, there will be no division upon it, and that it will be adopted unanimously.

Mr. CLARKE. This proposition meets my entire approbation. I am perfectly satisfied that the right to obtain and to enjoy property is a right that has existed, and that will always exist, independent of any constitution that may be made; and that to deprive citizens of the enjoyment of that right, would be to deprive them of the means to sustain life. I am also well satisfied that no distinction can be made in Kentucky, or in any other slave state of this Union, between property in a slave, and property in land, or in a horse. And I think it proper and fitting under all the circumstances by which we are surrounded, that we should declare that such property does exist, and that every citizen of Kentucky has the right to acquire and enjoy it. I hope the section will be adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL again asked for a division of the question.

The PRESIDENT. Before putting the question, with the consent of the convention, I will state the principles upon which I shall cast my vote against both branches of the section. We have already provided that private property, including slaves, shall not be taken for public use without compensation to the owner first made; and we have a report upon the subject of slavery for which I intend to vote, declaring that the general assembly shall not emancipate slaves without the consent of the owner, or without full compensation being first made. Such is the justice and the security I am prepared to give the slaveholder. They should, in my opinion, be satisfied with that. I think the proposed section not necessary to the security of that kind of property and the rights of the slaveholder, and that there is no necessity to put the section in the constitution. The provisions made, and to be made, will restrain the power of the legislature over private property and slaves, and but for those provisions the legislature might enact laws to take private property without paying the owner for it, and might emancipate slaves without the consent of the owner and without paying for them.

I believe the right to all property is conventional, and that a people, in forming their organic or constitutional law, have a right to declare what shall and what shall not be property, and the mode of passing it from one to another, and if they do not restrain the legislative power, that the legislature will have the whole power over property; therefore, I do not believe the section declares a correct principle. I can imagine a case, where it would be the right of a people, for self-preservation, to drive out slave property without the consent of the owner and without compensation. The law of self-defence belongs to a nation as well as to individuals. The declaration contained in the section does the slaveholder no good, and will not bind the majority of the people when that majority shall believe the peace and happiness of the state, or the protection of the lives of the citizens, shall demand the slaves to be driven out.

Mr. NUTTALL. On this question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMPSON. I can see no necessity for encumbering the constitution with such a provision. As I understand it, it is proposed to incorporate this section in the Bill of Rights. To this I am opposed, for I think it is so perfect that we need not cross a T nor dot an I. Have we not every guaranty that private property cannot be taken unless compensation be made for it? Why then are we to throw down the gauntlet to the adversary? How do we hold our property? Is it not under the sanctions of law? And what greater security shall we have if this provision be adopted? Of what value will any paper constitution be when a majority of the people shall be arrayed against it? I am a native born Kentuckian, and a large part of the property I possess consists of slaves, but I subscribe to no such doctrine as that which assumes that the people have no right to change their institutions.

The previous question was moved and the main question was ordered.

The question was then taken on the first branch of the proposed section, in these words: "The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction," and it was adopted—yeas 65, nays 23.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Wm. C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jas. M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, John J.

Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—65.

YAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Benj. Copelin, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfiede, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Ira Root, James Rudd, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—23.

The question was next taken on the second branch of the proposition, as follows: "and the right of the owner of a slave to his property and its increase is the same, and as inviolable as the right of the owner of any property whatever," and it was adopted, yeas 77, nays 10.

YAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thos. Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Geo. W. Williams—77.

YAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Francis M. Bristow, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfiede, John Hargis, William Hendrix, Ira Root, James Rudd, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—10.

MR. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I move to reconsider the vote just given, and I do so, Mr. President, to do what the demand of the previous question prevented. It is to state the reason why I voted for the last clause and against the first clause.

The last clause declares that the right of the owner to his slave and the increase of the females, is protected, and as secure as other property. There is no increase till born; when born, under the constitution, the increase, like all other property, is protected by the constitution and laws just to the same extent as other property; and I deny the power of the legislature to emancipate future increase.

But do gentlemen intend to declare by the first clause in this section, that there is no power in the people of Kentucky, by constitutional provision, now and in all time to come, to declare that no person born in Kentucky after the year 1900 shall be held to involuntary servitude without crime. Though a pro-slavery man, the owner of slaves, and opposed to emancipation, present or prospective, in any shape or mode which has been suggested, I cannot deny the existence of such a power. I must leave my countrymen free to exercise it by changing their organic law or form of government. Whenever the majority shall will such a change, and to exercise such a power, they will do so by a change of their constitution and form of government, and will regard your declarations of abstractions as idle wind.

Having given the reasons for my vote, I withdraw my motion.

MR. A. K. MARSHALL. Mr. President, I offer the following as an additional section:

"That neither this convention, or any hereafter to be assembled by the people of this commonwealth, has any right or power to either emancipate the slaves now in this state, or their descendants; or to authorise the legislature to pass laws for their emancipation."

My vote, sir, on the section just disposed of, is expressive of my opinions, and therefore, I need say but little on that which I have now offered. I believe, sir, I shall vote against my own proposition, but I desire some gentleman here clearly to express their opinions by their votes on the subject. If they think it possible, permanently to fix slavery in this commonwealth, I wish them to say so.

There is not a man in Kentucky who is more thorough, and a more ultra pro-slavery man than I am. I go further than the furthest. Instead of holding that slavery is either a moral or a political evil, I believe that it is a moral and political blessing. If Kentucky were a free state, and slavery existed in any other state of this Union, I would give my vote to introduce it into this state. Yet, sir, I cannot say that the people of this commonwealth have not entire control over it, and that, if they think it an evil, they cannot remove it from amongst them.

There are gentlemen here, however, who have professed to believe that the right to this property exists above all constitutional provisions; and if so, it may be well perhaps, to stick in a little constitutional provision, and say to future generations that it is fixed on them forever. I hope that those gentlemen who voted for the first clause of the section just adopted, will vote for my proposition, for I cannot do it myself.

MR. GARFIELDE. I do not see any necessity for these additional sections. That which has been just adopted covers the whole ground. The proposition has been asserted that the right of property in the increase of slaves in futuro, is just as much "before, and higher than any constitutional sanction," and is "as inviolable as the right of the owner of any property whatever," as in those that are in actual existence. That, I understand, has been adopted, and if so, that covers the whole ground of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Jessamine, and hence I see no necessity for his additional section.

It was a matter of regret with me that the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) withdrew his motion to reconsider, for the vote which some of us were called upon to give on the adoption of that section, if unexplained. placed us in a wrong attitude before the public. It has become the practice, I believe, when a question is before the convention to speak on any other subject, and I shall therefore take this opportunity to set myself right.

In the first place, by my vote against that section, I neither affirmed nor denied its truth. I but simply say what my constituents told me to say, and that is to sustain the same provision that is in the old constitution respecting slavery, with one exception, and that is respecting the removal of the emancipated slaves out of the state. It was therefore in obedience to the instructions of a pro-slavery county that I voted, and not because I believed the proposition either true or false in itself.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, I offer this as an amendment to the section of the gentleman from Jessamine:

"Unless all the people owning that species of property in the state, shall sanction such emancipation, or just compensation be made for the slaves emancipated."

Mr. DAVIS. My own sentiments are embodied in the proposition which I submitted to the convention. I do not think it necessary to iterate and reiterate principles that are substantially the same on this subject, and for that reason I shall vote against the proposition of the gentleman from Jessamine; and if my opinion should hereafter be asked for, which I do not expect, because that can be a matter of so little moment, I will refer to the section submitted by me to show what it is.

The proposition which I presented was twofold. In the first place it sets forth the general principle that the right of property was anterior to the constitution, and that it was before, and higher than constitutional sanction—that it existed before there was any constitutional sanction; and whether or not it had any. Such is the first position which I occupy. Now I say, without reservation, that this convention has no right to abrogate, to annihilate all property in the commonwealth of Kentucky. Suppose this convention were to frame a constitution, to go into effect at once and absolutely, a provision which should declare, that individual property should no longer exist in Kentucky. Such a provision would have no effect, no legal force, but would be void. If you concede that general position, you yield all I ask, in relation to slaves; for if this convention has not the power to abolish all individual property, it has no authority to expunge the right and the ownership of individuals in upwards of 200,000 slaves. If this convention could, by a scheme of emancipation, without paying for the slaves, wrest them from their owners, what is there to prevent it from inserting a clause in the constitution, that the estate and right of all individuals to lands, should be abolished, and no longer have any legal existence whatever. No delegate I presume will controvert the position, that this convention might make a new constitution, to go into effect without its being submitted to the people, but at once, upon its being agreed to and promulgated by this body. Suppose that course was taken, and a most explicit and complete provision, abolishing, as effectually as language could express it, all right and property in real estate for every purpose, was incorporated in it; and when each gentleman here reached his home, he found his family expelled from his domicile, by an intruder, would we all be without legal remedy in the premises? Would our rights have been annihilated by such a provision in the constitution, and we forever be cut off and exiled from our comfortable possessions? No, upon an appeal for redress against the wrongdoer in the ordinary form of suit, the courts would decide such a provision, even in a constitution, utterly null and void, as being in subversion of the right of property, to secure, and not to destroy which, the government and constitution were formed. Suppose we make a constitution emancipating the slaves without compensation, to have immediate and absolute effect. Would that extinguish the right of every slaveholder of 200,000 slaves, and strip the owners of $70,000,000 of property, of their rights? If such a regulation would be void as to land, what principle, what magic power would make it legal and valid as to slaves. Such a provision as to both subjects must be conceded or rejected; otherwise there is a distinction between property in slaves and other subjects, by which a man may be legally and rightfully, against his will and without compensation, deprived of his slave, when his right to his other property would be impregnable. There is no escape from this dilemma. I pronounce that we hold both our lands and slaves by the same right and title, and that such a constitutional provision in relation to both would be equally void.

This convention is a constitutional body, called and organized according to the forms prescribed by the existing constitution, and circumscribed by its provisions and principles, so far as they are limitations and restrictions upon the power of government generally.

Art. 10 in the existing constitution, declares among other things: "that all power is inherent in the people, and all free government are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety and happiness.

"That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

"That in all criminal prosecutions the accused hath a right to be heard by himself and counsel; to demand the nature and the cause of the prosecution against him; to meet the witnesses face to face; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; and, in prosecutions by indictment or information, a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the vicinage; that he cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself, nor can he be deprived of his life, liberty, or property, unless by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land.

"Nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use, without the consent of his representatives, and without just compensation being previously made to him.

"The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write, and print, on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

The twenty-eighth section of this article (10,) reads:

"To guard against transgressions of the high powers which we have delegated, we declare, that every thing in this article is excepted out of the general powers of government, and shall forever remain inviolate; and all laws contrary thereto, or contrary to this constitution, shall be void."

Some gentlemen claim for this convention illimitable authority—all power. Let us test that position. Suppose we were to make a constitution to go into full effect immediately, without being submitted to the people for their ratification—that this constitution declared and provided that no power whatever is inherent in the people, but all power, by divine right, belonged to some individual, and naming as absolute king him and his heirs in succession; abolishing popular government, and declaring that the life and liberty of every individual was held subject to the will of this king; that private property no longer existed, but every subject of property was vested absolutely in the monarch; that there should be no worship of Almighty God whatever, but all adoration should be paid to the king; and that no person should speak, write, or print any thing whatever upon government, politics, or religion. Would a constitution formed and promulgated by this convention, containing these provisions, be of valid and of binding obligation upon the people of Kentucky? I have put a strong case, but all its branches are modes of the exercise of power which might be connected with political government, and all such power is claimed by some for this convention. Power in the purposes of the government of man, has, among one people or another, and in some ages of the world, been exercised in forms quite as oppressive and revolting as it would be in such a constitution—indeed, in exactly the same features. Gentlemen may answer, that no convention would ever be so wicked or mad as to devise and establish so monstrous a constitution. But that would be an evasion of the question between us. Your proposition is, that in this convention dwells all the fulness of power as it might be exercised in human government. I have presented you some supposititious examples, such as by historical record have often existed, and as may again exist, and many of which are now bowing down into hopeless slavery numerous communities of civilized man. Were this convention to embody such perversion of power in a constitution, and throw it upon the people, would those revolting provisions be the supreme law? I say, no; and there will be none to take the affirmative of the proposition. Then, what great truths, what fundamental and overruling principles would arrest such a constitution and nullify it? The tenth article of the present constitution, and the imprescriptible and enduring rights and liberties of the people therein proclaimed, which are excepted out of the general powers of government, and proclaimed to remain inviolate: the inviolability of the rights of person, of property, of adoration to Almighty God, and others of only secondary importance:—these inappreciable rights and liberties, that so far from being created or instituted by the constitution, existed and were enjoyed by the citizen before we had constitutions, and to secure which in peace and perpetuity, the constitution itself was formed, can never be destroyed by it or in it; and any of its provisions having such purposes and effect, would be absolutely void.

I will advance another step in this view of the subject. Suppose such a constitution formed and imposed upon the people, even with the sanction, and its validity upheld by the majority—would it have a legal and rightful obligation upon the minority? I reply no! Attacking and destroying all the essential rights and ends for which society and government in this country has ever, and does now exist, it would be a revolution brought about without rightful authority, violent, wrongful, and oppressive; and the minority would have an unquestionable right to resist it forcibly. It would be the most flagrant tyranny and oppression, and will free-men ever concede that they have not the unalienable, eternal right to resist oppression?

It is not necessary for me to attempt to define what character and extent of encroachment upon existing rights and liberties, by this convention, would amount to unauthorized revolution, and which those opposed to it might rightfully resist—it is enough for me to say, that all the changes which I have suggested would amount to such a case. That the total and unconditional abolition of the worship of God; that the denial of any political power in the people and the investiture of all of it in one man; that the abrogation of all constitutional and legal provisions for the security of person and personal liberty; that the denial and annihilation of individual property in the lands of the state, being of the value of $127,000, and belonging to 90,000 persons; that the emancipation of more than 200,000 slaves without compensation, worth $80,000,000, and the property of 30,000 persons, would each and all be the usurpation of unauthorized and tyrannical power, and in subversion of the primary and chief objects of our government and our constitution; and any attempt to enforce them would be a violent and lawless revolution which every good citizen might, and every friend of liberty would resist to his utmost. Such resistance, in some of the classes of cases at least, all would acknowledge to be the highest duty and patriotism, and its success the greatest blessing to the whole country.—Among the whole people, the free citizens of the United States, the parties to our social compact, whose honor and faith are mutually pledged to each other for the maintenance and inviolability of those great rights and liberties, the principles which apply to and govern each case are the same. If there be different principles of right or law, which apply to property in slaves, and which give to this convention a greater power over them, than all other subjects of property, I challenge any gentleman, who maintains such difference, to name specifically and distinctly those different principles of right and law. The natural right of the slave himself to his liberty is a very different question, and is one between himself and his owner. It may be a question between the slave and the government and the whole people of Kentucky. But slavery having existed from the earliest traditions of history; and in all the forms and with all the rights as we have it, first in the colonies and then in the United States, for three hundred years; established by, and until lately existing under the authority of almost every civilized nation of the earth; recognized and enforced by treaties between sovereign powers, by national and general law, by constitutions, by municipal and statutory law; and in Kentucky its sanctions and inviolability, existing precisely as those of all other property, neither this convention, nor a majority of the people can emancipate them without a proper compensation to their owners. I concede that a majority of the people can rightfully, by the agency of a convention, take all the slaves in the state and emancipate them; but not in the rightful exercise of power, except on the condition of paying for them out of the public treasury. Whenever a clear and decided majority of the people, in my day, determine to put into execution a system of emancipation, based upon this principle, I am ready to go with them. But I am opposed to forcing, or attempting prematurely any such scheme. I am for awaiting the spontaneous and general action of the people in its favor. If to this it be objected, that the people will never consent to pay for the slaves, I answer, they cannot emancipate, with a due observance of justice and right to the owners, without it. If it be said that any scheme of emancipation, upon the principle of paying for them, would necessarily be so difficult and tardy in its execution as to continue through generations, it might be answered, that would be for the better; for then it would be so gradual as to introduce no great disorders or sudden changes in society, and the institution would disappear so gradually as to produce no shock, no great popular commotion.

But it appears to me, that any intelligent and carefully reflecting mind, must come to the conclusion, that slavery is to have but a transitory existence in Kentucky. The general sentiment of the world is against it, before which, in fifty years it has receded vastly; and this sentiment is deeply and widely formed in our limits and among our own people. In all the free states it is universal, and it exists in such intensity and activity, that hereafter, it will be an accident for a fugitive slave to be reclaimed from any of them. The climate and productions of Kentucky do not peculiarly require slave labor; in the southern states it is different, and there a great demand exists for slaves, and must continue until their vacant lands are settled. The insecurity of the property in our state, the great and continual demand for it in the cotton and sugar states, the extending disposition among our people individually to emancipate—these and other causes which are now powerfully acting, and which will continue to act with increasing force, will, in the course of a few generations, remove slavery, in its existing form, from Kentucky. If left to itself and the forces now acting, and which must continue to act upon it, the remedy for it will be more proper, peaceable and effective than any the meddling of the day would, or could, apply to it. The history of slavery, as we have it, proves in all the pages of the past, that it is progressing to its end. That consummation is in the course of events, and when men throw themselves in the current of events to hasten or to retard, they are but straws. Let all straws be kept out of that section of this resistless current which flows through Kentucky, and let it roll on in its undisturbed power.

In any thing which I have advanced, I do not intend to controvert the right of every people and state to adopt all and any measures which shall be necessary for their self-preservation. That is the paramount and immutable law of man and nature, and cannot be controlled by any human regulations. If the slaves were to revolt and the insurrection could be brought to an end only by driving the slaves out of our limits, it would be right thus to expel them. Because this would be a measure necessary for the protection and preservation of the whole community. If the slaves could not be kept among us without bringing upon our social organization certain ruin and dissolution, and the state and all its citizens had not the means to pay for them, the commonwealth might throw them from her without paying for them. This principle was illustrated some days since by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin) in putting the case of a boat being wrecked in the Ohio river, and two passengers being thrown into the stream on the same plank, which was sufficient to save but one. The stronger would have the natural right to push the weaker off, even inevitably to perish, that he might save himself. But if that plank, plainly and obviously, had size and buoyancy to float them both, and carry them to shore, the strong man would have no right to force the other from the plank; and if he did so, and the other was drowned, he would be guilty of a crime, and that crime would be no less than murder. So, as long as the slaves may remain here without bringing into imminent danger the white population, or the continuance of the society; and so long as there are means besides in the state to pay for them, no convention, no majority however great and overwhelming in numbers, can rightfully emancipate the slaves without making a fair compensation for them.

And then the convention adjourned.

---

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. WARDER.

SPECIAL COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. APPERSON. I submit to the convention the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the committee on the court of appeals inquire into the expediency of authorizing the general assembly to provide in certain cases for a special court of appeals.

Resolved, That the committee on the circuit courts inquire into the expediency of permitting the general assembly to provide, by law, for the holding of circuit courts by others than the judges thereof.

I will make an explanation of the object of these resolutions. It might happen in electing a judge of the court of appeals, that a circuit court judge would be placed upon the bench of that court. It has been so frequently, and a case has come up which could not be determined for the want of a majority of judges to sit on the bench. It may happen also, that a case is decided in the circuit court affecting the interest of one of the judges of the court of appeals, or some of his relations. This resolution, relating to that court, is only one of inquiry, whether in such case as either of the above, it may not be expedient to provide for a special court of appeals, so that the legislature might make some provision that a portion of the judges of the circuit court should come in and form a part of the appellate court.

The second resolution provides for holding the circuit court in case of the illness of a judge of that court. This has been done in other states, and I hope the resolutions will be adopted.

The resolutions were adopted.

MODE OF AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. EDWARDS. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That any amendment or amendments to this constitution, may be proposed in either house of the general assembly, and if the same be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each house, within ten days after the meeting of the same, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered on their journal, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and the secretary of state shall cause the same to be published three months before the next general election, in at least one newspaper in every county in which a newspaper is published, and if a majority of all the voters in the state shall vote for such amendment or amendments, then the secretary of state shall cause the same again to be published, in the manner aforesaid, at least three months previous to the next general election for representatives; and if a majority of all the voters in the state shall again vote for such amendment or amendments, the general assembly shall, at its next session, incorporate the same into the constitution. If more than one amendment is submitted at a time, they shall be submitted in such manner and form, that the people may vote for or against each amendment separately: Provided, That no such amendment or amendments shall be made to the article on slavery, or the article for the revision of this constitution.

I will remark that the report of the committee on the revision of the constitution, meets my approbation as far as it goes. But, in addition to that mode, I prefer specific amendments. Yet I would remark that I cannot consent to any mode of specific amendment, which will give rise to the agitation of slavery, by the legislative power. I therefore will move that the resolution be printed, and that it be taken up when the report of the committee on slavery comes up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

SUBMISSION TO THE PEOPLE.

Mr. KAVANAUGH offered the following resolution, and it was adopted:

Resolved, That the committee on the miscellaneous provisions take into consideration the time, mode, and manner of submitting the new constitution to the people of the state, for their sanction or rejection, and that said committee report thereon to the convention.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on general provisions.

The pending question was on Mr. CLARKE'S amendment to Mr. A. K. MARSHALL'S additional section.

Mr. MITCHELL. A great deal has been said here, sir, about "abstractions," and no little railery has been indulged in, at the expense of those who have attempted to trace back proposed measures to their first principles. Everything, sir, is regarded as abstract, which does not compose a feature palpably distinct in our present condition; and any inferential effort to exhibit the tendencies of a proposition, by examining it in connection with the leading principles which constitute the substruction of popular government, is regarded by some as a useless excursion into the regions of ideality.

The revolution—the glorious revolution which gave birth to our nationality—was founded upon an abstraction. Did the stamp act—did the inconsiderable tax upon tea, when that article sold cheaper in the American market after the duty had been imposed than it did in Great Britain—cause the sword of America to be drawn, which was not sheathed until the hour of her triumph? Was it not, sir, the detection of a violated principle in the imposition of taxation without representation, which led to the disruption of those cherished ties that bound the colonies to the mother country? There was nothing, sir, of actual, tangible oppression; the burdens of the colonial population were less than those of British subjects at home. That clear perception of political right, which results from a vision undazzled by the splendors of royalty—from a spirit nursed amid the wild grandeur of nature, and therefore unawed by the "pomp and circumstance" of regal power, at once detected the violation of principle; and the wisdom born of such knowledge, discovered in an unjust beginning the fearful portent of a ruinous end.

This, sir, is the proud characteristic that distinguishes ours from every other political struggle which has marked the annals of revolution; it is a characteristic that commends itself to the American citizen as the means of perpetuating those blessings which it was so mainly instrumental in achieving.

Entertaining these sentiments, I hope to be pardoned for attaching somewhat of importance to the abstract enunciations emanating from a body clothed, in its representative character, with the sovereignty of the state. I say, sir, a body clothed with the sovereignty of the state. Let us, sir, for a moment examine this question.

What I ask, are the origin and object of written constitutions? They originated, sir, in the necessity which exists in popular representative governments of imposing a limit on popular agents. The offspring of political progress, they were born amid revolutionary travail. It is the boast, sir, of Virginia—that proud old commonwealth, the mother of states—it is her boast, according to Mr. Jefferson, to have originated the first written constitution that was ever known to the world. She, sir, amid the storms and perils incident to invasive warfare, on the 29th of June, 1776, framed her original system of organic laws. Written constitutions, sir, are intended not to define popular sovereignty, but to erect bulwarks against the abuse of delegated power. They do not proclaim, as some gentlemen seem to think, that the popular will, which can only be ascertained through a convention, is incapable of achieving the attributes of sovereignty—they do not proclaim what the people cannot do; but they proclaim what the people's government shall not do. Their great object is to define, limit, circumscribe, the operations of representative government. In a pure democracy, where all action is taken by the people primarily, there can be no necessity for a written constitution; but, on the other hand, in a representative democracy, from this very necessity resulting from the impracticability of direct popular action, springs the further necessity of clothing a convention with the sovereignty of the state—with the whole power of the people.

I do not wish to be understood as asserting that this convention has unlimited power; I would say, sir, that its powers are co-extensive with those of the people, and are only restricted by the national constitution. Can gentlemen find any other restriction—any other limitation to these powers? Surely sir, it is not to be found in the constitution of the state; and here, sir, I take issue with my honorable friend from Bourbon. If I understood him correctly on this point, he maintained that this is a constitutional convention, called by the authority of the present constitution, and subject to be controlled by its principles as much as is the legislature. It is, sir, called a "constitutional convention," not because it is subject to be controlled by the principles of the existing constitution, but because it was called to frame a constitution. It is so denominated to distinguish it from a convention called for other purposes. To prevent confusion, to facilitate the ascertainment of the public will, the present constitution has a provision inserted in it for the calling of a convention; but when the delegates to that convention had once been selected, being clothed with the same power that resided in the convention which framed the present constitution, all power over them, so far as the existing constitution is concerned, was at an end. The framers of the present constitution intended to do nothing with respect to a future convention, but to provide for the mode of its appointment.

But if this convention is to be controlled by the principles of the existing constitution, its powers are narrowed down to a mere modification of details—it shrinks away under the application of this stringent rule into a mere legislative assembly, and does not possess the power to effect and carry out any of the radical changes, indicated by public sentiment, because they involve an overthrow of existing principles; when therefore delegates upon this floor proposed any material alteration—any new and important measure—such for instance as the abolition of the life tenure of office, or such an extension of the elective franchise as to embrace all the functionaries of government—if my friend from Bourbon be correct in his views, the existing constitution would have risen up in judgment against the fell spirit of unlicensed innovation, and rebuked them into silence. It is, sir, a well settled principle that the acts of one legislature are not binding upon succeeding legislative bodies; and why so? Because they are supposed to reflect the popular will; and that will is as potential at one time as at another. If one generation can legislate for another, irrespective of its will, then, sir, that potent influence which we denominate popular sovereignty would be like the fosforescent light which arises from the charnel house—a delusive brilliancy, an empty seeming, the merest mockery of power; and popular intelligence devitalized would perish in the cold embraces of political power, exercised by a by-gone race.

My remark, sir, is not made in a spirit of irreverence to the memory of the illustrious dead. If any state in this Union has cause to be proud of her political fathers, it is Kentucky. When her present governmental charter was framed, a step in the progress of political science was accomplished, by which she was placed far in advance of her sisters; and now, after the lapse of half a century, when we are desirous of profiting by the teachings of experience—when we propose to infuse a greater amount of popular activity into our government, regardless of those sacred associations connected with this instrument, we approach it not to desecrate, but to amend. Our fathers inscribed not upon their work "noli me tangere" as a warning against the innovations of posterity. We do but realize their patriotic wishes by conforming the organic law to the changes which time has effected in the popular will, and the popular character.

But sir, to return to the point. It is true, that this convention might misrepresent the people—it is true, it might abuse the trust which has been confided to it; but such misrepresentation and abuse of power, would only display wrong action, and not the inability to act. It is also true, that public opinion may have indicated—as it has certainly done—the extent to which the exercise of the powers confided to this convention should be carried; but sir, if there was any action by this body in contravention of that public opinion, although it would involve a breach of trust—although it would render this convention obnoxious to the charge of faithlessness, yet it would not, by this departure from the popular will, become amenable to the charge of usurpation—of exceeding the limits of that power which the people have confided to its charge. Let me for a moment, illustrate this position. Public sentiment has decreed that there shall be an elective judiciary. If this convention were to bestow the appointing power elsewhere—if it were to vest it in other hands than those of the people, it would have abused the trust confided to it—it would have been disregarding of the pledges which it had made to the country; but still it could not be said that the convention had exercised a power which did not legitimately reside in it. Public sentiment has also required that the constitution, when framed, should be submitted to the people for their ratification, and this convention would be acting in bad faith, if it did not respond to that sentiment. But it will not be urged here, that it has not the power to make a constitution without conditions. Suppose that such were its action, and the new constitution did not meet the public expectations, the remedy would consist in the calling of another convention.

If, sir, public sentiment does not impose a limit upon the powers of this body in the instances which have been given, then public sentiment does not impose a limit in any other supposable case; nor can it be inferred that there is any restriction upon the powers of the convention imposed by the disposition of the public mind. Its ability is like that derived from a general power of attorney given to an individual, with instructions to act only in a particular case. The transaction of business beyond the instructions, but within the power, might well raise the question of propriety, but certainly could not bring up the question of authority. If, then, sir, the powers of this convention are undefined and unlimited, all the powers which reside in the people reside in it.

If it be true, as I have endeavored to show, that the powers of this convention are the powers of the people, the enquiry arises as to what is the extent of popular power—as to what is popular sovereignty. I take it, sir, that the quantum of power is the same in every political association; that all states have the same amount of power residing somewhere. In an autocracy it is centered in the will of one individual who is endowed with despotic, absolute, uncontrolled power. In a republic it resides in the whole people in their political capacity. With us, sir, a portion of the popular power has been yielded up by the federal compact; but the residue resides in the people. The people of Kentucky in their political capacity—as a political association, have the same powers as the emperor of Russia, or any other sovereign, where the exercise of these powers would not conflict with the national constitution. They can, at pleasure, amend, change, or abolish their government, and institute another system in its stead, provided that the government so substituted, be not in conflict with the limitation imposed by the constitution of the United States. Their power over property is as absolute as the power of any government; and unless property possesses an attribute which elevates it above all law and all constitutional sanction, it is as much within the grasp of the people of Kentucky, as of any other political association or sovereignty. What, sir, is the right of property? It is the right to hold, to enjoy, to dispose of during life, and to transmit to whom we may choose after death, anything which is legitimately the subject of ownership. This I take it is a full and fair definition of the right of property as it exists among us—a right which will be held sacred and inviolate so long as the sense of justice in the public mind is adequate to the ends of government. This right, sir, might be as completely destroyed by the repeal of the laws in which it originates, and by which it is secured, as it can be by a positive announcement declaring that it shall no longer exist. By what sanction does the heir enjoy the estate of his ancestor if it be not under the law of descent. Repeal that law, and the right to all that class of property derived by descent is at an end; it either vests in the government by escheat, or it falls back upon its original state to be appropriated in the natural mode of acquisition which is by occupancy. By what right does a devisee claim to hold property which has been willed to him if not by the law which sanctions and prescribes the mode of such transfer? Repeal the laws which regulate estates, and what becomes of the right of property? This it is competent for the legislature to do if there be no constitutional inhibition; and if such an inhibition does exist, it is competent for this convention to remove it. But if gentlemen are right in the position which they have assumed; nay, if the amendments of the gentleman from Henderson and the gentleman from Bourbon, which have been adopted, assert the truth, the repeal of all laws could scarcely effect the community, as rights, whether of person or property, are above the sanction of law and constitution, reposing on some airy substratum generated, as I suppose, in the eternal fitness of things.—Constitutional inhibitions to prevent legislative encroachments upon the rights of property, are presumptuous assertions of power over a subject entirely above their sanction, and hence all constitutional guards being unnecessary, constitutions themselves sinking from the paramount importance heretofore attached to them, become political supererogations.

But let us look at the right of property in its simpler form, as the right to hold a thing. Now, my honorable friend from Bourbon, in delivering his sentiments on this subject last Saturday, contended that this right of property was above and anterior to all constitutional sanction, and yet he admitted that the state had a right to take it upon making compensation to the owner. Now, I ask, is the right of property complete if it can be taken at all, under any circumstances, without the consent of the owner? What signifies compensation if his will is not consulted? Is not the strong arm of the law employed to wrench it from him against his will? And I ask if it does not involve the same principle, so far as the question of power is concerned, whether compensation be given or not? To take against the owner's will, is to violate that owner's right of property. If the right of property be inviolable—if it be above and anterior to all constitutional sanction—then, compensation or no compensation, it cannot be touched by the law or the constitution without violating that right. Compensation, sir! What compensation could atone for the desecration of the spot of earth rendered dear by the memories of childhood, consecrated by the joys and sorrows of life—by the sports of our youth and by the graves of our fathers? I say, sir, that the right of property, when it is conceded, that it can be taken by the government for public purposes, even when compensation is made, is not above legal sanction; for the right to take and the right to enjoy are propositions incompatible with each other. So far as the right to hold is concerned—a right inseparable from the idea of absolute property—compensation does not cure the violence done to the will in taking; and if the right to property be above all constitutional sanction, then the act of taking it away is an assertion of power irreconcilable with the tenure by which it is held. If this be no impairment of the right of property, then I can enter upon the land of my neighbor; cause a valuation to be made of it; tender him compensation; avoid an action; and by that course possess myself of his estate, whether he is willing or not. If taking without regard to the owner's will does not impugn the right of property—if the offer of compensation is an equivalent for the absence of consent, he has no cause of complaint—has sustained no injury, and therefore has no remedy. And yet, sir, it is a matter of every day occurrence, when the public convenience requires the construction of a railroad or a turnpike, that private property is taken even without the will of the owner, although a compensation may be made. That compensation is made, sir, because of the requisition of the constitution, that no private property shall be taken without compensation to the owner; and yet there are legislative enactments which go so far as to say that that compensation shall in part or in whole be composed of the collateral advantages that may be derived from the improvement, except so far as the mere value of the soil which is appropriated may be concerned. Will gentlemen, in the face of these facts and these admissions, still contend that the right of property is above the sanction of the law?

Mr. President, civilization is the offspring of law; its rights originate in law, and its incidents are secured by it. Like every other earthly thing, it is a mixed blessing; but it may be safely asserted, that as that condition is more appropriate to the rational existence of man, the good it dispenses predominates over its evil. It is an artificial system which is based upon municipal law; and, according to my humble apprehension, whenever there is an attempt to jostle it from its true basis, the whole structure is in danger. Why sir, attempt this thing? If the power exists, the mere denial of it in a constitution will not secure the right, and if the power does not exist, still we accomplish nothing. In departing from the beaten tract, we are treading upon dangerous ground. Cui bono? Will any gentleman explain the practical benefits that are to result? Does the occasion demand such a course? Is there such a crisis in the proprietary affairs of the country?

* Non tali auxilio, non defensoribus istis, Tempus eget." * * * * *

I see nothing in the occasion which justifies these hooks, upon which the enemies of constitutional reform—the enemies of the institution of slavery will hang their opposition. I am opposed to the whole series of propositions on this subject—ab ovo, ad pomum—from the egg to the apple—from the beginning to the end; because I regard them as intrinsically wrong in principle—because I regard them as dangerous and mischievous in their practical results. If we would secure the institution of slavery, let us guard against legislative infraction, by placing the subject beyond such control.

Sir, there is no gentleman on this floor whose feelings are more deeply involved in the question of slavery than mine. I have been associated with it from my earliest recollections. I am now the owner of slaves who are connected with an hereditary vassalage, which has subsisted in my family for more than a hundred years. I would not sell them—I would not dissolve the relation existing between us—a relation which I am constrained to believe has been of mutual benefit. If it should so happen that this climate becomes injurious to the existence of such property, I can seek a home elsewhere. I should look upon any necessity which might constrain me to dispose of this property, as a great calamity to me—a greater to the slaves; and yet, as much as I value it—as much as I am attached to it, I rest it, and every other right which I possess, with perfect security upon the firm basis of public justice.

Mr. TALBOTT. I will ask the indulgence of the house but for a short time. I agree with the gentleman from Oldham, (Mr. Mitchell,) that much has been said here, and elsewhere, about abstractions. If not in this house, there has been out of it, a constant effort to show that the right the citizen has in every other species of property is a glorious reality, while the right he has in his slave is a glorious abstraction. Much excitement seemed to have sprung up here, on Saturday, while the amendment offered by the delegate from Bourbon (Mr. Davis,) was under discussion; and gentlemen seemed anxious to know the reasons why delegates had voted for it. Sir, I voted for both branches of that section, and I voted for them because I believed them to contain the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Sir, I esteem that section one of paramount importance. Its principles and positions form the very basis and foundation pillars upon which our government stands. It is the only proposition, in my judgment, which meets directly, fully, fairly, and perfectly, the great question now at issue between the emancipationist and the pro-slavery man. Sir, there is a party in this country, weak it is true, in numbers, but powerful in intellect. A party of great intelligence, integrity, and piety; organized, skillful, enthusiastic, and determined upon the abolition of slavery in Kentucky. A party who contend that this convention has plenary power or right, if we wish to exercise it, to emancipate the slaves on any, on our own terms. And here, sir, I take issue with them.

The first branch of that section asserts that the right of property is before, and higher than all constitutional sanction. The second asserts that, the right the citizen has in his slaves, and their increase, to be the same; he has in any and every other species of property whatever. I believe the first, and I believe the last declaration in this section to be true. I voted for them sir, and I voted for them cordially. I voted for them with all my heart. I am willing for gentlemen, I am willing for this convention, and sir, I am willing for the whole world to know, how and why I have thus voted. They are right in principle and right in policy. Upon them I take my stand, and with them I intend to stand or fall. I voted for them sir, and I voted for them because I believe them to be true.

They may be disregarded, broken down, and abandoned, for a season, by revolution, by violence, by brute force; but sir, they are principles and positions, as incontrovertible, in my judgment, as the truth of heaven, the justice of God, or the existence of man. They will rise up in judgment in after days against the reckless, ruthless revolutionist, who attempts to disregard and trample them under his feet. They will stand the test of time—pass unscathed through the fiery strife and conflicts, the clash and crash of contending and crumbling empires and republics. And when the storm of revolution shall have passed, and reason and justice again enthroned, the principles set forth in this section, will then stand, acknowledged and revered, firm and unshaken as the hills of eternity, and serve as the pillars, upon which to found new republics, and new states. The first branch of this section asserts that the right to property is before, and above all constitutional sanction. The question then is: is this true or false? Now sir, let us suppose a case. I would ask gentlemen, if there was no liberty, no property, no rights, no interests to secure, nothing to protect before, where would be the necessity of government? Where the inducement to organize? Man is the creature of motive, always actuated and impelled by interested motive. It seems to me sir, to be axiomatic, a self-evident proposition, that if men had no liberty or rights to be lost without, no interest or property already held and enjoyed, to be secured and protected by government, there never would have been one framed upon the face of the whole earth.

Why, sir, God, when he made the first man that ever lived, (Adam,) and placed him in the garden of Eden, gave him certain rights and privileges, which might have been lost without, before he gave him a law, or instituted a government by which he could be protected and secured in their enjoyment. Why, sir, the preamble to every constitution in the union, positively declares, that the very object of the constitution, is to secure to the citizen the enjoyment of life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness—all of which he enjoys before the constitution is framed. Sir, neither the constitution of the country, nor the law of the land, gives the citizen a right to any property he owns. He purchases the right, by his labor or his money. The government only secures and protects him in the enjoyment of that right, and gives him a formal evidence of title.

It seems clear, sir, to my mind, that the very existence of government argues the necessity of it, and the necessity goes to show, conclusively, the anterior right contended for. There could be no such imperious necessity in the absence of all right.

The second branch of this proposition, sir, affirms, that the right the citizen has in his slaves, and their increase, to be the same he has in any and every other species of property whatever. There is nothing in the constitution and laws of this state—nothing in the constitution and laws of the United States—nothing in the laws of God, that I have ever seen, which denies this declaration: It is then true. And I affirm again, that he can only be deprived of that right in the same manner, and for the same purposes of government, on the same terms, and by the same authority, he can of his right in any and every species of property he may possess. While

I admit that we, as a convention, have plenary and unlimited power to prohibit the further importation of slaves into this state, as merchandise, or for the use of our own citizens—while we have the power to declare that all the children, born of bond women, purchased and brought into this state, from and after the adoption of this constitution, shall be free from their birth, without the consent of the owner of the mother, and without one cent of compensation from the commonwealth, or any other source—while I admit this, I deny that this convention, or any convention hereafter to assemble, has, or will have, the power or right, by any principle we may incorporate in the constitution we are about to frame, or any constitution hereafter to be framed, to emancipate the slaves, or their increase, now owned by our citizens, without their consent, or without paying therefor, a full and fair equivalent in money. This, sir, as I stated on a former occasion, is a constitutional convention, assembled for purposes of protection—not plunder—to secure the rights and property of our citizens—and not to destroy them.

We have been called together under the mandate and according to the provisions of the constitution, and if we, as delegates, have a right, under the existing constitution and laws of the state, to claim our seats and recover payment for our services, it seems to me clear, that the farmer is under the same constitution and laws, and to the same extent entitled to his land, the merchant to his merchandise, the lawyer to his books, the doctor to his medicines, the banker to his stocks, and the slaveholder to his slaves. If we have the right, as a convention, to destroy the right of property in one, we have in all. If we have the power or right, (and I understand power and right to be synonymous, for legally and properly speaking, where there is no right, there is no power,) then I affirm, if we have the right to say that one species of the property of a citizen shall be taken for the public use without compensation, we have the same right to say all may be taken for the same purpose and on the same terms. Sir, we have no such right—we can do no such thing. The very moment government ceases to protect the lives, the liberty, and the happiness of her citizens, that moment it ceases to exist for the very end for which it was established and has been maintained. The very moment a majority, no matter how great, meet, and arbitrarily, and unconditionally declare, regardless of the rights and interests of the minority, that without compensation a certain species of property, hitherto and at present held by the minority, shall be forever confiscated or destroyed—that very moment, sir, the government ceases to exist—the people are in a state of revolution—life, liberty, and property, stand insecure and unprotected by law, and the citizen then has a right to assume his own defence, to assume his own protection.

Sir, I have taken the position here assumed, and avowed the sentiments here expressed, under the full conviction that I am to be held responsible here and before the country for what I now say and do. I may be condemned—I may be assailed and put down by the spirit of revolution for advocating such principles—but, sir, they are the honest convictions of my judgment, and I would rather perish with them, than live without them.

Mr. WOODSON. Mr. President: The following amendment offered by the delegate from Jessamine, (Dr. A. K. Marshall) is, I believe, the immediate subject before the convention. It reads as follows:

"That neither this convention, nor any hereafter to be assembled by the people of this commonwealth, has any right or power, to either emancipate the slaves now in the state, or their descendants, or to authorize the legislature to pass laws for their emancipation."

From the fact that the mover of the amendment, just read, announced his intention to vote against it himself, and as no one seems inclined to urge its favorable consideration, I apprehend that it will shortly be given the go-bye, and that we will pass to the consideration of something else.

I have not arisen, sir, for the purpose of discussing the proposition of the delegate from Jessamine; but for the purpose of explaining to the convention, the constituency I immediately represent upon this floor, and the world, the reasons which induced me to vote as I did upon the amendment presented some days ago by the delegate from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis.) As the vote I then gave, without an explanation, might lead to misconception on the part of some, I desire, therefore, to express my views fully in regard thereto.

The amendment offered to the report of the committee, as an additional section to which I have reference, reads as follows:

"The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction; and the right of the owner of a slave to his property is the same, and as inviolable, as the right of the owner of any property whatever."

Now, sir, I voted against the section I have just read—the reasons for so doing, I propose to give.

Mr. President, I recognize no legal difference in a man's right to his slave and any other property. We hold our slaves by legal and constitutional sanctions. When they are improperly injured or taken from us without our consent, and without legal authority, the laws of the country afford us redress, just as they do when our lands are trespassed upon, or our horses taken from us. This is all as it should be. I wish not to interfere with the constitution or laws as they now stand upon the subject.

Yet, sir, I voted against the proposition of the gentleman from Bourbon. First, because I can see no necessity, earthly, for it. We have already secured to the slaveholder his property in his slaves as fully as we have secured our lands, our houses, and our homes, or any description of property whatever; and, sir, when I have placed the slave property of the country upon an equal footing, so far as the protection of the constitution is concerned, with all other property, I have done as much as I am willing or intend to do, for its protection. When I recognize the legal right to slaves to be as perfect as the legal right to my homestead, I have done all that I am expected to do, and have gone as far as I intend to go.

Notwithstanding all I have said, sir, I cannot subscribe to the doctrine attempted to be established by the amendment—for the great reason, sir, that it is false in fact, and founded rather upon the strong pro-slavery proclivities of the times in Kentucky, than upon reason or propriety. I say this with all imaginable deference to the great mind that conceived it, and presented it to this convention.

Look at the proposition, sir. What does it assert? Nothing more nor less, than that slave property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction. This, if true, I would subscribe to, but as it is false, I will endeavor to expose it.

All questions of doubtful import, arising under the constitution and laws of the United States, when they do arise, are referred to the judicial department of the government for settlement; and after they are settled by the supreme court of the United States, the country must submit to the settlement thus made. Now, sir, I regard the question presented as no longer a mooted one, as having been long ago determined by the highest and only authoritative tribunal known to our constitution and laws.

The supreme court of the United States in the case of Prigg against the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 16 Peters, 611, says:

"The state of slavery is deemed to be a mere municipal regulation, founded upon and limited to the range of territorial laws."

Now, sir, what does this decision assert? That slavery is founded upon and limited to the range of laws—that it is the creature of municipal regulation—and not, sir, as the amendment asserts, "before and higher than any constitutional sanction."

I have now said as much as I intended saying when I arose, but as the subject of slavery and emancipation has occupied much of the time of the convention, and as there are still many important propositions connected with these subjects, upon your table, I propose now, sir, by the indulgence of the convention, to say all I have to say, in regard to them; and if I should not confine myself to the immediate subject of discussion now pending, I shall at least not wander further from the issue than has been customary with all who have preceded me in the discussion of the great questions to which I propose addressing myself.

The resolutions of the delegate from Madison, (Mr. Turner)—the preamble and resolution of the delegate from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon,) and the report of the committee on slavery, present four practical questions.

First, is it expedient to invest the legislature with the power to emancipate slaves hereafter in Kentucky, under any circumstances, without the consent of the owner? Secondly, the expediency being granted, have we the right and power to do so? Thirdly, has the master the same perfect right, in the offspring of his slaves, that he has to those in esse? And fourthly, the propriety of incorporating the provisions of the law of 1833, in the amended constitution, is presented.

The foregoing questions have been extensively discussed by delegates upon this floor, as well as the abstract proposition, is slavery right and proper in and of itself?

That the legislature ought to have the power to emancipate slaves without the consent of their owners, I have no doubt, and I shall, without any hesitancy, vote to give it the power—first, because I believe it to be right; and secondly, because I regard it as essential to the reception and ratification of any constitution we may make, by the people.

A great many considerations have brought my mind to the conclusions just indicated—a few of them I propose submitting to the convention.

In the first place, the power is delegated in the present constitution, and I do not believe that the people have demanded any change.

The first clause of the first section of the eighth article of the existing constitution, reads:

“The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves, without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners, previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated.”

As the power has been lying dormant for the last fifty years in the constitution, I am told that time has demonstrated that there is no necessity for its retention. And I grant, sir, that if public sentiment continues in Kentucky, throughout all coming time, as it now is, that this, as well as all other constitutional provisions having the ultimate extinction of slavery in view, with great propriety might be omitted. I would ask though, what assurances we have that such will be the case? How do we know that the succeeding generation may not be as zealous for the extermination of slavery as we are for its preservation? Liberty has one day in France been the idol of every heart, and in its defence every Frenchman would have poured out his blood. The next, the same precious treasure, with equal devotion, would have flowed like rivers in the effort to extinguish the hallowed fires of freedom and rivet the chains of tyranny, oppression, and despotism. Whether Kentucky is destined at any time, proximate or remote, to reverse the decision recently given with unparalleled unanimity, in favor of the institution of slavery, time alone can determine. The framers of the constitution under which we have lived so long, and under the influence of which Kentucky has acquired her world-wide reputation, thought that the day might come when policy and interest, as well as humanity, might sanction emancipation. And if it were not so much out of taste—if the sentiment were not so much at war with that breathed by all who have preceded me in this discussion, I would venture the expression of the hope, and hazard the declaration of the opinion, that the time will come when all who have been cursed and devoted to slavery, ignorance, and degradation, will be banished to other lands and other climes, more in accordance with their condition than Kentucky.

Fifty years ago, sir, our ancestry made provision for emancipation, to the full extent that I propose to go now. All I wish is, to give to those who are to come after us the same power to judge of, and act in reference to, this matter, that we possess. We have judged of the propriety of the abolition of slavery, and have decided it to suit ourselves. Let us leave the same high privilege to our children—let us content ourselves with proclaiming the inalienable rights of freemen—let us endeavor to perpetuate liberty, and leave slavery to perpetuate itself.

Suppose, however, sir, that we take from the legislature the power it now possesses to act in reference to this subject, and that at a future day the voice of Kentucky is as united in favor of emancipation as it now is against it, what will be the effect? Can the object, even then, be attained without manifest injustice to those who then own slaves, and are opposed to giving them up for the purposes of emancipation? Clearly not; and for the plainest and most palpable reason: it would be violative of the pledge we give the slaveholder, when we tell him that his slaves shall not be taken from him without his consent. Property is purchased, inherited, and enjoyed, subject to the existing constitution and laws. The laws of the land are to be regarded when we acquire property, because it is an universal principle of law, and one that holds in every civilized state, that property is held subject to the demands of law. If you have purchased a slave, sir, since 1799, at the time you made the purchase you were aware that the legislature had the power to deprive you of the slave so purchased, by paying you a fair equivalent for such slave. And if the legislature should think proper to purchase and emancipate your slaves, you cannot, in justice, complain of the act; simply because all slaves have been acquired and held in Kentucky subject to the exercise of the unlimited discretion of the legislature, under the clause above quoted. Will any one deny that the legislature has not only the power, but an undisputed constitutional and moral right, to take all of our slaves from us, by paying us a fair compensation for them? Certainly no one will deny the power, because the constitution guaranties it in express terms.

For a single moment though, sir, let us suppose that the constitution had vested no such power in the legislature, and that without the consent of the owner the legislature were, in obedience to the unmistakable voice and wishes of three-fourths of all the voters in Kentucky, to pass a general law, emancipating all the slaves in the state, without the consent of the owners, and providing for the prompt payment of the proprietors a full equivalent for every slave emancipated, I ask you, sir, and I put the question to honorable delegates, if the equivalent paid would not be a poor compensation for the high-handed invasion of the private rights of the citizen committed, and for an act perpetrated directly in violation of the plighted faith of the government? We are taught to love and respect the government of our country, on account of its justice and high sense of honor, and because it throws the broad and comprehensive shield of protection over and around the life, reputation, and property of the humblest citizen.

The framers of the present constitution thought it not improbable that their descendants might wish to abolish slavery; hence they vested the legislature with the power. This was done, sir, fifty years ago. Shall we, instead of consummating the object they had in view—instead of advancing the cause of universal liberty—destroy the very foundation stone of emancipation —strike from the constitution a provision that will enable the legislature to carry into effect the wishes of the people without doing injustice to any one; and rivet the institution of slavery in Kentucky until the last slaveholder voluntarily surrenders him? Shall we take from our children the power and right to judge of this matter for themselves, and give liberty, even to slaves, when they desire to do so? The voice of humanity forbids it, religion forbids it, interest forbids it, the warning voices of the illustrious dead forbid it. Thomas Jefferson, as late as in 1814, in a letter to Edward Coles, says:

"The hour of emancipation is advancing in the march of time. It shall have all my prayers, and these are the only weapons of an old man. It is an encouraging observation, that no good measure was ever proposed, which if duly pursued, failed in the end."

Patrick Henry, in a letter to R. Pleasants, makes the following prophecy:

"The time will come, when an opportunity will be offered to abolish this lamentable evil. I shall honor the Quakers, for their noble efforts to abolish slavery."

Listen, sir, also, to the language of Washington himself. In a letter to Robert Pleasants, he says:

"There is not a man living who wishes more sincerely than I do, to see a plan adopted for the abolition of slavery; but there is only one proper and effectual mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is by legislative authority; and this, so far as my suffrage will go, shall not be wanting." In a letter to Sir John St. Clair, he also uses the following strong and decided language: "I never mean, unless some particular circumstances should compel me to it, to possess another slave, by purchase, it being among my first wishes to see some plan adopted, by which slavery, in this country, may be abolished by law."

Do not understand me sir, as favoring emancipation at this time, or wishing to see this convention intermeddling with it in any manner whatever—far from it. I know sir, that the public mind in Kentucky is not prepared for emancipation, and that slavery will exist among us until we shall be thoroughly satisfied (I mean a majority of the people) that it is no longer the interest of the state to uphold it. And when that time does come, I for one, do not wish to see injustice done the slaveholder by taking his property from him without constitutional authority to do so, nor do I wish to see him holding it in defiance of the wishes of the great body of the people, when they are ready, in pursuance of the present constitution, to pay him an ample equivalent therefor. Whether the time will ever come, when the power desired to be conferred, will be exercised, no one can tell; if it never does, no harm can result from it. Another idea: have the people of Kentucky demanded that the constitution shall be altered in the manner indicated? I think not. Public sentiment, every where, among the warmest pro-slavery men in my region of country, is in favor of allowing the subject of slavery to remain as it is at present in the constitution; and my decided impression is, that if the institution of slavery is either weakened or strengthened by us, that all we do will be rejected by the people when we submit our labors to them for final ratification. Will that respectable and philanthropic class of our fellow citizens who so much desire the entire abolition of slavery, vote to receive our amended constitution. I care not how many substantial reforms may be inserted by us, or how fully they may concur with us in regard to their necessity, if we have done any thing which may have a tendency to retard emancipation, and cast more insuperable obstacles in the way of the final extinction of slavery than now exist? No one can, ought, or will expect it. On the other hand, were we to weaken the tenure by which slaves are held and enjoyed as property, no one could expect the excited, victorious pro-slavery party to receive it. No sir, there is not a pro-slavery man in Kentucky who would vote to receive the amended constitution, were we to inflict the slightest blow upon the institution of slavery. True wisdom then, it seems to me, ought to induce us to allow this subject to rest where we found it. I am opposed to slavery, sir, as much as any man; and no one in America would feel more rejoiced than myself to see the last vestige of it destroyed. Yet I have never seen the time, and I never expect to see it, when I would be willing to see the legislature paying for, and emancipating the slaves of Kentucky. The condition of the country has never been such as to justify it, and I think it probable it will not be for a great while. Yet, sir, as sure as time lasts, and our free institutions last, and we continue to respect the christian religion, the time will come when it will be considered a high privilege, to pay for, liberate, and send from amongst us, every slave in the state. But I am told that if it should ever become expedient to rid the country of slavery by paying for the slaves, that their owners will consent, and that unless they do, no state of the case whatever, would justify the legislature in forcing them to give up their property. This is a doctrine, however, that I can never subscribe to, and one which strikes at the very vitals of all republican government. The doctrine that majorities have the right to rule, within the limits of the constitution and laws, and to settle the public policy of every free government, is so palpably plain and just, that it need but be stated, to be sanctioned by all. Have gentlemen reflected for what they are contending, when they assert that the institution of slavery shall exist until the masters of all the slaves in the state consent to part with them? Six-sevenths of all the voters of Kentucky are non-slaveholders. Shall this overwhelming majority agree that they'll have no right to have any part or lot in the settlement of this great question? And shall one-seventh of the voters of Kentucky arrogate to themselves the right, regardless of the wishes of every body else, to dictate the time and the terms upon which this great question shall be settled? Yes sir, six out of every seven men in the whole state, may desire to put an end to the institution of slavery, yet they are not to have the power to do so. One seventh of the voters of Kentucky are to have more power than six sevenths. This is republicanism truly! This is a demonstration of the equal rights of all, in our free and highly privileged country! This is a total disregard, in verity, of a property qualification for the exercise of political rights! A man must own slaves, before he is allowed to express the opinion at the polls, that slavery is wrong, and that he desires its extermination! Well, I have heard my friend from Henry (Mr. Nuttall) talking a good deal about slaveocracies; but if this is not practically one, I hope one may never be found.

The foregoing sentiments, Mr. President, I imbibed in early life. I have uniformly maintained them, thus far in my career, as a man, as a citizen, and as a politician; and they shall never leave me until I forget the regard I now have for the equal rights, privileges, and immunities of my fellow countrymen.

But, sir, I have other reasons for supposing that Kentucky will ere long desire the extinction of slavery, and hence, I am for the retention of the clause in the constitution as it now exists.

As a state, Kentucky has as much reputation as any other, for her enlightened public policy; and she, at all times, has been devoted to her interests, in regard to every thing except the perpetuation of slavery; in this respect she has been indulging in a suicidal policy, and one which has greatly retarded her greatness, her prosperity, and her glory. I cannot believe, however, that she will much longer persist in her course, when she opens her eyes to manifest facts, and sees that her interest requires a change. Interest is a magic word—individuals, states, and nations are influenced by it. There is not a Kentuckian living, who does not desire the prosperity and advancement of his country. We all feel a personal devotion to our state, and desire to see her true glory and lasting prosperity promoted. We want to see Kentucky, as she deserves to be, one of the first states of the Union. Her numbers, her wealth, her intelligence, her prosperity, and her happiness are subjects dear to the heart of every Kentuckian, for they constitute the true elements of greatness. And I am fully satisfied myself, that these great interests—these elements of power and greatness, must languish and suffer, as long as slavery exists among us; and when a majority of the people of Kentucky concur in the opinion, shall they not have the power to act and pursue that course of policy which they deem best calculated to remove the evil, and benefit the state?

I hope that the convention will bear with me for a short time, until I present a few of the facts and reasons upon which the opinion is founded, that slavery is an injury to us as a state, and consequently that those who come after us will desire to remove it.

Let us first inquire how does the institution of slavery affect the population of Kentucky? For, independent of numbers, no state can be said to be great. To show the effect, I propose to read an extract from an address recently submitted to the people of Kentucky, and which is familiar to us all.

“Virginia has a larger territory than New England; has one of the finest climates, one of the best soils on the continent, and is rich in mineral wealth. And yet in 1840 the population of New England is double that of Virginia, including her slaves, the per centage of increase during the last fifty years, in the former, with all her emigration, having been twice that of the latter.”

As another pregnant proof of the assertion that slavery is a drawback upon the population of the state, let us contrast Ohio and Kentucky. Ohio, sir, sixty years ago, was the home of the Indian—the Anglo-American had not penetrated and settled upon her bosom. At that time, Kentucky had a free white population of 61,247, and a black population of 12,430—making her entire population, 73,671. But what do we see in 1840? Ohio has a population of 1,519,467—Kentucky a white population of 590,253, and a slave population of 182,258—and an aggregate population of 779,828, including free negroes. What a contrast in sixty years! When we compare Kentucky with Indiana or Illinois, the same marked difference is found to exist in population.

But, as I am sure all will admit that slavery has been a serious obstacle to the increase of our population, let us for a short time examine the effects slavery has had upon the wealth of those states in which it exists; and we can only do this by contrasting the slave states, and Kentucky amongst the rest, with the free. I find from official sources, that the property of Ohio is estimated at $421,067,991—that of Kentucky at $272,847,696—excess in favor of Ohio, $148,220,295; and if we deduct $76,000,000, the value of the slaves in Kentucky at $400 per head, it only leaves the entire wealth of the state, $224,220,295. Each citizen of Ohio, upon an average, is worth $276—in Kentucky, exclusive of slaves, $249. Virginia, we have stated, is larger than all New England, and has a more productive soil, and greater natural advantages for agriculture, and all the elements of natural greatness. Yet look at the contrast as presented by the following statistical table:

	Virginia. 1840.	N. England. 1840.
Capital employed in manufactures,	$11,360,861	$86,824,229
Capital employed in foreign commerce,	4,299,500	19,467,793
Capital employed in fisheries,	28,383	14,691,291
Banking capital, -	3,637,400	62,134,850
Agricultural products,	59,085,821	74,749,889

In 1840, the annual agricultural products of the south were estimated at $312,380,151—those of the free states, at $342,007,446. Yet in the south there were 1,984,886 persons engaged in agriculture, and in the north only 1,735,086. The cotton, sugar, rice, and tobacco, the chief products of southern labor, exported to foreign countries, as shown by the census of 1840, were valued at $74,866,310—the single state of New York exported agricultural products to the value of $108,275,281. Here we see that the agricultural exports from a single free state in 1840, exceeds the exports from all the south, in value, $23,408,971. The south, in 1840, manufactured articles to the value of $42,178,184—the free states to the value of $197,658,040: The joint earnings of all the slave states was $403,429,718—of the free, $658,705,108. The annual earnings of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, amount to $189,321,719—those of the state of

New York to 193,806,433—exceeding more than four millions the income of six great southern states. The annual earnings of Massachusetts alone, are more than $9,000,000 greater than the united earnings of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida. The earnings of South Carolina, with a population of 549,389, is about equal to that of the county of Essex in Massachusetts, with a population of less than 95,000. (See Parker's letter to the people of the United States.)

I will again read extracts taken from a late address to the people of Kentucky: "Ohio possesses double the agricultural wealth of Kentucky. Her Indian corn and wheat alone, are worth the whole of the products of Kentucky. The aggregate value of all the products of Kentucky, exceed by one-fourth only the value of the simple article of hay in Ohio." Sir, I need make no comments upon the facts just exhibited. We all can but see that slavery has retarded our wealth as much as our population.

I propose now, to examine the influence slavery has had upon popular intelligence in Kentucky. And, sir, dark as the pictures just drawn may appear—as humiliating to our pride as they should be—they are bright, dazzling, glorious pictures for us, when contrasted with the one that facts, ah! sir, stubborn facts, compel me to present now.

The census of 1840 shows that in the fifteen slave states and territories, there were at the various primary schools, 201,085 scholars; at the primary schools in the free states, there were 1,626,028 scholars. The single state of Ohio had at her primary schools 218,609 scholars; 17,524 more than all of the slave states! South Carolina had 12,520—New York, 502,367. In the high schools, there were in the south 35,935 scholars at the public charge—in the north, 432,388 similar scholars. Virginia, the largest of all the slave states, had 9,791 such scholars—Rhode Island, the smallest of the free states, 10,749. Massachusetts alone had 158,351—more than four times as many as all the slave states. In the slave states, at academies and grammar schools, there were 52,906 scholars—in the free states, 97,174. In the slave states, there are 1,368,325 free white children, between the ages of five and twenty—in the free states, 3,536,686 such children. In the slave states, at schools and colleges, there are 301,172 pupils—in the free states, 2,213,444 pupils at schools and colleges. Thus in the slave states, out of twenty-five free white children, between five and twenty, there are not five at school or college; while out of twenty-five such children in the free states, there are more than fifteen at school or college. In the slave states, of the free white population over twenty-one years of age, there is almost one-tenth that are unable to read and write; while in the free states there is not quite one in one hundred and fifty-six who is deficient to that degree. (See Parker's address.)

I desire, sir, that Kentuckians may consider and ponder well the facts connected with the institution of slavery. And if the voice of Kentucky is destined to be forever on the side of an institution that affects her population, her wealth, and her intelligence, as I have shown slavery does, why, sir, all I have to say is, "her will, not mine; be done."

But, Mr. President, we have been repeatedly told during this discussion that slavery is an unmixed blessing—an institution of Heaven—and its endless perpetuity is ardently prayed for by the delegates from Simpson, Jefferson, Henry, &c. I must be pardoned for entering my solemn protest against these new, and as I must be permitted to say, with all imaginable deference, abominable doctrines. I boldly proclaimed whilst I was canvassing before the people for the seat I now occupy, that I regarded slavery in and of itself an evil, but that I was for taking no violent steps to rid the country of it; that time must solve the great question, how is the country to be rid of slavery? And I now propose to do nothing sir, but to call public attention to this matter. I intend to give no vote, or do any act to the injury of a slaveholder in Kentucky. But, sir, when I am required to recognize slavery as a divine institution, and to sing its praises, I rebel; and when I am required to go further than our fathers went, to provide for the protection and perpetuation of the institution, I will not do it. And I had thought, sir, until this subject was discussed some weeks ago in this convention, that there was scarcely a man in all Kentucky, who differed with me, provided he were a pro-slavery man. And I would like to know the antiquity and origin of the idea in this country, that slavery is a blessing socially or politically. Such sir, was not the opinion of the fathers of the republic, because their speeches and writings all go to show that they regarded it in a different light, and looked forward to the day when it should be annihilated. Need I adduce evidence of this? If so it is at hand, and I will read from the speeches and writings of the most prominent of our distinguished ancestry, as a set off against the speeches and opinions of those who have expressed different views during this discussion. And I hope, that when I say that the moral perception of a Wesley, a Henry, a Mason, a Pinckney, and a Jefferson, as well as their political sagacity, were quite equal to, and is still as high authority with me as the opinions of a Talbot, a Clarke, a Bullitt, and a Nuttall, that the remark will not be considered as a disparagement, notwithstanding the progress we have made in the science of government, religion, &c., since their day. John Wesley in a letter to Wilberforce, dated 24th February, 1791, says: "Be not weary of well doing. Go on in the name of God, and in the power of his might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish away before it." It would seem that Mr. Wesley, one of the ablest theologians the world has ever produced, differed in opinion with our political theologians as to the divinity of this institution, and that he at least did not regard it as flourishing under the approving smiles of God. For he exhorts Wilberforce to go on, and in the name of God and in the power of his might, till slavery should vanish away before it. Says Wilberforce:

"Never was a system so big with wickedness and cruelty. In whatever part of it you direct your view, the eye finds no relief. Slavery is the full measure of pure, unmixed, unsophisticated wickedness; and scorning all competition and comparison, it stands without a rival in the secure, undisputed possession of its detestable pre-eminence."

Says Paley: "Slavery is a dominion and system of laws the most merciless and tyrannical that men ever tolerated."

Says Breckinridge: "Just and equal! What care I, whether my pockets are picked or the proceeds of my labor taken from me? The man who cannot see that involuntary domestic slavery, as it exists among us, is founded upon the principle of taking by force that which is another's, has simply no moral sense—nature and reason, and religion unite in their hostility to this system of folly and crime."

These men did not regard slavery sir, as my friends from Boyle, (Mr. Talbott,) and Jefferson, (Mr. Bullitt) do, as one of God's favorite institutions; but rather sir, as the object of his wrath, and meriting the execrations of man.

President Monroe in a speech in the Virginia convention says:

"We have found that this evil has preyed upon the very vitals of the Union. It has been prejudicial to all the states in which it has existed."

Says William Pinkney in a speech in the Maryland House of Delegates, in 1789:

"Never will our country be productive, never will its agriculture, its commerce or its manufactures, flourish so long as they depend upon reluctant bondmen for their progress. 'Even the earth,' says Montesquieu, 'which teems with profusion under the cultivating hand of the free laborer, shrinks into barrenness from the contaminating sweat of the slave.' This sentiment is not more figuratively beautiful than substantially just."

Mr. Custis in a speech in the Virginia legislature in 1832, says:

"There is a malaria in the atmosphere of slavery. See the wide spreading ruin which the avarice of our ancestral government has produced in the south, as witnessed in a sparse population of freemen, deserted habitations, and fields without culture. Strange to tell, even the wolf, driven back, long since by the approach of man, now returns, after the lapse of an hundred years, to howl over the desolations of slavery."

Says Thomas Jefferson:

"Indeed I tremble for my country, when I reflect that God is just, and that his justice cannot sleep forever. Doubtless a God of justice will awake to their (the slaves') distress, and by diffusing a light and liberality among their oppressors, or at length by his exterminating thunder, manifest his attention to the things of this world, and that they are not left to the guidance of blind fatality." Notes on Virginia.

But say gentlemen, slavery protects the mechanics of the country and the laboring poor generally, because if the slaves were driven away the Irish and Dutch, &c., would overrun the country. Mr. President, I deny that the institution of slavery is of service to the laboring population. I might adduce thousands of arguments going to show that so far from benefiting, it is ruinous to them. Who so competent, however, sir, as the working men and mechanics themselves, to judge of this matter. It is not the interest of the slaveholder to study the interest of the non-slaveholder or laboring man in reference to this matter. Hence sir, I will not receive their evidence as authority; but let those who have studied, suffered by, and who have practically felt the evils resulting therefrom be heard—and I must here be permitted to say, sir, that I would not give the opinions and judgment of one intelligent, reflecting mechanic upon this subject, for the speculations and theories of a thousand men, who are wedded by interest, education, and association to the institution. Read the following resolution embodying the deliberate sentiments of many most worthy and intelligent working men and mechanics of Louisville, and we will then see to what extent the assertions of gentlemen upon this subject are corroborated by those who best understood their interests.

"Resolved, That the institution of slavery is prejudicial to every interest of the state, and is alike injurious to the slaveholder, and non-slaveholder; that it degrades labor, enervates industry, interferes with the occupations of free laboring citizens, separates too widely the poor and the rich, shuts out the laboring classes from the blessings of education, and tends to drive from the state, all who depend upon manual labor for support."

I have shown that the fathers of the republic looked forward to the end of slavery—that our population is retarded by it—that our wealth, as a state in consequence of it, is not half as great as it otherwise would have been—that the intelligence of the country has suffered and languished beneath its influences—and that when it is abolished, religion has suffered no injury, and that the church need not put on the weeds of mourning, provided a Wilberforce, or a Wesley understood her true interests and her true glory; these things all considered, and many others which I would like to present if I had time, I am fully persuaded that it is expedient to make no alterations in reference to the power the general assembly now has over the subject.

I propose now sir, to examine, for a short time, the question of power presented in the resolution of the delegate from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon.) The gentleman denies positively, that we have any power or right to delegate to the legislature upon this subject.

The present constitution declares that "no person shall, for the same offence, be twice put in jeopardy of his life or limb; nor shall any man's property be taken or applied to public use without the consent of his representatives, and without just compensation being previously made to him." See sec. 12 art. 10.

The clause just quoted, it has been contended in the course of this debate, and particularly by the very distinguished delegate from Henderson, is to be considered as a contract between the state and the citizen, and that we, by a fair construction of that clause of the constitution of the United States, which declares that no state shall pass "any ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts," and a just application of the decision of the supreme court, in the case of Fletcher against Peck, are precluded from emancipating slaves ourselves, or delegating the power to the legislature. Now, without stopping to analyze the clause of the federal constitution, or the decision of the court just referred to, for the purpose of ascertaining their applicability to the rights and powers of the state and citizen, let me enquire if a lawyer can be found in Kentucky, who will not at once admit that the first section of the seventh article removes all doubt upon the subject, and wholly demolishes the specious and ingenious argument of the gentleman, for it declares expressly that the legislature has the power.

I submit it to the convention however, sir, if the construction is not a forced one, put by the gentleman upon the constitution of the United States, and the decision referred to under its authority? But grant that the clause just quoted does constitute a contract, as the gentleman contends, how long is that contract to last? How is it to be avoided? Or is it, as the arguments of the gentleman indicate, to last forever, notwithstanding, by the express stipulations contained in it, there is a certain method pointed out by which said contract is to be altered, changed, and made to suit the wants, interests, and feelings of both the high contracting parties? Now that the contract entered into by the mutual consent of the parties, has also by like mutual consent been submitted to this convention for "alteration, amendment and revision," and all power that the original parties thereto possessed delegated to it, the discovery is made that the present constitution is still a sacred compact, and binding upon both parties thereto irrevocably for some purposes at least. Now, if it be restrictive in some things, why not in every thing? Where is this doctrine to stop? Why is it, that the right to hold and enjoy slaves is more peculiarly and specifically protected than any other of the many political and civil rights of the citizen? If this right is to be regarded as a contract and protected by the constitution of the United States and the decision of the supreme court, I ask the gentleman if every single right guarantied by the present constitution on the part of the state to the citizen, is not also a contract according to the same rule of construction, and equally secure under the protecting ægis of the federal constitution? Most assuredly no distinction can be drawn. As an illustration. Suppose the convention should declare, in the amended constitution that no citizen shall hereafter be eligible to a seat in the lower branch of the state legislature until he arrives at the age of thirty years.

Now, I ask if such an alteration of the present constitution would not be equally violative of the rights of the citizen, and equally an infringement of the constitution of the United States? The contract between the state and all of her free white citizens, is that at an earlier age than thirty they shall be eligible to a seat in one branch of the state legislature. This is a very precious right. By its guaranty to the citizens of other states, under few other restrictions, we have lured them to Kentucky. We have assured them by an express provision of our organic law, that they shall be entitled to the political privilege just indicated; and I now put it to the convention, if we were to extend the time or residence, or require greater maturity of years, if we would not evidently infringe upon the contract entered into with him, and incur the high crime of a violation of the constitution of the United States?

I had thought, sir, with the very distinguished delegate from Nelson, until the meeting of the convention, that when we assembled here, we would be restricted by nothing save the constitution, treaties, and laws of the national government—that we were sovereign, except so far as express limitations and restrictions were placed upon our action, in terms, and not by implication. And I know of no provision of the constitution of the United States, or of any treaty or law, that denies the power, as the gentleman from Henderson supposed. I admit that the legislature has not the power to emancipate slaves, independent of the express right given in the constitution of Kentucky, and I agree that if it were not for the power delegated in express terms, that its exercise would not only be an outrage upon the tenure of property, but might be with justice regarded as an infringement of the federal constitution—and for the plainest of all reasons, the legislature only enjoys delegated powers. It can only do what we authorize it to do. We are sovereign. We are exercising unrestricted and unlimited powers, except so far as I have stated the exceptions. And can not gentlemen see this difference between the rights and powers of this convention, and the rights and powers of the legislature? The legislature are limited and circumscribed by the constitution of Kentucky—they have to support it—they take an oath to do so. The contract between the citizens and the state is to be respected and strictly regarded by the legislature. But I ask gentlemen to tell me what efficacy there is in the constitution of Kentucky to resist this convention? Absolutely there is no contract now existing between the state and the citizens to be protected by the constitution of the United States. If so I cannot see it. I know not where to find it. I know that if the constitution of Kentucky is the depository of that contract, that both of the parties thereto have rescinded, or given us the full power to rescind it. If these great rights contended for, are derived from the constitution of Kentucky, and gentlemen say that they are, it occurs to me sir, that when the constitution giving the rights is itself destroyed in the manner designated by those who formed it, that those rights that sprang from and were supported by it, and by it alone, must have passed away also. It seems to me to be more plain and explicit, that those who regard the right to hold slaves as a contract embraced in the constitution of Kentucky, and who admit that we have the same unrestricted powers that the convention of 1799 had, are also bound to admit that the contract no longer exists, because we have now surrendered into our hands all the rights of the government and the people of Kentucky that they possessed before and at the time of the creation of the constitution, and the contract contended for. The government has surrendered into our hands all the power delegated to it by the constitution, and the people have clothed us with their own unlimited sovereignty, reserving nothing which they themselves possessed. Where then, I ask, is this great contract about which so much has been said, and for the preservation of which the constitution of the United States is so zealously invoked? I call upon gentlemen to show it to me—and what do I see? A clause of a constitution that no longer has vitality in it, and over which we have as ample control, collectively, representing the sovereignty of the people of Kentucky, as we as individuals have over our persons in a state of nature. Talk not to me any longer about the preservation of that that has no existence—that has been, by the only competent power, destroyed and thrown into its original elements, and which may be moulded and fashioned as we think proper.

The convention, Mr. President, will perceive that I have discussed together, to some extent, the questions of expediency and power. I will amplify no further, leaving the convention, the country, and posterity, to judge of the correctness of the arguments and opinions advanced.

I come now, Mr. President, to examine, for a single moment, the proposition, that the slaveholder has the same perfect right to the offspring of slaves yet unborn, that he has to those now in being. There are perfect and inchoate rights recognized by law, and many material and important differences now exist, and still more may be made to exist between them, without any violation of the individual rights of the citizen. If I have a moneyed capital, for instance, I have a perfect right thereto, and no convention or legislature, without manifest injustice, can deprive me of it. I now have the legal right to loan my money and collect six per cent. interest by law, for its use. I ask you, now, if there is no difference between the right to the capital, and the interest accruing therefrom? The capital I have—independent of law—a natural right to; the interest is given me by operation of law, as well as the right to coerce principal and interest, when payment is refused. The power to abolish the remedy for the collection of debts exists in, and may be exercised by, the sovereign power of all governments at will. The regulation of interest is a subject over which the sovereign power has undoubted control. Public policy must, as a matter of course, determine the rate of interest in all governments. Who will deny the power of this convention to authorize the legislature to increase or diminish the rate of interest, or to abolish it altogether? If you admit this power, it occurs to me that you also admit the power of this convention to provide that all slaves born after a certain age, shall be free. The same argument applies to the future profits resulting from the increase of slaves, that is applicable to the regulation of interest. Public policy must determine both subjects; and the power to determine the one is as plenary as the other. If you lessen the rate of interest you injure the money lender—if you take away the increase of a man's slaves you injure the slaveholder. I do not desire this convention to do either; and I would not, for all the gold in California, vote to insert a clause providing for immediate or gradual emancipation in the constitution; because I have promised not to do so, and because the voice of Kentucky is against it. But there is a great difference between the exercise of, and the possession of a power. I assert that we have full power to emancipate all slaves hereafter born in Kentucky, or to delegate the power to do so elsewhere. But I will vote to do neither. I hold, also, that we have full power to emancipate all slaves now in Kentucky, by paying their owners for them, and to emancipate all born hereafter without paying for them. But, sir, I will not vote to do either. The reasons have been incidentally given.

I come now, sir, to notice for a short time the law of 1833, which prohibits the importation of slaves into Kentucky from sister states and from foreign governments under certain restrictions and penalties, and the propriety of inserting that law, or the spirit of its provisions in the amended constitution. The objects of the law of 1833 were manifold—first, to prevent the increase of slaves, and particularly bad slaves, in Kentucky. Secondly, to stop the trade in slave property that was going on between our citizens and the south. Thirdly, to receive money in exchange for our surplus products instead of negroes. The foregoing were among the chief reasons offered in support of the law in question at the time of its enactment, and in support of it whenever an attempt was made to repeal it. They are arguments which address themselves to the mind and conscience of every man, and seem to have met with the approbation and approval of the people of Kentucky for sixteen consecutive years—long enough to have impressed everybody with the conviction that the law in question reflected the settled policy and wishes of our people in reference thereto. And I now suppose that few men can be found who are not in favor of fostering the vital principles of the act of 1833, because all of us have seen the good effects resulting from it—all of us fully concur in the wisdom and philanthropy of its provisions. These matters, however sir, have been so repeatedly the subjects of discussion in Kentucky, that I do not feel disposed to amplify them at this time; especially as I have it in my power to refer all who desire information in reference thereto to the able, eloquent, and demonstrative speech of honorable George Robertson, delivered in the house of representatives last winter; and he who doubts the policy of the law of 1833, after reading that great effort, (I feel inclined to say the greatest that great mind ever produced,) could, if he were disposed, doubt whether two and two make four. I would like very much to see the provisions of this law engrafted in the constitution we are about to make, and thereby prevent the continual agitation thereof in the legislature; and if I were to consult my feelings or my judgment or the wishes of those who sent me here, I should unhesitatingly vote to give them a place in our organic law. But, Mr. President, I desire to do nothing that will have a tendency to defeat our labors and cause the people to reject the amendments we are about making to our constitution; nor will I give any vote which will tend to such a result. And from all the lights before me, I am fully satisfied that if we were to prohibit the importation of slaves into Kentucky for domestic use, or in exchange for our exportations to the south, that the people would refuse to ratify the constitution. Not that I believe that a majority of the people of Kentucky are opposed thereto, but because many are. Yes, sir, such a provision would cause thousands to vote for the rejection of the amended constitution—enough, perhaps, when combined with the standing army of uncompromising opponents of the amended constitution, to render its defeat absolutely certain. Such being my deliberate judgment, and knowing that if the people of Kentucky desire to continue the policy of the law of 1833, they can do so by legislative enactment, I shall vote against its incorporation into the constitution.

In the course of the discussion of the institution of slavery some weeks ago, gentlemen took occasion to refer to slavery in the District of Columbia and to the Wilmot proviso.

I desire upon this occasion to remark, sir, that I do not believe congress has any power over slavery in the District of Columbia, and that its abolition in the district would be a violation of the rights of the citizens of the district, as secured by the deeds of cession from Maryland and Virginia. Nor do I believe that congress has any moral right to apply the Wilmot proviso to the territories of the United States. Slavery as it exists in the states and territories, is a subject over which the states and territories alone where it exists have any right to exercise control. I deny that congress has any moral or legal right to dictate to the states or territories of the Union what their policy shall be in reference to this great subject. The states and territories alone have the power to determine whether they will permit slavery to exist within them or not. But sir, I do not intend to discuss these great questions, and I have only referred to them for the purpose of expressing the foregoing opinions.

I wish now to notice a few of the arguments and observations of gentlemen upon the abstract question of slavery as an institution, and I will close.

The following remarkable language occurs in the speech of the delegate from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) of the 10th of October, viz:

"We all know that the institution of slavery is the best in the world to keep society from becoming fixed and settled. Look at those who were originally overseers in Virginia and Kentucky at their first settlement. They have become the proprietors of the very estates upon which they were first employed as overseers. And their descendants now fill the halls of legislation and the courts of judicature of the country, whilst the descendants of the original proprietors have descended to a different level in the scale of society."

Mr. President, we read a melancholy lesson truly in the above remarks. What higher evidence of the evils of slavery can mortal man adduce than are presented in the short paragraph quoted. What does it say sir? What is the moral that we are to learn from it? It is sir, that slavery encourages laziness, extravagance and prodigality in our children—that it unfits them for the cares and labors of life—that those who are born to affluence and reared and educated amidst the enervating dissipation of slavery, live to see not only their slaves, but their homes, and the homes of their fathers pass away from them and into the hands of strangers, and themselves cast out upon the world homeless and homeless.

Again: the gentleman remarks in the same speech, "I believe that they who are raised up where the institution of slavery exists, with some exceptions, are uniformly distinguished. Who has ever seen such a constellation of great men as the southern states have produced since we have achieved our liberties. Look at the great men of Virginia, South Carolina, and Kentucky, and where are the men who are worthy to be compared with them in the free states of the north? We have had, it is true, an Adams or two, a Webster and a Wright, but they are few and far between. Sir, there is a nobleness of spirit, a feeling above littleness, a greatness of soul that grows up where the institution of slavery exists, that is scarcely to be found in any other country."

Sir, I am behind no man in a just appreciation of the talents, the learning, and the claims of Kentuckians, to distinction in any and all respects. And I am fully aware that when we look to the intellectual jewels of our country, Kentucky, thank God, can boast the possession of some that shine with peculiar brilliancy, and will sparkle throughout all coming time upon the brightest pages of American history, and will be the pride and boast of every American heart and tongue. Yet, sir, I fear that when the intellectual and literary claims of the south are contrasted with those of the north, that the balance will not preponderate in our favor. I need not sir, institute the comparison—every intelligent Kentuckian knows what the result would be. Admit that our statesmen are equal to those of the north; yet, sir, the south gave not to fame a Story, a Kent, a Greenleaf and an Irvine—names that are imperishably interwoven with the laws and standard literature, not only of America, but the civilized world. This sir, I am sure, is a branch of the subject that we need not desire to see investigated, and consequently I will leave it.

The following beautiful, metaphorical, and eloquent language occurs in the speech of the delegate from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) of the 11th of October: "Did you ever, sir, in midsummer, about night-fall, look upon a clover field and see the fire-flies rising out of it? Just so when the people had determined to have constitutional reform, were our emancipation friends seen, springing up and giving light and hope to each other."

Sir, to whom did the gentleman refer? Was it to Clay, to Underwood, to Breckinridge? the most gifted spirits that Kentucky boasts! Clay, Underwood, and Breckinridge, bear fire-fly lights! Rather say sir, that they burst forth like brilliant suns upon the world, and that the light they then shed upon the blind and benighted eyes of Kentucky will not be lost to humanity, but that after they shall be gathered to their fathers, the words of wisdom they uttered at the time referred to, shall be seized upon by a grateful and admiring country, and in their names the shackles of slavery shall fall, and universal freedom be proclaimed.

I was forcibly struck with a remark that fell from the President of this convention, in a speech upon this floor some weeks ago. He said: "there is a time when slavery will cease. The Indian has receded before the Saxon and still recedes."

Gentlemen, cast your eyes forward to the time when the prediction is to be verified. I take it for granted that if another generation passes by without the preliminary steps being taken to emancipate and send off our slaves, that there will be only one practical mode left by which they are to be relieved from their bonds. Sir, slavery must constantly increase in Kentucky—it is inevitable unless the two hundred thousand slaves now in the state are used to rear supplies for southern markets; and I will not, I cannot believe, that those who are to shape the destiny of my country will devote her energies to any such unhallowed purpose. A few days since, I heard a distinguished member of this body remark that twenty years ago, twenty eight happy and prosperous families were living upon a tract of land in the county of Clarke, that is now owned by a single man; and that he is the only voter now living upon the entire tract. As a man's slaves increase he must extend his possessions for their employment; and thus it is that slaves drive from your country the poorer white population, and this process will continue to go on and to grow worse and worse, until whole counties in the end, which now support hundreds of freemen, will be owned by a few nabobs and occupied by their innumerable slaves; and sir, when such comes to be the case, the cessation, the end of the institution will indeed be at hand. I shall never live to see that day, thank God, Mr. President, but your children and my children's blood may enrich the soil we are consecrating to slavery in its defence. Our graves, the graves of our fathers, when our posterity shall have died in their defence, may be trodden over and dishonored by the descendants of the degraded race we now hold in bondage, and this glorious land of ours, (old Kentucky,) become the home and heritage of the slave. May Heaven avert such a catastrophe and incline the hearts of those who are to come after us to wisdom's ways.

Mr. PRESTON. I will not vote for the two resolutions now before the house, for the simple reason, that I believe the true principles are already contained in the sections to the bill of rights, which have been added by the gentleman from Henderson, (Mr. Dixon,) and the gentleman from Bourbon, (Mr. Davis.)

I will not undertake to answer the arguments of the gentleman who has preceded me, as they relate rather to the wisdom of retaining the slave property of Kentucky than to the subject of the propriety or impropriety of inserting these clauses in the constitution. He has drawn a comparison invidious to the state of my birth, invidious to her mother, Virginia, invidious to all the slave states, and has chosen to compare the greater wealth of Massachusetts and Connecticut, their greater population, and all the greater advantages which he alleges they possess, when placed in the balance with our state of Kentucky. I feel in no spirit to enter into controversy with him on this subject; but I will ask him to turn to the twenty thousand paupers of Massachusetts, a state smaller than Kentucky; to the one hundred and thirty or forty thousand paupers of the state of New York, where every individual is compelled to contribute to the maintenance of this large amount of poverty, the support of which costs half a million a year. He has drawn an alluring picture of the state of their public education, but he has not thought fit to show us the reverse of the medal. He has not shown us the squalid misery and degradation, and the absolute subjugation of labor to the iron tyranny of capital. Now, sir, it has been my good or bad fortune, (I don't know which to call it,) to have spent five years in these states. I obtained my education in these states, which have elicited the gentleman's admiration to so great an extent; and I never would consent to exchange the condition of the people I now see around me for that of the people whose condition has been dwelt upon in such glowing colors by the gentleman from Knox. I do not say that the wise and great men of the North have not done all that they could do to relieve and alleviate distress and prevent misery and poverty from springing up around them; but I do assert that it would be the most difficult thing in the world to go into one of the counties of Kentucky, and find anything to be compared for a moment with that degradation and misery which meet you at every step in the North. If you see a house you think it is a palace; you ask what it is, and they tell you it is a "poor house." Does the inmate fare like the inmate of a palace? Does he enjoy the comfort and the luxury which the exterior of the building would seem to indicate might be the happy lot of him who dwells within? No, sir. The town officer is there; and he obtains the greatest reputation as an economist who solves the grand problem upon how little the soul and body of man can be kept together. The greatest proof of ability in a town officer is when he is able by his schedule to show at how little cost the pauper can be kept; and thus he goes on till the miserable pauper stands trembling on the brink of starvation, under the legalized system which is pursued in these states towards their poor.

Sir, there was one Miss Dix, an Englishwoman, who, some three or four years ago, came into the state of Kentucky to inquire into the statistics of poverty and jails; and I recollect an anecdote that occurred which may serve to illustrate the point under discussion. She went to the town of Danville; and, among other enquiries of the landlord of the hotel, she asked where was the poor house of the county. He replied that there was none. She asked if there were no poor in the county. The landlord replied that there were a great many very poor persons. She enquired what was their condition; and was informed by the landlord that the poorest of them lived upon seventy or eighty acres of land, not worth more than from three to four dollars an acre; that they raised their two or three hundred bushels of corn, and as many bushels of potatoes; that they kept their horses and their cows, and if they did live in a log house, they generally contrived to keep out the cold and have enough to eat and wear. Said she, "are these your poor?" "Yes," replied the landlord; "and as for a poor house, we hav'n't such a thing in the county." That degree of poverty, sir, is about the greatest we ever see in Kentucky. You will find that the "poor man" has his horse to ride to court on; you will find that his corn crib is filled with corn; and you will find that we are not reduced to that miserable system which prevails in the Northern states, of calculating on how little the miserable people can live. Let the gentleman then, examine closely that part of the machinery of the state of Massachusetts, before he makes this invidious distinction between it and his native state. In looking at the comfort of the people I feel proud; I feel proud in remembering her patriotism, for every battle field in the country can count among the slain the patriotic sons of Kentucky. I feel a degree of pride, sir, in looking at our chief magistrate who now fills the presidential chair of this union—a son of Kentucky. And notwithstanding all our alledged want of intelligence, our delegations to congress have been the boast and the pride of this union. I repeat it, sir, that I feel a degree of pride in looking at that gallant old soldier who now fills the highest office in this republic; and that pride swelled still more when I remembered that, despite all the boasted education and intelligence of the men of the North, they have had to look to the South and the West for men to fill the highest and most responsible offices of state—to lead their armies, protect the country, and administer the government.

Sir, there are then, two sides to this picture; and when we come to examine them both, and place them side by side, I must confess that it does not appear to me that we are placed in that inferior position which the gentleman seems to suppose. I for one am contented with the condition of Kentucky. I for one am content to let a comparison be instituted between Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Kentucky; and what man in this hall, what citizen of Kentucky, if he were put upon a northern railroad, or canal boat, if a promiscuous company of gentlemen were together, and the question were asked of each, "to what state do you belong,"—what man among you, what citizen of this state would hesitate to announce "I am a Kentuckian." What man among you would deny his state to claim a birthright from Indiana or Illinois? What man among you who would not rather hail from this, his native state, as the more favoured spot of the Union.

Sir, we are not in a condition so unfortunate; the prosperity of a free and happy people around us falsifies the statement; the gallantry of the people among whom we live, is the best test of their education. Cyrus boasted that he taught his people three things—to speak the truth, to ride, and to draw the bow; Kentucky may equally boast that she teaches her sons to speak the truth, to shoot the rifle, and to stand by the state in peril. We may not be so well educated in regard to this or that particular Sunday school tract; but if ever the Union is in danger, my word for it, if the shock of arms should come, and Kentucky should be called upon for troops, you will not see our young men shrinking and hiding themselves, to avoid the contest; no sir, you will see them in front of this hall, contending for the honor of being first on the list to answer their country's call. If five thousand are wanted you may rely upon it that fifteen or twenty thousand will be offered, as was the case in the recent war.

But sir, I will not pursue this subject; I say this much only in defence of our actual condition, and in order to destroy the invidious comparison my friend has drawn between the north and the south.

Mr. WOODSON. I would ask the gentleman, if he denies the truth of the statistical statements I have made.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not deny the accuracy of your statistics, but I deny the deductions you have drawn. When the first resolution of the gentleman from Henderson, was presented, I happened to make a statement which I wish to refer to again. I observed, about the first of October, when it was presented, that I did not believe that full and plenary power was possessed by this convention; that I did not believe we came here invested with all the power of a sovereignty; that if we came here one hundred and fifty in number, instead of one hundred, we would not come as a legally constituted convention. This is what I said:

"I do not believe myself that we are in a state of revolution. I do not believe myself that full and plenary power is possessed by this house. I do not believe that we came here with all the powers of sovereignty. I do not believe, but if this house consisted of one hundred and fifty delegates instead of one hundred, we could come here as a legally constituted convention. I believe we were called here in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, which provides for its amendment, which stipulates that it should be done in a certain manner, and that when we do come together for that purpose, we are not in a state of revolution, not at liberty to carry power to the extreme limit which the gentleman from Nelson seems to think; but that we do come here for the purpose of carrying out the views of the people, under the implied obligation which is set forth in the resolution of the gentleman from Henderson."

But the gentleman from Nelson took this ground—that this convention was supreme, uncontrollable and uncontrolled, except by the constitution of the United States. That proposition I differed from at the time, and I differ from it yet; and I think I can show that I am right, if not I am willing to be convinced. The gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) took issue upon that proposition, at that time, thus:

"We come here to make our government just as we please—and how shall we do it. We can adopt the present constitution as it now stands; we can alter and change it as we please, or make a new one out and out. I do not care if we are in a state of revolution, still we retain that power, and I shall not be driven under the bed like a cross child by this raw head and bloody bones outcry."

The idea I then had was this: that there are two sorts of conventions, one a constitutional convention, such as I hold we are, the other a revolutionary convention such as I hold that of France was. I believe that if we were to order the seizure of any man's private property, and the public sentiment of a majority were to acquiesce in such a seizure, I believe that single act, if carried out, would put us in exactly the same situation as when, in the great revolution in France, every man's property was seized, and in a moment of infatuation, liberty was proclaimed to all the West India negroes in the French colonies; that that would make us a revolutionary convention; that if we were to order our sergeant-at-arms to seize upon the property of any citizen as a lawful prize; if we were to order any physical force under our control to take possession of a single man's property, even though it was done by the unanimous order of this convention; I believe that that would be a revolutionary act, that we should then transcend our power, and that every citizen in this state would be justified in resisting even to the death. I said so before, and I say so now. I recognise, then, two sorts of conventions—a constitutional convention, and a revolutionary convention. God forbid that we should become the last.

Sir, I maintain that when, under the inflammatory appeals of Brissot, every slave in the West Indies was declared free—I maintain that that act constituted revolution; and I say now, that if we were here as an emancipation body, instead of a constitutional body under the law, if we were to confiscate that property, and declare that we could destroy it by our arbitrary act, I do declare that such an act would throw Kentucky into a state of revolution; and though eighty thousand of the citizens of Kentucky were to declare in favor of such an act, and a minority of seventy thousand were against it, that minority would have a perfect right to take up arms, to do battle for the principle. What, sir, is it asserted here that this convention has absolute control over the lives, liberty, and property of the people of Kentucky! It cannot be that any one can put forth a proposition so monstrous with any degree of seriousness. Put the case in another point of view. Here is a convention composed of a hundred members: say you are fifty-two democrats and forty-eight whigs. Suppose the majority order that every member should take a test oath in support of the principles of democracy, (and the thing is not unprecedented, for we have heard of test oaths even in late times in England,) would not such a resolution be a restraint upon our liberty? Would we not have the right of resistance? Would it not be a restraint upon one of those fundamental principles upon which our liberty rests? In the resolutions of the gentlemen from Henderson and Bourbon, we assert the great principle of the security of property, another of those fundamental principles on which the tripod of liberty is erected. It is one of the chief ends for which civilized government was established. Infringe it and the social contract is violated. The right of property is based in the exertions of labor and industry, and is antecedent to written constitutions. Robinson Crusoe, on his island, was entitled, and had property in his fields, his flocks, and his harvests, which no subsequent community could, in the establishment of government, rightfully rob him of, nor plunder, without giving him the right of resistance.

Sir, I am not unsupported in these views. I have a book here, and good authority to sustain me. Here is an author who could not have been influenced by the institution of slavery. I speak of Vattel. Let us see what he says of the right to change constitutions. He says:

"In virtue of the same principles, it is certain that if the nation is uneasy under its constitution, it has a right to change it.

"There can be no difficulty in the case, if the whole nation be unanimously inclined to make this change. But it is asked, what is to be done if the people are divided? In the ordinary management of the state, the opinion of the majority must pass without dispute for that of the whole nation, otherwise it would be almost impossible for the society ever to take any resolution. It appears then, by parity of reasoning, that a nation may change the constitution of the state by a majority of votes; and whenever there is nothing in this change that can be considered as contrary to the act of civil association, or to the intention of those united under it, the whole are bound to conform to the resolution of the majority. But if the question be, to quit a form of government, to which alone it appeared that the people were willing to submit on their entering into the bonds of society,—if the greater part of a free people, after the example of the Jews in the time of Samuel, are weary of liberty, and resolve to submit to the authority of a monarch,—those citizens who are more jealous of that privilege, so invaluable to those who have tested it, though obliged to suffer the majority to do as they please, are under no obligation at all to submit to the new government; they may quit a society which seems to have dissolved itself in order to unite again under another form; they have a right to retire elsewhere, to sell their lands, and take with them all their effects."

* * * * *

"By the fundamental laws of England, the two houses of parliament, in concert with the king, exercise the legislative power; but if the two houses should resolve to suppress themselves, and to invest the king with full and absolute authority, certainly the nation would not suffer it. And who would dare to assert that they would not have a right to oppose it? But if the parliament entered into a debate on making so considerable a change, and the whole nation was voluntarily silent upon it, this would be considered as an approbation of the act of its representatives.

"But in treating here of the change of the constitution, we treat only of the right: the question of expediency belongs to politics."

This, sir, is in regard to the word introduced by my friend from Henderson, that we have no right, &c. Vattel's remarks are not in regard to the expediency but in regard to the right of the thing. Now, sir, under the authority there read, the right of resistance is warranted, if we, uncurbed by the constitution of the United States, were to erect ourselves into a monarchy. I declare, that if the whole people of the United States were to go for a change in the constitution of the federal government and declare for a monarchy, the right of resistance would belong to the minority. When the whole fundamental principles of the act of association is assailed, I say that the constitution does not bind us. Adopt a different principle, and you wrong yourselves in all time to come. The free states are growing. Suppose they grow large enough to change the constitution in the prescribed method, and then some northern senator gets up and says, "we are uncurbed by the world—we are sovereign—and we do declare that from this hour henceforth slavery shall not exist in the United States;" in other words, should abolish slavery by an act perfectly constitutional in the manner in which it is done, but destructive of the objects for which we entered the confederacy. Suppose the requisite number of three fourths of the states have assented to the change, have the remaining fourth any right of resistance? I say we have, for by that act they have stricken down the fundamental right which society was made to guard; and, amend it as they may, to Kentucky and every other slave state remains the right of resistance. These are my reasons for having gone for the two clauses proposed by the gentleman from Henderson and the gentleman from Bourbon. I tell gentlemen again that this whole book (Vattel,) is nothing but a series of principles, higher than written constitutions and above them, and an evidence that all civilized nations acknowledge and obey them. I say that the great principle of the right to life, liberty, and property, cannot be interfered with. I assert it to be true, that we have no more right to interfere with slave property than we have to interfere with any other kind of property in Kentucky. Grant this, sir, and you carry confidence to every slave owner in Kentucky. Grant that the will of the majority has a right to take away your slave, and you grant that it has a right to take away your land; grant this, and you grant that it has a right to imprison you without offence—nay, even to deprive you of liberty and life without a cause. I deny that they have any right unless it be by an act of tyranny. Let them fix it by law. They have a right to make laws; and if a man with his eyes open incurs the penalty he must bear the penalty. But no right exists to make an ex post facto law; no right exists in the United States to interfere with the principle acted upon by every civilized community. I therefore firmly believe that this convention is not an unlimited, uncontrolled sovereign power. How far is it curbed? I say it is curbed by the constitution of the United States and by a code of laws still higher—the custom of civilized states in establishing governments. You ask me where that custom is; I tell you these commentaries and the practice of the world are the evidences of it. If a man, for instance, should go to Russia on the faith of these established rules and law, and his property be seized and he be sent to Siberia by the Emperor, that would be a breach of customs existing between nations and would be a just cause of war. If some subject of the United States has had his property confiscated without cause and is sent to Siberia, will our government not demand redress? And how will it demand it? By the recognized customs and established laws of the civilized world.

Now, sir, these are the reasons why I believe that the doctrines asserted in these two resolutions are true—that the arbitrary absolute right to take life and property exists no where in a republic—not even in the largest majority. I also believe in the corollary deduced from the proposition of the gentleman from Bourbon—that slave property stands upon the same basis as all other property in this commonwealth, and that to invade it, by seizing it, is unjust and contrary to the fundamental purposes for which society was constituted. I, however, do not deem it necessary to go further. So far as I have gone, I am willing to abide. I want to say to those who entertain abolition views, who assert that the people of this state have no right to hold this species of property—I want to say to them that we have asserted in the two features we have put upon the constitution, that the “absolute and arbitrary right” does not exist; and that slave property is upon precisely the same footing as all other property. If you assert that this absolute arbitrary power does exist, you assert the right to seize the property of every citizen, and that slave property, and its increase, are not upon the same footing.

These are the reasons which induced me to give my vote—a vote I will stand by, both here and before the people of this state, and anywhere, where law is recognized and justice pursued. I believe that I am right; but if I were convinced, this moment, that I am wrong, no man would more willingly retire from his position than I would do. I challenge a reply; I ask if it is not in conformity with the principles established by the act of association? I say again, sir, that if I am wrong, no man will more readily, more cheerfully, retrace his steps than I; but until I am convinced, I must retain and advocate the sentiments to which I have given utterance this day.

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Simpson; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of the gentleman from Jessamine.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 2, nays 75.

YEAS—Jas. W. Irwin, Elijah F. Nuttall—2.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Jas. Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thos. J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Wm. Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thos. Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—75.

So the section was rejected.

Mr. GHOLSON moved the following, as an additional section:

“At the first session after the adoption of this constitution, the legislature shall appoint not less than three, nor more than five persons, learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to re-wise and arrange the statute laws of this commonwealth, both civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any one subject, all of which shall be in plain english. Also, three other persons, learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to prepare a code of practice for the courts, both civil and criminal, in this commonwealth, by abridging and simplifying the rules of practice and laws in relation thereto; all of whom shall act at as early a day as practicable, report the result of their labors to the legislature for their adoption and modification, from time to time."

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question on the reports, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. TRIPLETT called for a division, as the proposed section was susceptible of division.

The yeas and nays were taken on the first branch, as follows:

"At the first session after the adoption of this constitution, the legislature shall appoint not less than three nor more than five persons learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to revise and arrange the statute laws of this commonwealth, both civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any one subject, all of which shall be in plain english."

And were, yeas 68, nays 11, as follows:

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, James M. Nesbitt, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—68.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, Ben. Copelin, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Alexander K. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Wm. R. Thompson, Squire Turner—11.

So that the first branch was adopted.

The question was next taken on the concluding portion of the section, and the result was, yeas 48, nays 31.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Wm. K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Wm. C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thos. J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, James W. Irwin, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, David Meriwether, Thos. P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, Thos. Rockhold, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Howard Todd, John L. Waller, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—48.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, Jas. S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Nathan Gaither, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, William Johnson, Wm. N. Marshall, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, James M. Nesbitt, Hugh Newell, Johnson Price, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—31.

So that the residue of the section was adopted.

The question was next taken on the reports of the committee on miscellaneous provisions, and they were adopted as amended.

EDUCATION.

The convention next proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on education.

The first section was read, as follows:

"SEC. 1. The diffusion of knowledge and learning among men being essential to the preservation of liberty and free government, and the promotion of human virtue and happiness, it shall be the duty of the general assembly to establish, within _____ years next after the adoption of this constitution, and forever thereafter keep in existence, an efficient system of common schools throughout this commonwealth, which shall be equally open to all the white children thereof."

Mr. TAYLOR moved to fill the blank with the word "two."

Mr. PRESTON moved to substitute "five."

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. HARDIN. I did expect to have heard from the chairman of the committee, (Mr. Taylor,) some explanation of this system of common schools, and it may be that he designs to give us one yet. I am as much a friend to the diffusion of education, and perhaps, according to my means, have done as much towards that end, as any man in the state; not only in educating those I feel bound from nature to educate—my own children—but others. Yet I am unwilling to have any provision of this kind adopted in the constitution. We have now packed it very heavy, and I do not believe it will carry this additional load; particularly after what we did a few moments since, in relation to these commissioners to revise the laws.

I desire to offer, for the consideration of the convention, a few facts and figures, in explanation of my course upon this subject. When the United States distributed to Kentucky her proportion of the surplus revenue, amounting to $1,433,757 39, Kentucky pledged herself to herself, that she would set apart $850,000 of that money for common school purposes. The school fund, as a fund, never had an existence, except in that mere pledge of the state to herself; there never was a dollar appropriated to the common school fund, except in this instance of $850,000. That money we borrowed—we call it borrowing—for thirty-five years. The following table explains how this was done:

SCHOOL FUND.

Composed as follows, viz: seven bonds of the commonwealth of Kentucky:

No. 1—At 30 years date, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and dated August 9, 1840,	$24,000 00
No. 20—At 30 years date, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and dated January 16, 1840,	21,500 00
No. 21—At 30 years date, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and dated January 1, 1840,	22,000 00
No. 22—At 35 years date, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and dated January 18, 1840,	500,000 00
No. 23—At 35 years date, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and dated January 22, 1840,	170,000 00
No. 24—At 35 years date, bearing 5 per cent. interest, and dated January 22, 1840,	180,000 00
No. — Bearing 5 per cent. interest from January 1, 1845, and made payable at the pleasure of the legislature, and dated Dec. 20, 1848,	308,268 42

Total bonds, - - - $1,225,768 42

BANK STOCK.

735 shares of stock in the Bank of Kentucky, at $100 each, 73,500 00

Total school fund, - - - $1,299,268 42

Interest due school fund, January 1, 1849, and not included in above, - - - $51,223 29

There was appropriated out of the surplus revenue, which was laid out in bonds Nos. 22, 23, and 24, - - - 850,000 00

Bonds Nos. 1, 20, 21, and —, dated December 20, 1848, are all given for interest, amounting to, - - - 375,768 42

Surplus revenue received from the United States government, - - - $1,433,757 39

The amount of interest upon the whole debt would be something like $72,000 or $73,000. Some at five per cent. and some at six per cent. I give it round numbers, not having stopped to make an accurate calculation. Now, under a vote of the state, we levied last year a tax of two cents on the taxable property in favor of the school fund, which will fall, perhaps, about two-thirds or three-fourths of one cent below the sum required; a tax of one cent would yield about $25,000 or $26,000. The gross amount would be perhaps near $30,000; but the sheriffs' fees for collecting and the delinquencies are to be deducted from it, however. To raise the amount this section proposes would require a tax of near three cents. Now, has there been any vote in the state upon this additional tax? I know of none; and for my own part, I should prefer this matter should be left open to legislation. It is not worth while for the convention to do all the legislation of the country right at once. Let us leave some little for the legislature to do. Are you afraid of the legislature? Surely not. If it is necessary, they will do it—if not, they will do as much as is convenient. According to this report, we are to have an addition to the present tax of one cent, or perhaps more; and as the result of what we have already done, we shall have to put on another cent to pay the state debt. So we may fairly calculate, that taking the two sums together, our taxes will reach twenty cents on the hundred dollars. It is nineteen cents now, but two cents of this were levied last year, for this convention, which is of course only temporary. Now, I know that the people, or a majority of them in the whole state, did vote for the two cents for school purposes; but I do not believe that they fairly understood the question. I saw the sheriffs when they opened the polls, and a man came up, put the question to him, "do you vote for the schools?" He would say "yes," unless he was taken out, and the matter explained to him. In another county, I understood it was in the county of Hardin, the sheriff put the question fairly, and it was the only county in which it was fairly put to the people, as far as I know, and that was, "are you willing to vote for an increase of two cents on your taxes for free schools?" A dead majority there voted against it; and whenever and wherever I saw the question fairly put to each man, a large majority said no. I believe, then, that the large majority of the people did not understand the question. In my county, the sheriff never put the question fair, until some time, I think, about the latter part of the second day. I then went up to him, and told him to put the question fairly to the people, and let them understand it. I voted no, and as soon as I did, I turned around and explained the matter to the people, and divers men said to me, that they regretted they had not understood it before they voted. And I think a majority after that went against it. I know my constituents do not want this in the constitution, and I know they did not understand the question. I am as perfectly certain of it as a man can be of anything, in regard to which he has, to a certain extent, to indulge in conjecture. On the three cents proposed to be levied, we would pay perhaps $1500 or $2000; and yet we have never had a free school, nor will we ever have one in Nelson county; and I will challenge any county in the state, to produce an equal population, with only equal means, that expends more money on colleges and schools of various kinds, than we do in Nelson county. I am bold to say, there is not a county equal to it. We have the catholic college of St. Joseph, the catholic incorporated school of Nazareth, a first-rate Presbyterian school, on which some $10,000 or $15,000 have been expended, and a first-rate Methodist school; we have also another catholic school establishment, carried on by the nuns; and I will add that to the honor of these schools, and it ought to be to the pride of the people of Nelson county, there are not now, I believe, less than fifty free scholars in the schools at Bardstown. Some are in the Catholic, Methodist, Presbyterian, and some are in the primary schools; and I never knew or heard of a poor child being refused admittance in either of these schools. When a little Mexican boy, who was left by a captain, and whom I picked up, poor, naked, and hungry at a tavern, carried him home and clothed him, fell into my possession, my good lady sent word to the president of St. Joseph's college, that if they would teach him for nothing, we would board and clothe him for nothing; he said that he could not exactly do that, but that if the boy would dress, and make himself clean, and come to church before the service commenced on Sunday, then they would teach him. And the boy pays for himself on Sunday, and commences even on Monday morning. And I verily believe in that college, and in the Nazareth school, and the female catholic school at Bardstown, there are not less than fifty free scholars; and I have never heard of a single instance where they refused a free scholar, that could not pay. The same may be said of the Presbyterian and Methodist schools. They never refuse a free scholar. I know we never had a free school; and I for one am unwilling to put it in this constitution, that my constituents shall be taxed for their support.

I have no opinion of free schools any how—none in the world. They are generally under the management of a miserable set of humbug teachers at best. The very first teacher that a child has, when he starts with his A. B. C.—or is learning to spell bla, or baker, or absolute, should be a first rate scholar. He should know exactly how to spell and pronounce the English language; and should understand the art of composition, and the construction of sentences. In the language of Dean Swift, he should have "proper words, and they should be put in proper places." The worst taught child in the world, is he who is taught by a miserable country school master; and I will appeal to the experience of every man here who ever went to those schools, to say how hard it is, to get clear of the habits of incorrect reading and pronouncing, they have contracted, at these country schools. For myself, I will say, it cost me nearly as much labor as the study of the legal profession itself, to get clear of this miserable mode of pronouncing, contracted before I went to a collegiate school—at the age of 17—your would, and could, and should, and all of that. I knew a man in Grayson who was to prove a settlement between two litigants, in a case where a small amount, some thirty, forty, or fifty dollars were involved; he gave in his testimony, and every now and then he would throw in a word of four, five, or six syllables, utterly inappropriate to the sense; like putting a magnificent, guilted saddle, and splendid bridle, with plated bit and curb on a miserable broken down poney, or an ox; there was just about as much propriety in his application of these words; and I saw at once he was a country school master; he had proved the making of the settlement and said I, "when did it take place?" "On the 39th of October," said he. "Oh! the 39th of October you say." "Yes sir." "Are you not mistaken; was it not the 29th?" "No sir. I know the use of words as well as you do, Mr. Hardin, and say it was the 39th." I then asked him how many days there were in October. He said, he did not exactly recollect, but somewhere between forty and fifty. "How many months are there in the year?" "Oh! there you are a little ahead of me, but I know there are over ten and under fifteen." You are a school master? "Yes"—said he, placing his hands on his hips, and looking very self-important—"thank God that is my vocation, and I am making an application for a free school up here, and I want you to help me if you will." "Sir," said I, "I will do it with all my heart, for you come exactly up to my notion of a free school teacher." Delegates will perhaps talk to us of the free schools of New England, Massachusetts, for instance; she has a greater white population than we, but viewing the number of our slave population, we have about as many representatives, as she has. She does not cover a space of more than about seven thousand square miles; and her population is crowded together, so as to render her schools accessible to all; there she had large donations set apart by individuals of great and overwhelming wealth to that object; while we have no such means—we must collect by direct tax, from the labor of the people every year; at an expense and loss incident to passing through the sheriff's hands, of from ten to twelve per cent. I once made out an estimate of what it cost to get direct taxes into the treasury of the United States, and I had a table made out showing that it would take $14 72 on the $100, to cover the delinquencies and defalcations and collecting commissions of the revenue officers. Now and then it will happen in Kentucky, as the same thing happens elsewhere, that the sheriff sends his money up to this place and the man he sends it by unfortunately gets robbed. Nobody knew who did it; but it is so reported, and sooner than break the sheriff up the legislature indemnifies him. This thing may happen again, and I have no objection to its happening again, to save as clever a man as any on this floor from utter ruin.

After this money had been raised at a loss of ten or twelve per cent. how is it to be laid out? I know it can be, to the advantage of towns, and that as you increase the size of the town, there is a greater demand for it. And I do not blame my friend who is taking notes, (Mr. Root,) for what I suppose will be his position. He lives in a town that needs these free schools; the increase of population proportionately of poor children entails a tax upon the towns; unless you can collect it from the people of the country, and oblige them to aid in supporting the poor children that are thrown there, sometimes by the death of parents, who depend upon their daily work for a living; and sometimes in one way and sometimes in another. But as to how the teachers of these free schools in these towns and cities, take care of the morals of the scholars male and female, I would like my friend from Louisville, (Mr. Rudd,) to give his experience. According to what he has told me it would be a most melancholy tale that he would relate. Now, Kentucky embraces over 40,500 square miles, and free schools cannot educate scholars, upon a larger theatre than nine square miles; and if we scatter them all over the state fairly, it would require a number of schools beyond what the means of the state, after paying the expenses of government, could provide. Not less than 4,500 free schools would be required; or if we do not do that, the result will be, that the poor and thinly peopled counties, although taxed for, would not have the benefit of those free schools; that will be the result. I would not send a child to a free school, and would rather pay for his education myself. At this day I send some half dozen children to the Methodist, or Catholic colleges, and would far rather do that, than see the poor children thrown into these miserable free schools; and every body who knows me, knows that besides my own children, I am at all times educating not less than five or six others. Not even the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) is a firmer advocate of the doctrine, that the dissemination of a good education, is necessary to the prosperity and perpetuity of a free government like ours. In the reports that have been made upon this subject, most manifest and palpable injustice has been done the state of Kentucky. We heard to day, and I was glad to hear the young delegate from Louisville, (Mr. Preston,) disdaining a comparison between the talents of the northern states and the state of Kentucky. I do not believe that there is a state in the Union, that possesses so great an amount of talent and information as Kentucky. I recollect very well that some thirty-seven or thirty-eight years ago, that the celebrated James Buchanan, late secretary of state under Mr. Polk, commenced the practice of law, in the town of Elizabeth, and county of Hardin. There I became acquainted with him, and at that time I discovered in him a man of fine education and respectable talents. In the course of a few months he began to look unhappy, and as if he was experiencing some disappointment. His father had given him a large landed estate in Hardin county, about which there was some difficulty; and at last he made me his attorney at law, and attorney in fact, and went back and settled in Pennsylvania, where he was raised. Ten or fifteen years afterwards, I met him in congress, and over and over again have we laughed when he told me this remarkable story. "I went to Kentucky," said he "expecting to be a great man there; and every lawyer I met at the bar there was my equal, and more than half of them my superiors, and I gave it up."

I recollect the first time I ever saw Daniel Webster, and heard him speak. And the conversation we had about it, we have laughed over twenty times since; and we did so the last time I saw him. He went off as cold as an icicle and as pure, as if it hung from the temple of the maiden goddess Diana. His language was pure, his manner was cold; and I remarked to him, "Sir, if you will come and settle in Kentucky, and learn our mode of speaking, you will be an orator equal to any Greece or Rome ever produced." And I heard him say, the last time I ever saw him, "would to God I had taken your advice." We are a happy medium between the north and the south. The southern men go off something like the fellow in the doggerel song, Jim Crow, I believe:

"There was a hoosier come to town,
And swallowed a hoghead of molasses down;
The hoops flew off, the hoghead bust,
And he went off in a thundergust." (Laughter.)

I do think that Kentucky has produced, not only the best and happiest style of oratory of any state in the union, but—I may be mistaken—the best in the world. And I do think there is as general a diffusion of education among the people of Kentucky as in any other state. I recollect a gentleman, and I think his name was Smith, who was taking notes as to the number of those who could not read and write, and he had reported every man on a certain grand jury, as not being able to write his own name. They had been quizzing him, for there was not a man among them who could not read and write. I said to him, "These men are quizzing you, don't put it in your book; for if you do, I shall have to make a speech and tell the people they are quizzing you."

This thing will be manifestly unjust in its operations upon the country, as compared with the towns and cities, on the Ohio border particularly. It is manifestly unjust as to a large portion of the people of Kentucky, in a religious point of view. There is a catholic population of perhaps sixty thousand in Kentucky. We know that they devote more money, time, and energy, to the education of their children, than any other religious denomination in the state; and I say it, because coming from a protestant, I hope the admission will be taken as true. Do you believe that they will ever have the management of our free school system? Do you believe that they will ever send their children to a free school? No, never, never. I talked to the leading catholics, and they protested against it. And yet, some sixty thousand people are to be taxed for free schools, to which they will never send a child. And I ask who are to control these schools? Perhaps the men are to be appointed by the legislature; perhaps to be elected by the people; I do not know which, as I have not seen that portion of the constitution providing for it. If the choice is to be by either, we know that the catholics stand no chance; and yet that denomination comprise one third of the population of the county I represent, and one third of the counties of Marion and Washington. And I venture to say that in the counties of Nelson, Washington, Marion, Spencer, Hardin, Larue, Grayson, Meade, and Breckinridge, there is not less than three thousand voters who are members of the catholic denomination; and yet they are to be taxed for the support of this system without realizing the least possible benefit therefrom. And I will tell you more; you will not get good teachers, and the teaching will be thrown into the hands of men, perhaps, that even we Methodists would not like to stand to. I am not a methodist, but I am a lobby member, and I believe a good deal in that doctrine. I believe good works go a great way towards getting a man into heaven; and that they are the best turnpikes and railroads upon which they can travel to it. There is a doctrine, once elected, always elected; that I do not understand. I do not believe a methodist would ever be elected to the post of superintendent of these schools. And who would be? Why, perhaps only such a class of men as Robert J. Breckinridge, who, instead of attending to the duties for which he was elected, and paid by the people, is going about making speeches, the tendency of which is to incite our negroes to cut our throats, and to burn our houses and villages. That is the tendency of the doctrine preached by the superintendent of education during the last year.

Will the members of this convention, by the adoption of this report, fix its provisions upon the people as long as this constitution shall last? You are to pay the interest on the several sums to which I have referred, amounting to something like 75 or $76,000, for all time to come, if you do that. Then, no matter how unpopular or how objectionable it may be to the people, they cannot get rid of it without calling another convention. I beg of the convention to bear this in mind, and not put it in the constitution. Leave it open to the legislature. In the name of God, are we to leave nothing open to the legislature? We have taken from them their last quarry—the granting of divorces. They were powerful in that. A certain gentleman in a lower county was once pleading a chancery suit, in which he had to demur to a part, and plead to a part, and answer to a part, and in making his speech he got very much tangled up in it. At last, clapping his finger to his nose, he said, may it please your honor, this chancery business is a little over my hooks, but I am terrible upon petitions and summons. So with the legislature—they were terrible on divorces, and we have taken that away from them. They were equally good in changing Betsy to Polly, and Tom to Harry, and Dick to Tommy. They were perfect masters of that subject, and yet we have taken that away from them. And we have also taken away from them the right to say that a stream is navigable, which God Almighty said was not. Leave them a little to do—let them decide what shall hereafter be done as to these free schools. I had far rather that this tax of three cents should be appropriated to the endowment of colleges and academies, for the education of young men capable of teaching, than see it thrown away, as is here proposed. Some of us I know, have taken up the idea that the people are remarkably well educated in the New England states, in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, or as the yankees call it, "Varmount;" but it is a mistake. And to sustain the idea, there come to us from those states numbers of young ladies as teachers. I know what brings them here—ostensibly for teaching—it is really for husbands. And they are generally successful too in getting very respectable husbands. Teaching is the pretext, but a husband is the object. Like your professed gamblers, who come to town dressed in their fine clothes and jewelry, gambling is their pretext, but it is only until they can discover where the strike is to be made, for robbery and plunder is their real object.

For my own part, I am against this system being adopted in the constitution, and so far as I can collect the public sentiment of my county and the counties in the neighborhood, it is against it also. I do not believe we can carry the constitution with it in. Already to-day have we, on the motion of my friend over the way, (Mr. Gholson,) adopted a provision which will entail on the people an expense of $30,000 or $40,000, before we get through with it. If we go on to pack the constitution in this way, do you believe we can carry it before the people? I do not, and I know we cannot. How can I, when I go home, commend this constitution to my people, and to those of the neighboring counties where I am in the habit of speaking, and where a large portion of the people have some faith in me. I cannot do it, if it shall contain a clause taxing them at least three cents on the $100, and from which they cannot get clear of, so long as this constitution may last. When the gentleman first stated this thing—I do not know whether it was my friend from Carter or from Mason—I thought it was all a kind of a joke. I felt a good deal like the gamblers at Vicksburg, when the people were going to hang them up. They thought first that the whole proceedings on that occasion were a joke, merely intended to scare them off. When they were placed into the wagons that were to carry them to execution, they asked, "come boys, hav'n't you carried this joke far enough?" "A little further," was the reply. When the music struck up, and the wagons moved on, and they in them, they asked, "in the name of God where are you going?" "To the top of the hill," was told them. "Oh, hav'n't you carried the joke far enough now?" said they. "A little further," was again the reply. When they got to the top of the hill, and saw the gallows, "Lord Jesus," they exclaimed! "have you not carried this joke far enough?" "A little further," was again the reply; and when they were made to mount the cart, and the rope was around their necks, they were told "the joke had gone just far enough," and cracking the whip, the wagon started ahead and there they swung.

I had thought gentlemen were merely joking in this matter and had carried it far enough, but it seems now as if they, too, were disposed to crack the whip and leave us all swinging together. I am confident that the country will not approve of the system. It may be an advantage to the towns, but it will be a great burden on the country, to which they should not be asked in justice to yield. The towns should remember, as the old saying is among the women, "if, when you go to market you expect to get meat, you must expect to get bones also;" and they must expect to get their share of inconveniences as well as advantages, by living in town. I hope, therefore, we shall not adopt this report.

Mr. GHOLSON. I beg leave to correct my friend. He sometimes charges us with going off half-cocked, but I think he has erred on this occasion. He seems to think that I am in favor of engrafting this section which has been reported by the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) on the constitution of this state.

Mr. HARDIN. I do not mean any thing of the sort.

Mr. GHOLSON. If the gentleman does not mean that, I am at a loss to know what he does mean. He either means that, or he means nothing. I am as much in favor of common school education as any gentleman on this floor, but it is well known that we have no school fund, unless we take it out of the pockets of the people. If we put into this constitution the provision now before us, the money will have to be raised by additional taxation; and to this I cannot consent. But I am willing to leave it to the representatives of the people, to say what shall be done on the subject of education.

It is true,—and it is perhaps to that that the gentleman from Nelson alluded—that I am in favor of a revision of the law. I hope the gentleman from Nelson does not mean to move a reconsideration of the vote adopting the reports of the committee on miscellaneous provisions, for the purpose of getting rid of the section that was adopted on my motion, to provide for a codification of the laws, which is so necessary to the state at large. The laws now in existence are so complex, and scattered over so many books, that the farmers of the country are not able to ascertain what the laws are. This being the case, I trust the gentleman will not meddle with the provision which we have adopted, for if there is anything for which my constituents are willing to be taxed, each his respective pittance, it is to know what are the laws under which they live.

On the subject of education, it cannot surely be that this convention will tax the people against their will. Let us pass it by, and leave it to the people's representatives.

Mr. PROCTOR next obtained the floor, and on his motion the convention took a recess.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. PROCTOR. Whatever has been often said, when repeated, I am aware, falls like snow upon the water, and is soon blotted from the recollection of man; and I know, sir, that in days past and gone, there has been so much said by politicians when candidates before the people for office, in favor of education and common schools, that any thing that could now be said in favor of the system, is apt to be looked upon by the people as a familiar story, only re-told to gull and deceive them. But, Mr. President, as I promised my constituents, when a candidate for a seat in this convention, that if elected, I would use my best exertions to secure the incorporation of a clause in the constitution, which would permanently secure to the people of this commonwealth not only the fund set apart by the general government for the purposes of education to the State of Kentucky, but that also, which the people, in their magnanimity, had voted to tax themselves with at the August election, 1848, for that purpose. I will, therefore, ask the indulgence of the convention, for a short time, while I make a few remarks upon the report of the committee of education, and while I attempt to reply to some of the remarks advanced by my venerable and talented friend from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin.) I know, Mr. President, the difficulties a young man like myself has to contend against, when attempting to reply to arguments emanating from a gentleman of his age and experience. I know, too, sir, the ingenuity of that gentleman's mind when brought to bear against any proposition which he is opposed to seeing engrafted in the constitution which we are engaged in making; and, sir, I have not been a little amused to see the adroitness of that gentleman when any proposition was introduced into this convention which was not in keeping with his own peculiar views. No sooner is a proposition brought forward here, to which the gentleman is opposed, than all the mighty powers of his intellect are brought to bear against it, and that, too, upon the ground that it will encumber and endanger the adoption of the constitution by the people. Now, sir, I do not believe that the adoption of this report in the constitution will at all endanger the adoption of the constitution by the people, for I believe that if there is any one question that has been settled by the people, and any one subject upon which they require prompt action on the part of this convention, it is, that the school fund shall be permanently secured by a constitutional provision; and my venerable friend who has in his remarks to-day so much dreaded our entering into detail in the constitution upon this subject, has, upon former occasions, urged, with all the powers of his great mind, the adoption of propositions in the constitution which, in my humble judgment, were not demanded by public sentiment, and which should have been left to be settled by the legislature of the country. Yet, sir, whenever any gentleman brings forward any proposition which does not meet with his own peculiar views of propriety, that gentleman's voice is ready to raise the alarm, and to warn this convention of the danger of entering into detail in the formation of the constitution that we are engaged in making. For my own part, I am not to be frightened from what I consider to be my duty upon this or any other subject, by any such a course of reasoning.

Sir, the position of my venerable friend upon this subject, reminds me forcibly of an anecdote told by a distinguished friend of mine during last summer, of an old bachelor who was in love with two very beautiful girls, one of which had black and the other blue eyes, and being anxious to conceal from each his partiality for the other. Happening to be in company with them both one day, he first remarked to his black-eyed Mary that his heart was with her; then turning to his blue-eyed Susan, he remarked that his heart was with her. In a short time afterwards the girls walked into the garden to pick roses, and while there they compared notes and found out where the old fellow's heart was. So, returning to the parlor, they walked up to him and demanded to know of him where his heart then was. Glancing an eye of devoted love first to one, and then to the other, he exclaimed—

“The modest black, and the piercing blue,
I cannot decide betwixt yet two.”

Said he, my heart is just like the pendulum of a clock—now tis here, now tis there, and as you are fair and lovely, if you have no objections I will take you both.

Just so it is, Mr. President, with my venerable friend. (Laughter.) One day when some favorite project comes up for the consideration of this convention, which he approves, though it may enter ever so much into detail, we find him battling with all the powers of his great intellect, in support of his proposition. But sir, no sooner is the proposition submitted to this convention to secure to the people of this commonwealth the school fund of the state from the control of the legislature, than the herculean voice of my venerable friend is raised in opposition to that proposition; and because the proposition does not meet the views of that gentleman, he is ready to proclaim at once, that its adoption will be fatal to the adoption of the constitution.

Mr. President, I believe that the adoption of a provision in the constitution, for the permanent security of the school fund of this commonwealth is demanded by the people of the state; and, sir, I have the strongest arguments to predicate this belief upon; for if you will turn to the vote cast in favor of the additional tax of two cents, in 1848, you will find that there were seventy-four thousand six hundred and twenty eight votes cast in favor of this proposition, and but thirty-seven thousand seven hundred and forty-six votes against it; being a majority in favor of the tax, of thirty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty-two votes. By a reference to that vote it will be seen that the county which I have the honor of representing in this convention cast one thousand and fifty-seven votes in favor, and but two hundred and seven against this proposition; and in supporting the report of the committee, I feel, therefore, that I am but obeying the will of my constituents, as expressed by them at the polls. But my venerable friend tells us that the people voted upon this subject ignorantly, and that they did not understand the nature of the votes which they were giving; and that if they had understood the effect of it, they never would have cast their votes in favor of this additional tax. Sir, if that argument of the gentleman is correct, it is one of the strongest reasons, to my mind, why we should adopt in this constitution a clause providing for a system of general education. If, sir, the people of Kentucky were so ignorant as to be gulled and deceived in voting for a proposition that they did not understand, it is high time that the representatives of the people were taking some steps to enlighten their understandings. But, sir, I believe that the people did understand this measure, and that they require and expect of this convention, that we will secure, by a constitutional provision, not only the fund set apart by the general government to the state, for the purposes of education —

Mr. HARDIN. The gentleman is mistaken. Congress did not declare to what purpose this fund was to be applied.

Mr. PROCTOR. My friend informs me that congress did not designate the object of this fund, at the time of setting it apart to the states. Well, sir, it is known to all that it was the general understanding of congress at the time of setting apart to the states the surplus revenue, that it was to be applied to the purposes of education; and our legislature, acting upon this understanding, at its first session after congress set this fund apart to us, dedicated it, by a solemn act, for that purpose alone. But, sir, in violation of every principle of justice and equality, we have seen that the legislature has disregarded her own solemn acts, and instead of appropriating this fund, as it was originally intended it should be, they have squandered it in wasteful and extravagant expenditures for internal improvements, which have been local and partial in their beneficial influences. And now, sir, when my constituents come up and demand of this convention that justice may be done to them, they are to be told by the gentleman from Nelson that they must be left to the mercy of the legislature—that body which, in days that are past, has been so just in all its acts. For my part, Mr. President, I am anxious to see this report adopted in the constitution, and I shall, by every act of mine, endeavor to secure this school fund by a permanent provision in the constitution.

That all free governments, Mr. President, are based upon the intelligence and virtue of the people, is an almost universally admitted truth; for we all know, sir, that constitution and laws, which are intended to protect the weak and well meaning against the strong and unprincipled, are but feeble barriers in communities where vice and ignorance usurps the place of wisdom and learning. But as I have remarked, while these general truths are admitted by all, it is to be greatly feared that we are not practically alive to the importance of these great truths on the operation of government; and the success of our great experiment in carrying on a republican form of government will depend in a great measure, upon the cultivated intelligence of the people. While, sir, we are engaged in making a constitution, which is to be thoroughly democratic in all its operations, and while we are throwing back into the hands of the people all political power, the solemn obligation is resting upon us as their representatives, to secure to them and their posterity the means of securing to their children the blessings of an education, in order that they may be qualified to discharge the duties that may devolve upon them. For one, I believe, with the first eminent law-giver of Pennsylvania who took care to incorporate in the frame of the government itself, which he prepared for that state so early as the year 1682, "that men of virtue and intelligence are requisite to preserve a good constitution, and that these qualities do not descend with worldly inheritance, but are to be carefully propagated by a virtuous education of the rising generation." And never, Mr. President, did man speak more truly than did that old quaker law-giver of Pennsylvania; and believing with him, that men of intelligence are requisite to preserve a good government, and that all attempts to build up free institutions without them must virtually fail, I shall vote for every proposition that will tend to the promotion of learning, and the diffusion of knowledge throughout the state, and that will be calculated to secure, upon a permanent foundation, a system of common schools. Sir, while we are making a constitution that confers on the people the power of choosing all the officers of the government, both civil and political, how important is it that we should also extend to them, as far as we can, the means by which they may inform themselves as to the nature and responsibilities of those high trusts thus confided to their charge. Much, Mr. President, has been said upon the floor of this convention about the capacity of the people of Kentucky for self-government; and while I believe that the people of Kentucky will compare with any upon the globe for virtue, patriotism, and hospitality; and that they are perhaps, possessed of more native genius, and fertility of intellect than any people who have ever lived in any age or clime; yet, sir, the fact is not to be disguised, that there are a large number of persons in Kentucky who are both ignorant and uneducated, and subject to be controlled by the vicious and unprincipled. It appears by the census of 1840, that there were in Kentucky, of males and females over the age of five and under twenty years of age, 233,710 persons. Of this number, there were in colleges and universities 1,419; in academies and grammar schools 4,906; in common schools 24,641; making a total of 30,966, leaving over 200,000 children between the ages of five and twenty not at school. And most deplorable of all, Mr. President, is the fact, that there was at the same period of time in this proud old commonwealth of ours, of which we boast so much, over forty thousand free white citizens over the age of twenty years, who could neither read nor write; a fact that is not very flattering to our vanity as Kentuckians.

Now, sir, while I would go as far as any gentleman in this convention in extending to the people all political power and sovereignty, I am not one of those, who will either flatter the vices or the ignorance of the people, for I hold that extravagant and fulsome adulation is as false and ridiculous, when applied to the people, as it is when applied to the monarch on his throne. Let me say to this convention, that the labors of the divine, the moralist, and the legislator, will avail but little in this country towards the preservation of liberty, unless the great mass of the people themselves are made intelligent. If they are not educated, the demagogue and political aspirant to office will still continue to inflame their passions, and excite their prejudices.

While, however, these great and important truths are recognized and admitted by all, it is to be feared that gentlemen are not practically alive to the important influence of these truths on the operation of our government. The gradual extension of the privilege of free suffrage, in the provisions of the constitution which we are about to adopt, and which is to place in the hands of the people the selection of every officer of the government, imposes on the members of this convention, the solemn duty of making a corresponding effort to extend with these great privileges the lights of knowledge, and the means of cultivating the minds of those who are to come after us. For, sir, if we mean to preserve our free institutions, we must watch over them; we must learn to know and number our great political rights; we must study the tenure by which we hold them; and we must also qualify ourselves to discern from afar off, the dangers that threaten us—for the rights and liberty of man are always in danger from some quarter; they are always a prey to the worst passions of the human heart. Ambition, in its eagle flight, is always hovering over the nest where our dearest blessings are, and ready at any unguarded moment to seize upon them; and the serpent guile of avarice, is ready at any unguarded moment, to invade the asylum of our most sacred rights. If, then, we would guard those rights, we must qualify ourselves and those who are to come after us, to discern from "afar off" the dangers that threaten us; and we must learn "to trace the serpent by his slime, and to know the eagle by his portentous scream." I therefore, Mr. President, stand here demanding it as but an act of justice to my constituents, that the fund mentioned in the report of the committee, be secured to them by a constitutional provision. And when I make this demand—a demand so just—am I to be told that we must look to the legislature for our rights; and that we are to be denied the protection of the constitution? Sir, is it right that my constituents, who have contributed to the expense of your government—who have been taxed to build your railroads and your turnpikes—who have contributed towards the slack watering of your beautiful Kentucky and Green rivers—and who will be compelled to contribute to the payment of your state debt, which was created for the purpose of completing these works—in plain terms, are we of the mountains, who are poor, to be taxed to improve the rivers and roads of you who are wealthy? And then, sir, when the general government has set apart to us a fund, for the purpose of general and equal education, and when we, by our generosity, have voted to tax ourselves for the purpose of raising an additional sum, for this same purpose, is it right for us to be told that there is no constitutional security for us, and that our rights are to be disregarded? I hope, sir, that this convention will act with that wisdom and foresight, that have controlled the action of nearly all the conventions which have met for the purpose of amending the different state constitutions, for the last ten or twenty years; and that we will, by a provision in our constitution, place the school fund beyond legislative control.

We are creatures of imitation and example. It was the example of Washington and Bonaparte, that made them so successful in their battles. They did not, on the eve of some great battle, harangue their soldiers on the importance of valor, and the necessity of victory, and then return to the rear, and send on their men to brave danger alone, and toil in the conflict of battle. No, sir; but with a nerve and valor commensurate to the occasion, they braced themselves up to the great emergency, and with an eye that beamed hope, and courage, and confidence, they marched to the front ranks, and bade their soldiers to follow. Sir, there was not a soldier in their ranks that did not feel the electric influence of their noble example; and who did not grasp his sword with a double vigor, and swear come life or death, to follow his glorious leader? Let us, then, show to the people of Kentucky, that we, as their chosen representatives, delegated by them to perform the high and honorable duty of making for them a constitution, estimate and prize intelligence and virtue. For, sir, if the representatives of the people exhibit an indifference upon this great subject, it cannot be expected that the people will manifest anything but indifference themselves.

In the report, which the committee has presented to the consideration of the convention, they have entered as little into detail as possible; and for my own part, I am willing to leave to the legislature the power of carrying into practical operation this system. But, sir, I shall ever be opposed to leaving to the legislature the control and management of the fund itself, without throwing around them those restrictions which will prevent them from appropriating one dollar of this fund for any other purpose than for that of education. And let me ask the gentleman from Nelson, what objection can he have to incorporating the article reported by the committee in the constitution. By that report we do not propose to tax the people of Kentucky one dime. We merely propose to set apart and dedicate forever what has already been raised by a tax for that purpose, together with the fund which has heretofore been set apart by legislative enactment, for educational purposes. But the gentleman insists that we must leave the whole matter to the control and management of the legislature, and why? Because gentlemen say that it will encumber and endanger the constitution. Is this the argument, Mr. President, that we are to be gravely met with, by old and experienced statesmen? If it is right that the people should be educated—if it is right that the fund which the people of the state have so generously voted to tax themselves with, for the purposes of sustaining a system of common schools, should be sacredly applied to that purpose—if sir, it is right that the money which was set apart to the state of Kentucky—by the general government, and which was originally intended for the purposes of education, should be applied to that purpose alone—why I ask, should we leave the matter to the future control and management of the legislature? If the thing is right, why should we not take the responsibility and act upon it? Why leave to others to do that which we are required to do ourselves? Why put off the good work, a work in which our children and our children's children are most deeply and most vitally interested. Mr. President, there is no doubt this day—many a "mute Milton" in the mountains of Kentucky, the energies and powers of whose mind have been repressed and checked by "chill, penury, and want," yes sir, minds which if early cultivated, might have "commanded the applause of listening senates" and who might have raised themselves above the common level of mankind, and have achieved honor for themselves and glory for their country. But from the situation in which they have been placed, the grandeur of nature has availed them nothing, and their mountain homes, which under the proper state of intellectual improvement might have echoed the song of the poet, or the eloquence of the orator, has remained as a sterile and uncultivated waste.

There is, Mr. President, abroad in this goodly land of ours, a spirit of inquiry and investigation, mysterious and all powerful in its operation, which hears the sigh of the oppressed in every land, and whose march is from nation to nation, dispensing joy and life to all, and which is setting the prisoner and captive of ignorance and idolatry free. Already has this spirit of inquiry freed our religion of its century-grown corruption. Already has it started into being, a principle of freedom in Europe, which is doing its work, and has erected its glorious monuments of freedom on the out post of Oregon and California; and it is to be hoped that the day is fast approaching, when the tree of liberty which was planted by our fathers upon American soil, will take deep root, until it shall rise and spread over the face of the habitable globe. But this great day in the history of man will be remote, unless our people are instructed and qualified to discharge the duties which in the remote history of their country, may devolve upon them.

Mr. President, I have thought it due to myself, and to those whom I represent, to say this much. And sir, whatever may be the action of this convention, I shall console myself by the reflection that in my humble efforts, in behalf of a system of common schools, to the best of my ability, I have discharged my duty, to myself, my constituents, and posterity.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I hope whatever the decision of this convention may be, we shall be able to settle this question to night, in some shape or other. I am extremely anxious that we shall close our labors by the seventeenth. I think we can do so by devoting our time to the few objects which are now before us. One of them which seems to excite a great degree of interest is this of common schools. I am the friend of education, and claim the responsibility of an agency in setting apart the $850,000 from the United States revenue, for the purposes of education, when the country is prepared to appropriate it.

The gentleman from Lewis, (Mr. Proctor,) is wrong in supposing that there was any setting apart of this revenue for the purpose of education by the general government. It was left free for the states to decide, and as I remarked the other day, when the fund was subject to the control of our treasurer, there was a contest in the legislature, at a time when I occupied a seat in the other end of this capital, as to the disposition of that fund.

There was a strong disposition on the part of some, to throw the whole in the fund for internal improvement. Others were disposed to invest it in Bank stocks. A compromise was made by which $850,000 was set apart for the school fund. The balance was invested in stocks. What has become of the school fund since that time, I do not know. But I am opposed to adopting as a part of the constitution, this common school system, sometimes called the free school system. I use the term common, as opposed to individual or private schools.

As I know the chairman of the committee desires to be heard on this subject, I will only offer an amendment which I shall propose for the whole of the report. If we have a school fund secured, and set apart by the legislature of the country, I want to leave that fund to the disposition of the legislature for educational purposes. If they shall hereafter create a fund by the continuance of this two cent tax, or by additional taxation, or in any other manner, I want the constitution to lay hold of it and devote it to education. But the mode and manner, and time when, and the possibility of carrying it out in every county in the commonwealth at the same time, seems to me to be questions which it is utterly impossible for us to decide. I see by one of the sections of the report that if a county shall fail within ten years, to place herself in the position which has been, or may be provided in the school law, and fails to draw the fund, and appropriate it to educational purposes, it is to be withdrawn from her and her population forever, and thrown back into the original fund. Thus every ten years, a portion of each county whose population is not prepared to appropriate the fund, is to lose the benefit of it, and cannot have it when prepared to appropriate it. I wish to secure the fund from legislative distraction, or abstraction, and for that purpose I offer the following substitute:

"All the funds which have been, or which may be collected, and which have been set apart for common school purposes, shall be held sacred, subject to be regulated by the general assembly, and applied and disbursed as shall seem best to effect the object of general education."

Mr. TAYLOR. I announced to the convention when I first addressed it, that I was now, for the first time in my life in a legislative assembly. I come here from the humble, and to me fascinating obscurity of private life, and I ask of this convention that they will not judge of the importance of the subject now under consideration, nor of its inherent justice by the humble and unpretending weakness of its advocate. Exclamations of surprise and astonishment have been so frequently made in reference to the course and conduct of some gentlemen here, that they have indeed become common substantives. I sir, too, have to-day been indeed greatly surprised by the action of some gentlemen in reference to the great subject now under consideration. When the president rose from his seat to put the question upon the adoption of the first section of the report, I firmly believed it would be passed "nemine contradicente"; I so believed because I thought the same feeling pervaded the representative which did the represented. But in an expectation so just and reasonable, so consonant with the hopes and interest of our common constituency, I am likely to be sadly disappointed.

The gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin,) propounded to us a singular question, one which I dare answer, and which I will make the record before me answer. Said he, are you afraid to trust the legislature?—I am. He asked it with great emphasis and confidence—I answer it in the same spirit—I am afraid to trust the legislature; and the reasons for that distrust, I will give, drawn from legislative records on this subject. I hope the convention will bear with me whilst I unfold the reasons of that distrust, and defend the action of the committee, of which I am chairman, from the most singular arguments with which it has been assailed by the elder gentleman from Nelson. You may talk to me about the changes which we are making in the existing constitution; great as they are, and demanded as they are, alike by public necessity and sentiment; you may hold up to the people the elective principle which we are about to incorporate in the new organic law; but I tell you, in the language of holy writ, "the last shall be first, and the first shall be last;" and although the report of the committee on education is the last on the calendar, yet you will find that this subject of education is the first in the affections and hopes of the people of this commonwealth. I resided for many years in one of the new and western states of this confederacy; and when I moved to it, my first object and duty was to become acquainted with its constitution, its political history, and internal polity. Among the matters which attracted my attention was the fact that the general government had given to the state every sixteenth section of land for the promotion of knowledge, and consequently of human virtue and happiness. Congress had not only given to Indiana, but to all the new states most liberally of the public domain for the purposes of education, while Kentucky and most of the elder states of this confederacy had not received any thing. In the year 1836 there had accumulated in the treasury of the United States about twenty eight millions of dollars beyond the demands against it, the most of which had arisen from the sales of the public lands, the common property of the people. Congress determined that this large amount of surplus revenue should not lay there idle and unproductive; nay, sir, fearing perhaps that it might be devoted to bad and sinister purposes, passed an act ordering it to be distributed among the several states in the ratio of their representation in that body, and thus, sir, the most singular spectacle was exhibited to the world, of a government making among the governed, a parental distribution of twenty eight millions of dollars which had accumulated in its coffers, a spectacle never before seen, and which I fear will never be seen again, at once the noblest and most cheering commentary upon free government, and the integrity and justice of its administration.

Kentucky accepted her share upon the condition imposed by congress; and upon the 23d day of February, 1837, passed an act in which I find the following section:

"Be it further enacted, That the profits arising from one million of dollars of the surplus revenue of the United States, deposited and to be deposited with the state by virtue of the act of congress of the 11th of June 1836, be and is hereby set apart and forever dedicated to founding and sustaining a general system of public instruction in this state."

Sir, to what nobler purpose could such a fund have been dedicated. The legislature of Kentucky felt then as we now feel; being the just and proper reflex of public sentiment, what did the representatives of the people do? They set apart one million dollars and forever dedicated it to a general system of public instruction. In the tenth section of this act it is further provided "that until such system shall have been devised by law, the profits shall be placed under the direction and control of the commissioners of the sinking fund, who are thereby directed to discriminate the same from the other ingredients of said fund, with a view to the abstraction thereof, together with the accumulations thereupon, as soon as the same shall be required under the contemplated system." Now, sir, this looks most beautiful and fascinating on paper. This term forever is a strong one, but much I fear 'tis like lover's vows, written on a running stream. It exhibits a great deal of legislative anxiety for the safe custody of this fund. It is to be kept always ready—they want no days of grace for its payment. The commissioners of the sinking fund are required to discriminate it from the other ingredients, with a view to its abstraction. They are to keep it in a separate stocking, just as the frugal and provident old woman keeps her garden seed ready to plant in the spring; nay, the accumulations—meaning as I presume the interest—that too is to be kept separate and apart; one would infer that the children of the commonwealth had but to knock and it should be opened unto them—that 'twas but necessary to cry “open sesame,” and the cave in which was placed this sacred deposit, would give its golden treasures to the promotion of human knowledge. Well, sir, what has become of this fund and of its accumulations? Permit me to read from the report of the superintendent of public instruction:

“In the midst of such circumstances as these, the state of Kentucky found herself embarked in an extensive system of internal improvements, designed to develop her resources and increase the general wealth. The funds necessary to carry on her extensive operations, were raised by the public credit, exhibited in the form of state bonds, which were issued and sold to a large amount; and in order to sustain the credit of these bonds, and provide the means for the regular payment of interest accruing on them, and the final discharge of the bonds themselves, a sinking fund was created, and a large portion of the proceeds of the taxes, annually handed over to the commissioner of that fund. The bonds held by the board of education represented $850,000, which the state having first consecrated to the cause of education, subsequently used in prosecuting its plans of internal improvement. The board of education stood, in regard to the bonds it thus held, precisely in the relation of any other fair holder of these internal improvement bonds; unless, indeed, the peculiar nature and origin of the school fund, thus invested, should have given a peculiar sacredness to the debt thus held by that board. Yet, it is most painful to be obliged to state, that the legislature of the state, for the year 1844-5, took a view of this matter so entirely different, that by the 4th section of the act, approved February 10, 1845—chapter 264, of the laws of that session—it required all the state bonds held by the board of education, to be delivered to the governor of the commonwealth, and to be, by him, burnt in the presence of the high officers of state! As if to mock the great cause which had thus been betrayed, the act proceeded to declare, that lists should be made out of the evidences of debt thus burnt, and that these lists, though deprived by the act itself of all value in the way of delivery, transfer, or assignment, and practically robbed of all advantage, thenceforth, from the sinking fund, which had been created to sustain and finally discharge just such bonds, should, nevertheless, be held and taken, as in the place of the bonds that had been burnt, and be as sacred as they had been! Practically, that is, sacred enough to be burnt themselves, whenever the exigences of the public credit might seem to render such a proceeding desirable against the defenceless creditors.”

So sir, we see this fund was first dedicated to the improvement of the head and heart, the morals and the intellect of the country, to the noblest of all improvements—to the accumulation of that wealth “which taketh no wings and flyeth not away”—of which no adverse fortune can ever deprive us, and against which no commission of bankruptcy can ever issue. “Who so knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of the man that is in him?” The legislature have not spread on the record the reasons which induced them to order those bonds to be burnt. They were afraid, I infer, that they would be put in market. They directed them to be listed, and if the auditor's office should be burned, the tangible evidences of this large debt to the children of the state would be gone; there are no bonds as I understand in existence. Has the interest on this eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars been paid, and kept ready (to use the language of the act of 1837,) for abstraction? No sir. On the 20th day of December, 1848, a bond for $308,768 42 cents, being the arrears of interest due upon said $850,000, was executed by the state. There is also $51,223 29 cents of interest due for the year 1848. So it will be seen that the interest has not been paid; and this large interest bond of $308,768 42 cents is payable at the pleasure of the legislature. Should not, I ask, the people be justly jealous of the legislature? Have they not a right to be so on this subject; and being so, I as one of the friends of education, am for placing in the constitution which we are now forming a clause, dedicating this great fund to this still greater cause. It is honor enough to be a delegate on this floor; but it is a still higher honor to have been instrumental in securing this fund to the glorious cause of education.

Mr. President, in the year 1848 the legislature passed an act authorizing the governor of the state to execute a bond, payable to the board of education, for the interest and dividends which was due from the state to said board up to the 1st of January, 1848, and that bond, as I have stated before, amounted to $308,768 42 cents, payable at the pleasure of the legislature. I once read of a man who bound himself to build a house of given dimensions for a widow, and after setting forth in the written contract the style and material in and of which it was to be built, he added, that in the construction of said house “he was not to be hastened”—so in the payment of this large sum the legislature is not to be hastened. Sir, am I again to be asked if I am unwilling to trust the legislature? I do distrust them, when they order their bonds to be burned; when they give one for the interest, and say it shall not be assignable, and make it payable when they please; when they play the game of tie and loose. Credulity is folly—nay, 'tis moral and official treason against the children of this commonwealth. I promised an old friend of mine when I came here not to vote for a divorce, (he thinking we had the power and right to do so.) I promised him I would not; but I am going to violate that promise, and to vote to divorce the legislature from the power to control or destroy this fund. I know my old friend will excuse me; he was an intelligent man and a good democrat, but he had the good sense and patriotism to vote for me, whig as I am.

The legislature sustains, (or rather the state in reference to this fund,) the singular position of debtor and creditor. They have made their bonds payable to the board of education. They have ordered them once to be burned. They have not paid the interest, nor provided the means for its payment. They may destroy, for aught I know, the creditor—the board of education, the corporate body who hold their bonds in trust for the children of the state—and I have cause to be jealous of legislative integrity and honor. The gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) has attributed to me the paternity of this movement here upon the subject of common schools. Not so. The gentleman from Carter (Mr. T. J. Hood) introduced the resolution for the appointment of the committee by whom this report is made. Sir, I honor the gentleman from Carter for it, and shall forever. When this convention first met, I took my seat where I now am, and looked out of the loop-holes of retreat, (for I am on the outer tier of seats,) at the delegates, talking to myself about men and things. I was appointed by the president, most unexpectedly to myself, chairman of the committee on education, an honorable position, and I am trying to merit his confidence, and that of my constituency, by the protection of our common right to and interest in this great matter of education. What does this report propose? First, it enjoins it on the legislature to establish and keep in existence a system of common schools throughout the state, open to all the free white children thereof; 2nd, to secure the fund heretofore mentioned by me; 3rd, to prevent the legislature from diverting the interest which may become due on said fund to any other purpose than common schools. It further provides for the election by the people of a superintendent of public instruction. This is a profile of the report. It has been denied on this floor that there is any necessity for interference by this convention with this subject. Let the report of the auditor, in reply to a resolution which I had the honor to introduce, answer:

“A statement showing the total number of parents and guardians, with the amount of their property, and the number of children between 5 and 16 years of age, taken from the commissioners' books returned to the second auditor for the year 1849:

	Parents.	Child'n.
1st. Those that have no property entered for taxation and number of children,	8,028	19,467
2d. Those who are worth less than $100 in property and number of children,	13,755	36,764
3d. Those who are worth from $100 to $400 in property and number of children,	12,757	35,035
4th. Those who are worth from $400 to $600 in property and number of children,	5,904	16,409
5th. Those who are worth over $600 in property and number of children	30,263	85,315
Total,	70,707	192,990

There are in Kentucky ninety-one thousand children whose parents are mostly unable to educate them, and yet we are beseeched not to interfere. Great God, can it be possible that we shall be non-combatants in the great battle of life—for knowledge is life. I ask, if gentlemen can look upon this barren and unproductive field, and not desire to plant and nurture within it the tree of knowledge, (perhaps of life also,)—to lead through it those fountains of living water, which slake not but rather increases the thirst of him who drinketh; who does not desire to cast upon this still and unfruitful pool bread with the cheering assurance that it shall indeed be gathered after many days; to sow broad-cast over this land the seeds of knowledge, which shall germinate and produce forever. With the startling facts presented in this report of the second auditor, how can gentlemen hesitate about the absolute necessity of constitutional provision for some system of general education? It cannot be that this convention will adjourn without the expression of some solicitude on this great matter.

Mr. President, I threaten no gentleman on this floor with his constituents—I point no one to the reckoning which will be made with him in reference to the custody and use of this great fund. Home sir; 'tis the most beautiful and fascinating word in the English language, doubtless on account of its associations—grouping within its circle, wife, children, and friends. I dare any man here to go home and look the mother of his children in the face, and tell her, who is the partner of his joys, his troubles, and anxieties, that he opposed the constitutional devotion and security of this money for the education of her children. I want every mother to know that if the father of her children shall be taken away, that there is a fund set apart by the constitution of her country, for their education—that though they are indeed orphans, yet their moral and intellectual culture has been provided for by the state, whose rulers they are to be in a few short years. Yes, gentlemen, when you shall return home, and sit down at your own firesides, rendered festive by your presence, and secure and happy by your presence, when your children—the buds and blossoms along the pathway of human life—shall be throwing their little arms around your neck, and telling you, in their artless simplicity, the little domestic incidents that have occurred in your absence, can you, in such an hour, tell the wife and mother that you have had an opportunity of providing a system of schools for them, and have not done it? Will you throw over this sunshine of the heart the pall of neglected and violated social obligation and duty, by your failure to protect and secure this fund from legislative rapacity and duplicity?

No man can estimate the value of knowledge. I would not exchange my opportunities of information, and the means of its acquirement, for all else this world can give. Knowledge is, indeed, power, every where; but in a government organized as ours, 'tis so socially and politically. The right of suffrage, as a mere right in itself, is not of such inestimable value. It is as the guaranty of the safety and security of other rights that its value and power is demonstrated:

"It is a weapon sharper set
Than either sword or bayonet;
It comes down as light and still,
As snow flake on the sod;
And executes the freeman's will,
As lightning does the will of God."

Its intelligent exercise is every thing; 'tis indeed the sword of the spirit of freemen, and it may, indeed, be used as well for wo as weal. Intelligence generally diffused is necessary to the stability of free government. Patriotism is part and parcel of the moral and social inheritance of our people; 'tis a noble and common virtue; it may be said "to grow with our growth, and strengthen with our strength." But 'tis the educated patriotism of the country that is to walk amid the conflict of the social and political elements, and amid the winds and waves of human prejudice and passion, and bid them be still. We have been told by the gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin,) that the catholics are opposed to this system of common schools, and that if we put it in the constitution they will oppose its adoption. And he has conjured up "spirits from the vasty deep," for the purpose of frightening us from our duty on this subject. He seems to think it will array the whole catholic population against the new organic law. Sir, I do not believe it. I will not do them the injustice to believe this imputation upon their patriotism and intelligence. I understand they have some of the best schools in Kentucky—I know they have been esteemed the steadfast friends of education. They will not send their children, 'tis said, to free schools. Be it so. Let them educate their own children; they have the right to do so, and the ability, too. Is that any reason why the friends of education should neglect to provide for such a system of public instruction as will hang up, at every man's fireside, the lamp of knowledge? We bring it within the reach of all—saint and sinner, protestant and catholic; and if the latter does not choose to embrace the advantages of the system, the fault is not ours. We have erected the lamp—if I may use the figure—like the brazen serpent in the wilderness, and invited every man to look and live; and if he will not, we have the consolation that it is not our fault, or our neglect. But, sir, if the catholics oppose a constitutional system of public instruction, that very opposition is, with me, the strongest reason why the system should exist; and the very declaration that they oppose it, has but increased my anxiety to incorporate it in the constitution.

Sir, what an immense and frightful amount of ignorance there is in this country. The profession, of which I am a member, brings me into contact with a great many persons who can neither read or write. Not long since I was upon a visit to a friend in a county not far distant from mine, when a man, who had purchased a small tract of land of him, came to pay for it; he paid a portion of the purchase money and gave his note for the balance. When he came to sign the note, he placed to it his mark, and I attested it. My friend told me that the father of that man kept him whilst a boy at home at work, whilst he, the father, taught other people's children. What a singular and mortifying spectacle is here presented of a parent bestowing knowledge upon the children of others and denying it to his own. I hope for the honor of human nature that such instances are rare. Why, sir, if I believed in total annihilation after death, still I would do all I could for the diffusion of knowledge, because of its present value and enjoyment; but believing as I do "that this spirit of ours is not as perishable as the telescope through which it looks, as 'twere, into the very gates of heaven," believing as I do that it carries with it beyond the grave all its acquisitions and its powers of acquisition, it becomes doubly important and interesting to me. I know 'tis a trite remark that education is the ladder which leads "from barbarism to civilization, from ignorance to knowledge, from darkness to light, from earth to heaven." If so, 'tis our duty to furnish that ladder to every man, and while we have an opportunity let us do it. I know that in the rich counties of the state 'tis difficult to establish a system of common schools; there has been in the county which I have the honor in part to represent, but a partial adoption of the present system—in many of the counties no organization whatever has been had. A friend who sits by my side—the intelligent and sensible delegate from Green—informed me a few days ago that in the county of Pulaski there has been quite an extensive organization of schools under the present law. She has 1264 parents and 3590 children. She is a democratic county, but she has sent to the senate of Kentucky a whig—a northern man by birth and education, and who has devoted much time and attention to the promotion and organization of these schools in Pulaski, and the best return which the people could make to him for his interest in their welfare was to elevate him to a more extended theatre for usefulness. Sir, the election of this man from a democratic county, (and he a whig,) is honorable to my democratic friends. It exhibits that there are interests and motives above party success and party triumph; and that though in a minority in the state, that they can forget, yea, sir, elevate themselves above party prejudices and come up to the rescue of their children and the country from the consequences of ignorance and folly.

I feel, sir, that I have trespassed on the attention and indulgence of the convention. I could not have said less—perhaps I ought not to have said so much.

This is a subject which comes home to every citizen: it so commends itself to our kind consideration and regard; it so challenges our attention now, and so inspires our hopes for the future. Sir, if you desire to engraft in the constitution, which we are now making, an element of success and triumph over all opposition, you cannot better do it than by the adoption of the principles of the report of the committee. I thank the house again for their kind indulgence. I attribute their patient attention not to the manner in which my remarks have been presented, but to the intrinsic importance of the subject now under consideration, and of which I have ever been the faithful friend and humble and zealous advocate.

Mr. ROOT. I rise to make a few remarks, not that I expect to shed any light on the subject before the convention, but because I feel that if I do not avail myself of this opportunity, it may never occur to me again to make the peculiar views of the people of my county known to this convention. I feel that if I were to let this opportunity pass, I should disappoint the expectations of a respectable portion of the people of this commonwealth. If there was any one subject on which I was thoroughly and fully instructed, it was to rescue from the vacillation of the legislation of the state, the common school fund, solemnly dedicated to the purposes of education by the representatives of the people in 1837, and place it beyond the control of the legislature of the country. I know a little about the legislation of the commonwealth, and its changeable character, as exhibited in 1844-5-6, when the question of common schools was under consideration. Strange to say, there was a majority of the members then on this floor, in those years, who were disposed to vote more money to procure wolf scalps or wild cat skins, than for the purposes of promoting general education. The people, with all their virtue, intelligence, and chivalry, are not fully and fairly represented by their representatives. The honorable representative from Fayette, a few years ago, introduced a bill imposing a tax of two cents on each $100 worth of property in the commonwealth in aid of common schools, provided the people should, at the next election thereafter, vote for the tax. The people did most freely ratify and confirm that law by an overwhelming majority—a two-thirds vote.—From the whispering I have observed in this house, I think there are some gentlemen here who are behind the sound intelligence of their constituency, and prepared to throw the common school fund overboard, floating as it were, upon the Atlantic waves of uncertainty, without a rudder or helm to guide it, save the periodical whims or ignorance of the representatives who come here, disregarding the best interests of the state. For, is it not its best interest, and do they not mistake that interest when they vote against the establishment of the common school system—when they throw their influence against it? Why is it that here, to-day, we are assembled in a free government? Why was it that the thirteen colonies were enabled to obtain their independence? Why was it they were able to throw off the shackles of Great Britain, and declare themselves free and independent? Because the Puritan fathers, who landed on Plymouth rock, and those pioneers who came to Virginia, were educated men. It was because the fathers of this country understood their rights, and understanding those rights, were prepared to vindicate them. Why is it that the dark mantle of superstition and tyranny hangs over the Russians, one of the most powerful nations of the earth, who are governed by the arbitrary will of the Czar? It is that universal ignorance, darker than Egyptian night, predominates in that land. Why was it that in 1789, Ireland, a proud and chivalrous nation, was not able to obtain her independence and throw off the shackles of Britain? It was on account of the ignorance and superstition that prevail among that people. And it is ignorance, in short, that upholds thrones and all the tyrants of the earth. In proportion, therefore, as we advance in establishing universal education, in that proportion shall we render permanent and perpetuate American liberty. Liberty is a jewel which cannot be preserved without education. Education enlightens, ennobles, and elevates man, and qualifies him for that sphere he was destined to occupy.

Would to God that the powerful talents of the gentleman from Nelson—for his talents must be felt wherever he shall take a part—could have been exerted, at this late hour of his life, upon one of the greatest and most ennobling theatres, that would crown every other act of his honorable career. Sorry am I, as he is about to descend to his grave in the due course of nature, that that venerable man should endeavor to put out the lights which are destined to cheer us along our pathway. And, for what reason? Is it to be borne with; is it to be tolerated, that in this crisis of affairs in Kentucky, that, by mere fun, or the recital of anecdotes, that may be true—for if the gentleman vouches for it, I am bound to believe it—we are to be diverted from the fulfilment of our purpose? Because the gentleman has found one solitary schoolmaster who supposed there were thirty nine days in September—which fact is enough to create laughter among the unthinking; and it might do to relate at some cross road, by way of perpetrating a joke—but would it be right if it were to have the effect of cheating the great mass of the children now born, and to be born in the commonwealth, out of their birthright? If there be one subject higher than another, one subject holier than another, one subject that calls for more intellectual exertion than another, it is to plant the common school system in Kentucky permanently, and upon a sure basis. What I may say, being unknown to fame, may have little weight or force here. But I will read what I deem an offset to the opinions of the gentleman from Nelson, with all his weight of character and powerful talents. The father of his country, after he had fulfilled the measure of his country's glory, in his parting address to his countrymen, held the following language:

"We should promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge."

Again: I will give you another good authority. And I proclaim here in my place, there is not a revolutionary patriot among all the patriots of the land, greater than the good old John Adams. That great patriot, seeing the importance of general education, declared this sentiment:

"The wisdom of the legislature in making liberal appropriations for the benefit of the public schools, is portentous of great and lasting good."

Again: I will say to my democratic friends on this and that side of the house, that I will bring up high authority, authority to which they have been accustomed to bow in adoration, the great apostle of the democratic party, Thomas Jefferson, the bright morning star of the democracy of the land—the man who penned the immortal declaration of independence, and knew upon what basis that declaration rested. What does he say?

"That education is mostly to be relied on for promoting the wisdom, virtue, and happiness of the people."

Again: Mr. Madison said, and he was another patriot, whose authority ought, at least, to have some weight in this assembly:

"Learning affords the best security against crafty and dangerous encroachments on our public liberty."

Again: James Monroe says:

"We should promote intelligence among the people, as the best means of preserving our liberties."

Again: That great oracle of the law, chief justice Marshall, says:

"Intelligence is the basis of our independence."

Is not this sentiment true? Intelligence is the basis of American independence. Now, have all these men conspired, these worthy patriots, these learned statesmen—have all these worthy men conspired to bear testimony to a certain fact, and are they all deceived? Is intelligence the basis upon which American liberty rests? Is it the only basis? Is it the sure basis? Is this the northern star to which every eye must turn in time of greatest peril to republican freedom? It must be admitted by all, and yet I am afraid you will find some delegates here so cowardly as to shrink from the contest of freedom and fall back in reserve. These men would not have done to have entered a breach on the bloody field where our fathers achieved our liberties.

Again: Dr. Benjamin Rush says:

"We can only prevent crime and render our republican form of government durable by establishing and supporting public schools in every part of the state."

I was struck with the remarks of the learned gentleman from Nelson, as he may be called, when he supposes he could substitute two hundred thousand children, now in the commonwealth, to be educated, as a fair offset, because now and then a gentleman chooses to take three or four orphan children and educate them. Is this meeting the question like a statesman, like a philosopher? Is this coming up to the question, and meeting the expectations of the people of Kentucky? I will venture, for one, to prophecy, if there are any gentleman's constituents opposed to establishing a fund for universal education, the reason is, they are ignorant of its value. And if the gentleman himself understands the wants of his constituents, he should go it blind, and in less than ten years, when the little prattlers throughout the commonwealth shall begin to prattle, the little things which they have learned in the common schools, then there will be a statute erected to that gentleman's memory, in the hearts of the children of the commonwealth. He ought to lead public sentiment, and if he is not prepared to do it, he ought not to have come here.

Here are assembled a hundred wise men, not of the east, but of the west, engaged in a work which is to affect the destinies, for good or evil, of the people of this commonwealth, perhaps for a century to come. They have the great public interests in their hands. Will they let the opportunity pass of acting in accordance with it? Will they do it? Is there a man here who is prepared to do it? I believe that the people are prepared for a general system of education. I believe, according to the report of the honorable chairman of the committee on education, we ought to dedicate that entire fund to the founding of a system of general education. I think the people will concur in the adoption of that measure, and I believe that every man who votes for it will be hailed by his constituents as a benefactor of his race.

I look upon a system of general education as the very Kremlin of American liberty, without which there is no hope of perpetuating the liberties of this country. Think you that the little band of patriots who fought at Bunker's hill, or Saratoga, or Yorktown, or wherever our victories were achieved against England's military power, would have succeeded, but for the intelligent and patriotic spirit of the people of this country? It was owing to their being educated and well informed. It was their ministers who educated them—the Puritan ministers, who brought school-masters from England, and whose first act was to establish a church dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. Their next act was to look to the intellectual growth of the rising generation; and looking to that, they made themselves and their descendants impregnable to, and unconquerable by the mighty hosts of England. There has been a ban placed here on quoting anything from Greece or Rome, but the struggle of Thermopylae, the battles and victories at Marathon, Plataea, Micalle, and Salamis will stand as imperishable monuments to show what a virtuous and enlightened people can achieve. The time will soon pass by—it will be gone from us, in which to lay the foundation for the future grandeur, glory, and prosperity of our beloved state. Let us therefore address ourselves to the work—dedicate the fund. Let the fostering fiat of our new constitution go forth, announcing to the people, that ample provision has been made to bedeck the old commonwealth with those jewels of prosperity, intelligence, and religion, common schools, and my word for it, the great heart of Kentucky will welcome and sustain them.

I call on the democrats now in the majority in this body, and I call upon the whigs, who in times gone by stood up for education, and I call in the name of the mighty dead, whose sentiments I have uttered to-day, to come up and dedicate the fund. You will make your constituents all-powerful, you will make them rich in all that is virtuous and glorious, and you will aid in the perpetuation of human liberty. Let him who chooses dodge this question.

In conclusion, permit me to say if there is a delegate here who wishes to erect a monument to his name more enduring than brass, more lasting than the eternal hills, let him devote the few hours remaining of this session, if it be necessary, to the advocacy of the establishment of a school fund, which shall throw light and knowledge to the darkest corners of the commonwealth, and gladden the heart of every mother and child in this land. Vote this dedication, and you will have done something for the poor. It is the duty of a republican government to educate its children. It is said by all writers upon republics, that education is the birth-right of every child born in a republic. Leave this subject to the legislature, judging from the past, the schools will never go into operation, and the funds will be squandered and re-squandered, abstracted and re-abstracted, and nothing will be permanent. And finally, as ignorance always grows with ignorance, and there being no light in the commonwealth, save and except that which is confined to the colleges and academies, the great body of the people will become so ignorant as not to appreciate the benefit of a common school education, and their representatives will be but the re-echo of their ignorance. What a state of things! What political doctor will undertake then to cure the evil, when the representatives but reflect the ignorance of their constituents.

Here we have a learned body of men, understanding the great interests of the commonwealth; now strike for the ininterests of your constituents, and my word for it, if you do die politically in the attempt to do the people good, your praises will be echoed, and your names eternized, when a new generation shall arise and call you blessed.

Mr. BARLOW moved to amend the amendment by adding the following:

"Provided, That each county in this state, under any general system of education, shall be entitled to the due proportion of the school fund thus dedicated, according to the number of children therein; and each district in each county shall be entitled to the due proportion of said fund according to the number of children therein."

Mr. MACHEN. The subject of education is one of deep and abiding interest with all of us. The question, however, is not whether education shall prevail, but as to the means by which it is to be done. It is proposed to set apart $1,225,768 42, which is to be a sacred fund for all future time; but I ask where that fund is? Is it in the vaults of the treasury? Is it in a tangible shape anywhere? If not, are we to levy a tax on the people of Kentucky, without their mandate to do it? I stand here with as little fear as any gentleman on this floor, but I wish the all-powerful voice of the people to come up on this subject to their representatives in a legislative capacity. I am not willing to say to the people of Caldwell county, I have fixed a tax of three cents on the $100 upon you, without consulting you about it. I know they feel an interest in education; and when I see the children of my constituents, from five to fifteen years of age, destitute of an education, I feel willing to come up and give them the means of education. But shall we, without giving them an opportunity to say a word upon the subject, fasten upon them a tax from which they will not be able to extricate themselves? I trust no gentleman will be deluded into such an act. I am not prepared to do it. I am unwilling to vote this three cent tax, and rivet it on the people, without leaving them the privilege to shake it off. I know the people have voted a two cent tax, but in that case it was left to their free volition. They came up and did it for themselves; and I am willing to leave it to them in the future. When they see that we have secured that which has already been provided, I believe they will come up and loosen their purse-strings, and diffuse education through every nook and corner of the land; but I am for letting them do it for themselves. I suppose the $73,500 of stock in the bank of Kentucky is available. I also suppose that the $51,223 29 is available, but I suppose the other sum is not available, and I am not willing to say that the people shall pay $60,000 or $70,000 annually without consulting them on the subject. When it is their will, they will instruct their representatives to do it. When we have secured the common stock, we have done all that we shall be justified in doing; and this they have required to be done. We are here to make an organic law, and not to impose taxation.

There is another objection to this. Although the people are in favor of education, this system has not worked well. It has certainly not worked well in my county. It does not accomplish the purpose that was expected. It is true that this may, in some measure, be attributable to the smallness of the sum disbursed; but we should not exercise a power which has not been confided to us. Let us not go beyond that which the people have delegated to us. Let us leave the subject of education to the legislature, for they can either accomplish the object or leave it alone, as the people may determine; for the representatives will be bound to obey the instructions of the people. Let us secure the sum which remains, and do no more. Because Washington, and Madison, and Monroe, were in favor of education, will not justify us in taxing the people where they have not authorized us to do it.

Mr. BOWLING. I have been a most patient listener, and I will add a most interested one, since the assemblage of this body. I think I may say sir, that not a speech has been delivered in this hall since the first day of our session that I have not heard. Nay, more; I have carefully read every one of them, as they were published—I have derived no ordinary pleasure and instruction from this, to me, new and varied source of knowledge, and I feel grateful to the various gentlemen who have participated in the discussions for whatever each has contributed to the general fund.

I had not intended sir, to trouble the convention with any remarks, but being a member of the committee on education, and feeling a deep and abiding interest in its promotion, I could not forego the opportunity offered by the occasion to put in requisition my humble abilities in aid of that sacred cause.

Sir, however high the claims of education to the profound consideration of the philanthropist, yet, to the politician in a government like ours, these claims are enhanced a hundred fold, and in a government, such as we now propose for this commonwealth, it becomes a sine qua non to the intelligent discharge of the high political duties which is conferred upon the citizen. It is a government which presupposes an exalted patriotism and intelligence blended in happy association in the electors, and as education is the only recognized substratum of these conservative elements, it is peculiarly to that basis that the eye of the far-seeing politician should be directed.

It shall be no part of my purpose in my discussion of this hacknied subject, to analyze the beauties of education in the abstract, nor to dwell in rapturous eulogy upon those fitful, but gorgeous, those evanescent but intensely brilliant intellects which it has gemmed and embellished, as with light from Heaven, for the wonder and admiration of mankind. These chef d'ouvres, resulting from a felicitous combination of God's mightiest touch, and man's noblest effort, I shall leave undisturbed in their glory, and confine myself to the less ambitious, but more pleasing task of pointing attention to common sense, in the common and multifarious affairs of man, disciplined alone by common school education.

Mr. President, a government which entrusts the appointing power of all of its departments, its checks, its balances, its agents, its vis conservatrix, or innate, inherent power of self-protection, or self-perservations, directly to the discretionary exercise of unrestricted electors, and which at the same time makes no provision for the common education, and consequent elevation of this appointing power, surely acts as unwisely as the man who built his house upon the sand. The house, when the winds are shut up in their northern home, and sunshine cheers and gilds, its fair proportion will be hailed by the superficial as an emanation from the most skillful of architects—its massive masonry protected by a garniture of corinthian pillars surmounted with elaborate capitals, point significantly to a durability of ages. But when Boreas unleashes the demons of storm from their polar caves, and Neptune lashes the sea into wild commotion, and Jupiter belches liquid fire from his throne, and the world is threatened with a second deluge, then the foundation of sand is dissolved and the noble superstructures tumble headlong into a mighty mass of ruins. So of such a government. When party fury shall be lashed into madness, and demagogues, like the storm-demons, shall penetrate every hill and hollow and cranny of the commonwealth, and infused into the wildly excited inhabitants their own fell spirit of disorder and desolation—if the conservatism of educated intellect is not there to resist and roll back the threatening tide, the foundation gives way, and the government is a thing that was, but is not! To guard against such political, and consequently such social disaster, sober-minded men ought not to hesitate to introduce into the government that sole basis of conservatism which wisdom and experience conspire to indicate as alone adequate to meet the emergency. This element of safety is common school education diffused throughout the commonwealth. The children of the commonwealth are the most sacred of her possessions, and demand her fondest solicitude. It is her first duty to provide for them, not gold, but that which gold cannot purchase, omnipotent as it is, virtue and intelligence.

When a wise man undertakes to build a house, said one who was the impersonation of wisdom, he first estimates the cost, and if he find his means insufficient to accomplish that object, he abandons it; and in like manner wise statesmen will not undertake any improvement or public charity in the absence of the means to prosecute it to a successful completion. In obedience to this wise rule, I have collected some statistics, and made some estimates in elucidation of the practicability of establishing a system of free schools in this commonwealth, and I propose to invoke their aid to enable me to prove the following propositions:

1st. That it is utopian to hope for a general diffusion of school instruction in the commonwealth of Kentucky, unaided by the government.

The report of the second auditor, now upon the journal of this body, shows the whole number of parents in the state to be 70,707. Of this number 34,540, or nearly one half, do not average in worth $100—eight thousand are worth nothing, and 21,783 less than $100, and none of them worth as much as $400. These parents have an aggregate of children between the ages of five and sixteen, amounting to 91,266. Now so long as the rule is true, that nothing can produce something, I hold it to be utterly impossible for parents so circumstanced to provide education for their children, and in the absence of a munificent provision upon the part of the government, they must of necessity be permitted to grow up in ignorance. Allowing one half of these children to be males, and we have the basis of a voting population amounting to 45,633, or more than a third of the entire voters of the state, who in a few years are to be entrusted with the selection of officers at the polls, upon whose integrity depend the life and liberty of a million of people and two hundred and seventy millions of property. These statistics need no illustration. They exhibit upon their surface an argument that he who runs may read. Sir we are not to shut our eyes to the fact, that largely over a moiety of our people are totally without the means of educating their children, and a majority of the future voters of the commonwealth, to whom I, and you, sir, propose to restore the power of appointing at the polls all the functionaries of a complicated apparatus of government, are threatened from the adverse circumstances by which they are encompassed with abject ignorance. To avoid the political calamities necessitously incident to such a condition of things, can any of us say we have done our whole duty to the commonwealth, who has not to his utmost, endeavored to provide the only means of prevention? Social compacts have existed for ages, and are now struggling in the old world, like a condemned felon for a few additional days forfeited by a long career of crime and infamy, where the ignorance of the governed was so great as to blind them to oppression, and whose only knowledge existed in the traditional records of unrequited toil and patient endurance. But in the new world freedom is the birth-right of man, and he instinctively comprehends the right which it confers, though he may be ignorant of the duties which it imposes, and in his ardour to avail himself of the one he may trample ruthlessly upon the other. Now as he is compelled by a necessity of his very nature to exercise those rights, how important is it that wise legislators should provide schools for training and disciplining him, to enable him so to use as not to abuse them. Sir, we know that they will be exercised, and in the absence of previous training we can have no reasonable hope that they will be exercised with prudence and discretion.

I know, sir, that exalted patriotism, associated with a kind heart and sound head, in the absence of any training, will point the correct path; and the subjects of this happy combination are above any position that schools or any other contrivance of man could secure, and of such of nature's noblemen I do not speak. I know further more, that patriotism and honor in the humblest Kentuckian, are always prominent, being the common inheritance from a glorious ancestry, and which have made their lovely home a theme of oratory, of poetry, and of song throughout the civilized world—yet these lustrous elements which now enter so largely into the composition of our people, and make glorious the very name of Kentuckian, unless cherished by a diffusion of knowledge, and thus perpetuated, cannot be expected to endure forever. Darkness in all ages and in all countries, when protracted through successive generations, has been found fatal to these ennobling qualities of humanity, and our sages and patriots ought not to hope that our beloved commonwealth would miraculously prove an exception to the general rule. I enquire, secondly. Can this moiety of the fathers of the future voters of Kentucky, under the circumstances which retard and embarrass their will, bestow upon their children even the rudiments of the humblest education? I am, sir, not unapprised of the thousand and one exceptions to the argument which associates poverty and ignorance, and no one knows better than myself that many of the parents of this list are among the most learned, worthy, and accomplished of our citizens, and in the list of the wealthy many will appear of pitiable ignorance, not being able to read or write. But my inquiry is in reference to the ability of poor fathers to educate their children. Now, sir, the facilities for the acquisition of book learning, with a rural population, is precisely in proportion to its density. If the proximity of thirty families to a central point be within the traveling distance of children to school, there each parent will enjoy double the opportunity, of his procuring some school instruction for his children, of his less fortunate neighbor, who resides in a district of equal territorial extent, but just half as densely populated, because the former districts will possess double the means to build a school house and employ a teacher.

The State of Kentucky contains forty five thousand square miles; seventy thousand seven hundred and seven parents, with one hundred and ninety two thousand nine hundred and ninety nine children between the ages of five and sixteen. But when the number of parents resident in large towns and cities is deducted from the aggregate number of the state, the latter, it will be found, will suffer a reduction of ten per cent., leaving sixty three thousand parents to be diffused over forty five thousand square miles—a fraction less than one and a half families for each square mile. Now the area of a school district ought not much exceed four miles square, and could not, with any pretensions to convenience, exceed six miles square. This area, on an average, would contain fifty four families, with a fraction less than one hundred and sixty two children. Here, sir, I am pleased to acknowledge, that the raw material exists in abundance for those factories, which add more to the glory, the political and social blessings of a commonwealth, than all the mules, and jennies, and throstles, that have been invented since the discovery of cotton seed. I mean, sir, the county school houses. But it requires means to erect these factories of embryo statesmen, patriots, and divines, and means to keep the school master housed, not abroad. These statistics show that our state is fitted with peculiar adaptation to a system of free schools, and that the only reason why her children ever grow up in ignorance is, that the condition of the parents is such as to deny them the happiness of educating them: and it is to supply this desideratum that I plead in their behalf.

Let us now examine the extent of the provision already made by the state towards the accomplishment of this object, and enquire to what extent it is capable of accomplishing it.

The fund called and known as the school fund, consists of $1,225,768 42, secured by bonds given by the state, and payable to the board of education; $72,500 of stock in the Bank of Kentucky, and $51,223 29, balance of interest on the school fund for the year 1848, making, in the aggregate, the sum $1,350,491 71. The interest upon this fund, on which the state pays five per cent., amounting to $67,524 58, when added to the two cent tax voted by the state upon each $100 worth of taxable property, which amounts to $56,000, would constitute an annual school revenue of $123,524 58. This sum when divided among 192,999 children, the total number of the commonwealth, would give to each per annum, 64 cents only. At first blush it would appear that a sum so inconsiderable was too small to lay even the corner stone of this benign system. Yet a further enquiry will demonstrate its sufficiency to perpetuate an efficient system of free schools in the commonwealth, for nearly five months in every year. Allowing an area of six miles square to a school district, it would require, in the whole state, twelve hundred and fifty teachers; whose services at $20 per month, (and that amount, when it was known to be certain, at the end of the session, would procure good ones,) for five months, would amount to $125,000—a sum only $1,475 42 over and above the annual school revenue—so that if the state were to seal hermetically, her coffers to the cries of her children for mental bread and the light which shineth in darkness, the system of free schools would still find an efficient basis in the national donation, and the charity voted by the people, if once this holy fund was secured against the fingers of a time-serving legislature.

But the gentleman from Caldwell, (Mr. Machen,) would not force the state to pay the interest on this national gift, made sacred by a solemn act of the legislature forever, to educational purposes. He thinks it might be inconvenient. That is her concern, not mine. It will not be denied that she justly owes the money, for she has, through her legislature, ordered the evidences of the debt to be listed. A listed debt, I understand from the lawyers, is not assignable, and does not, therefore, require the baptism of fire to stave off its payment until a more convenient season. But my friend further thinks that the phraseology of the report of the committee might make it obligatory upon the legislature to lay an additional tax to keep up an efficient system of common schools. I think sir, his fears are groundless, and that he totally miscomprehends the object of the committee. If the school fund in practice was found insufficient for the achievement of the beneficent purposes contemplated by the committee, I should think there ought to be nothing startling to the guardians of the people's rights, in the proposition to compel the legislature politely to ask the people if they would submit to an additional tax. There could be nothing alarming or extraordinary in constraining the legislature to doff their beavers to the sovereign and enquire, "by your leave, gentlemen."

But suppose sir, upon trial, to make the school all that the ardent friends of the universal diffusion of knowledge desired, an additional tax of from four to six cents upon the $100 worth of property was demanded, is it probable the state would vote it? Why, sir, the state of Indiana, on our border, has just voted a tax of ten cents upon each $100, to give additional tone and energy to her system of free schools. Will Kentucky consent to take rank in the rear of Indiana, and submit to have it thrown in her face that her institution of slavery presses her down to that point of humiliation? I wot not: her legislature might do it, her people never. Let our people no longer be mocked by the legislative legerdemain of free schools upon paper. They have had enough of the shahow, and as it is said coming events cast their shadows before, let this body now take of the legislature a forthcoming bond for the substance.

I know very well that thousands of poor boys will cut their way through all these inexorable difficulties; and it rejoices my heart that it is so—set fate itself at defiance, and carve for themselves a proud niche in the temple of Pytho; for the genius of our institutions is filled with peculiar and characteristic relevancy to the generous aspirations of man, and to nerve him for the achievement of mighty ends, to essay which would be madness, in less favored lands. But, of the myriads of the noble and generous, who, inspired by the enthusiasm of hope and youth, enlist in this forlorn hope against the opposing asperities of a cold, calculating world, we hear alone of those who have made for themselves a history and a name—of the unnumbered throng who perish by the wayside, "unwept, unhonored, and unsung," unsustained even by the smiles of that country for whose glory they would at any time have offered up their hearts' warm blood—of them, of their struggles, their hopes, their disappointments, the world hears not; nor does the eye of man trace in the durable witchery of the sculptor's art the wreath for which the heart so ardently panted in life, to find oblivion in the charitable mantle of the unturned sepulchre.

Sir, it is utterly absurd to expect—unless, indeed, honest Dogberry is right in supposing "reading and writing comes by nature"—that it is within the pale of conceivable things that a population surrounded by such circumstances can, as a general rule, secure the blessings of education to their children, unaided by the state.

They cannot, and they must, of necessity, grow up in ignorance. We all know that the wealthy themselves cannot, in rural districts, from the size of their landed estates, and their consequent remoteness from each other, support a good school for any length of time, and that they have to send their children from home and board them near academies and colleges, at an enormous expense, to secure to them an education.

But the convenience to a school house is not the only difficulty with the poor man. The loss to him of the labor of a son while at school, is enormous, and greatly enhances his own labors and difficulties, and diminishes his ability to pay the fee of tuition. And let no one imagine that this trifling fee of five or six dollars is with that father a small matter. Sir, I tell you, to a poor man, who is straining every nerve to pay his rent, and to provide the absolute necessities of life for a growing family, it is an estate. Yes sir, an estate nearly five fold greater, as I have shown by indisputable statistics, than the son for whom the outlay is contemplated is heir to. Many a poor boy has been denied the blessings of a tolerable education, and been compelled to grope his way through the world in ignorance and self-abasement, because it was impossible for his parents to spare the means to pay the fees of the teacher in his neighborhood.

I know that wealth, especially in a slave state, is constantly and rapidly changing hands—one blessing, at least, which looms up amid the evils which gentlemen imagine incident to slavery, like an oasis of the desert; but the rule will still prevail, though I know its tendency will be manfully resisted by those who have felt and know the power and influence of learning, but have lost the means of securing it to their descendants: still, to "that complexion must it come at last"—an association of ignorance and poverty.

Mr. President, aside from interest, should it not be the glory of the empowered deputies of a great and chivalrous people, to fix beyond the power of evanescent legislation, a means of rescuing their unfortunate descendants from the evils of ignorance, and its kindred associations? But, sir, an appeal to interest, it is my experience, touches much more eloquently, the delicate, responsive chords in the moral mechanism of our fallen nature, when braced and indurated by that resisting tonic which wealth so conspicuously imparts, than when addressed, even in accents of the most euphonious pathos, to patriotism and philanthropy—those rare, but most ennobling attributes of man.

Sir, in any government not a despotism, it is emphatically the interest of the rich to employ their best endeavors to elevate the character of their less fortunate fellow-citizens, but in a government not only elective in the technical interpretation of the political theorist, but in very truth, as will be the government that Kentucky now demands of this body, in a voice that we dare not miscomprehend, it should be the object of sensible men, to make ample provisions to enable every voter to discharge faithfully those high trusts confided to him. I maintain, in the absence of reasonable mental culture, that this is impossible. All the fine-spun speeches that have been uttered in this hall in the last two months, in reference to the virtue and intelligence of the people, and their name is legion, and all that may follow, though they go on "till the crack of doom," can have no other effect than to excite the pity of the wise, and to pander to that vain-glory and self-sufficiency which so peculiarly and characteristically distinguish the ignorant, but will never fit one poor and friendless boy for the discriminating exercise of the elective franchise. I know, sir, that this method of treating this subject, may betray to some timid gentlemen, upon my part, to indulge a much hacknied expression, a distrust of the intelligence of the people for self-government. But that is a very superficial view of the matter. My object is, by the elevating influence of education, to place the most unfortunate of them beyond the suspicion of the most fastidious stickler for patrician supremacy. Our people are, I do most conscientiously believe, amply qualified to discharge those high trusts involved in the exercise of the appointing power, and the summoning of this convention, charged to restore back that exalted privilege which they had by contract delegated to agents for half a century, may be cited in demonstration of the assumption. But, sir, your qualifications, or mine, in this behalf, cannot be plead in favor of the qualifications of our descendants. Their qualifications, like ours, will depend upon their opportunities or exertions. It is to provide for them the former that I plead.

I have said, sir, it was the interest of the rich to provide means for the education of the poor. If it be conceded that knowledge conduces to virtue, and to the development and elaboration of that sentiment of the human mind called honor, and, conversely, that ignorance is the fruitful source of vice, immorality, and licentiousness, it follows that those who have most to lose by the prevalence of the latter among a voting and tax-laying people, are most interested in the dissemination of the former.

And, sir, in thus providing these means it may be that we are entertaining an angel unawares—it may be that we shall be engaged in rearing a bulwark against the ignorance of the descendants of the rich. How immeasurably would it add to the sum total of human happiness, in any given organized municipality, for each individual to know that the main-spring of that organization, secured his offspring against that frightful train of vices, of which ignorance is the common parent.

Sir, in the long exercise of the healing profession, it has been my misfortune often to be compelled to perform the sadly soothing rites of Æsculapius over the dying pillow of the parent of a numerous and helpless offspring. 'Tis then, ere tottering reason forsakes forever its crumbling throne, that the observer sees man as he is, as God fashioned him for his own wise purposes. 'Tis there alone can he be studied, unassociated with the hopes, the fears, the ambition, the patriotism, the heroism, the daring, the world, and all that for which the world struggles with wary, sleepless energy; these, one by one, fade from the kaleidoscope of his mental vision as death approaches, until but one sole, absorbing passion remains of that huge bundle of which he is composed, in the pride of his health and the pomp of his power, and that is a love of his offspring, blended in harmonious union, with a single desire, that they may be saved from the vices of an immoral world, and fitted for a felicitous association with redeemed and kindred spirits in the home of a common father.

'Tis in that dread hour that poverty is felt in all of its biting and blasting force, because the sufferer feels that he leaves nothing to secure his children against the world's vices. Had his country, in the exercise of an enlarged philanthropy, provided means for the education of his children, and thus secured them against the grosser immoralities of a wicked world, oh how it would have soothed and supported his departing spirit, and smoothed his passage to the grave!

Was patriotism not an instinct, as it is, it were impossible for one to feel much love for a country that could thus coldly neglect its beggared orphans. Surely nothing were better calculated to fan and enlarge that noble instinct than a permanent provision to foster, to protect, to educate, the whole people of the country.

Let it not be said it cannot be done; for whatever man has done, man can do, and we know that in many of the sovereignties of this proud confederacy this has been done, and an education secured to all, and there, whatever remorse or regret may haunt the dying father, this suffocating night-mare, of children grown up in ignorance and vice, which makes death hideous, is at least removed.

It has been said, and a truer observation was never made, that the people are more generous than those who represent them; and the true reason of this is not to be sought for in the abstract parsimony of the representatives, but in the fact that the representative feels that he is, in making appropriations, operating upon funds not his, and therefore that he ought to consult rigid economy. But the people operate on their own, and are always generous. We have every reason to believe that the people of this great state desire a well regulated system of free schools. In every way in which the question has been tested, they have so decided; and even when the question was put to them by the legislature, whether or no they were so much in love with the contemplated system as to vote a direct tax upon themselves for its maintenance, they voted aye with great promptness and unanimity. It is true the tax was small, but it was all that they were required to lay, and it ought not to be doubted that it would have been quadrupled with the same generous promptness if it had been required of them.

Sir, we ought not to hope to raise a fund so large by legislative legerdemain, as that the bare interest would suffice for the accomplishment of this great and generous object. It cannot be done. The committee on education have reported that the school fund amounting now to $1,350,491 75, should be consecrated to educational purposes, and remain a perpetual fund, and that the interest thereof alone should be employed. All over this, required for this great and humane object, must be raised by a tax upon the property of the commonwealth, for it is manifestly utopian to hope to raise it in any other way.

I have shown that if we secure what we have, it will be sufficient to keep a complete system of free schools in operation for nearly five months in every year. This is not so long by a month, as I would have desired; but as the property of the commonwealth is constantly increasing and the number of school houses will remain stationary, in a few years the same tax will enable the schools to be kept open an additional month. I have not entered upon details—it is not my province. I have desired to show that it was entirely practicable; and it is my honest conviction that the people desire that a system of free schools should be fixed in the constitution. It has been the fashion of gentlemen in this hall to volunteer prognoses as to what would gain votes for the new constitution, or militate against its reception by the people. But, sir, let these hundred chosen delegates go home and tell the anxious thousands that will greet their return, that a part of our labors here, insures to the descendants of this land of heroes and of song, the keys to the temple of knowledge. That henceforth, under the new organization, schools are to spring up in every neighborhood, and to be as free as the gush of waters from the mountain rock. In the beautiful language of my friend from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,)—who is indeed imbued with the spirit of the beautiful—that they will arise like fire-flies at summer sunset, giving life and hope to each other—light to the young, hope to the middle-aged, and consolation to the old. That their light will discover the monster “————— of such hideous mien, Which to be hated needs but to be seen,” and exterminate him.

Tell them that the mountains and the valleys and the plains of this heavenly heritage are to be studded with school houses, which like the temples of the living God, are to be free to all, without money and without price.

Tell the children of the poor and unfortunate that hope, heretofore, that mystic shadow of good, which receded as they advanced, and whose home was the fabled terminus of the rainbow has been made to receive substantive proportions, and to become a smiling reality.

Tell them that fountains of living water have been opened up, in which the budding desire for knowledge may lave its thirst, and where all are invited to come and partake freely. Let this be told them sir, and a voice redolent of thanksgiving and benediction will go up from half a million of the best of our people, to the God of the widow and the fatherless.

Sir, I endorse every word of the following, from a deep thinker and pungent writer: “We should make no distinctions, but the banner of education should be proudly unfurled

“Like the wild winds free,” allowing all alike to enjoy its advantages. The child of the woodland cottage, and that of the princely mansion should, if possible, be educated together, that all might have an equal opportunity of rising to eminence and fame. It is a cardinal principle of republicanism that there is no royal road to distinction; it is held to be accessible to all—none are born to command or to obey. In the order of nature God has made no distinctions; he has not provided for the poor a coarser earth, a thinner air, or a paler sky. The same glorious sun pours down its golden flood as cheerily upon the poor man's home as the rich man's palace. The cottager's children have as keen a sense of all the freshness, verdure, fragrance, melody and beauty of luxuriant nature, as the pale sons of the wealthy. Neither has he stamped the imprint of baser birth upon the poor man's child than that of the rich, by which it knows with a certainty that its lot is to crawl, not to climb. Mind is immortal. It is imperial. It bears no mark of high or low, of rich or poor; it heeds no bounds of time or place, of rank or circumstance. It requires but light.” Yes, sir, it requires but light. The delicate mechanism of intellection is but a series of mental processes. In the educated brain they are combined in wondrous harmony and multiplied to infinity; and systematized thought is the result of their operations. Thought, that mysterious essence which connects man with the spirit world, has its laws, to which it is as obedient as is the lightning, in obedience to its laws, in bearing the messages of man, by a flash, across the continent. The latter is an illustration of the former, and the former suggested the latter. If thought, when disciplined, was capable of planning mighty deeds, and a complicated system of means which pointed prophetically to their achievement, why should not its type in the physical world, which had, when untrained, but shown the omnipotence of its power in the desolation that marked its path. So, also, the thoughts of man, which were evil continually, when unsubdued and unchastened by educational discipline sought, glory in the desolation of the works of his fellow-man and of God. But the latter, under the ameliorating influences of education, found increased power for good, with diminished desire for evil, and, perhaps, attained its acme in discovering the laws of its great physical type, and compelling it, in obedience to them, to become subservient to man's uses. And that mighty and terrific power, whose appalling displays the ancients confided to Jupiter, the chief of their gods, and of whom their greatest poet sung, “— ah qui res hominumque Deumque Aeternis regis imperiis, et fulmine terras,” is now, by educated mind, disarmed of its terror, and made to bear soft messages of love from absent swain to the confiding, anxious heart of his lady love, in another and far distant commonwealth.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I barely desire to explain the amendment which I have offered, and I return the gentlemen who have so ably and so nobly advocated the cause of education my thanks. I subscribe in the main to all that has been said, or can be said, in favor of the necessity and the importance of such a duty.

Some of the expressions of the gentleman from Campbell might perhaps have been somewhat softened, because they seem to imply that all gentlemen who differ with him, fall within his universal condemnation.

There is no substantial difference between the amendment I offer and the second clause of the report. I go with the committee, and every friend of education on this floor, to set apart and dedicate the fund for educational purposes, which has either been accumulated by taxation, or which was originally set apart by the law of 1837. A part of this fund is composed of the interest on the bank stock, when interest was paid on the bonds. As the fund accumulated, the system went into operation, the commissioners of the sinking fund having charge of it at first, and the commissioners of the school fund vested the interest accruing from the $850,000, in the purchase of bank stock in our own state. Hence, there is the item of $73,000 bank stock

There has been levied by the approbation of the people, two cents upon a hundred dollars, which constitutes a part of the school fund.

What does the amendment which I propose contemplate? It is, that the fund which has been collected, the $850,000, the $73,000 of bank stock, and any other and every other fund which may be collected for educational purposes, shall be devoted by the legislature to that object, and when so devoted, it shall remain secure, and be appropriated to no other purpose or object than the diffusion of a general system of education. When we have thus secured the fund, and provided, as in the latter clause of the committee's report, that the superintendent of the school system shall be elected by the people, I propose then by my amendment, to leave that fund to the legislature, to be directed, regulated, and disbursed as may seem best to that body for the purposes for which it was set apart.

If I understand the report of the committee, it is, that while they do the same thing which I propose, they make it obligatory upon the legislature to establish and keep in existence this system throughout the commonwealth. If that is complied with, taxation will be necessarily involved in it to the extent stated by my friend from Logan, (Mr. Bowling,) or nearly to that extent. I am unwilling to impose that on the legislature. I would leave that to the tax paying power in the commonwealth. The amount of this income now is wholly inadequate to establish a system of common schools throughout the length and breadth of this commonwealth, and the legislature must adopt such a plan as will invite to the support and aid of the fund local contributions, by a system such as they have in New York, and in some other northern and eastern states. I know that in some states the whole fund is furnished.

If you will secure the fund, and allow the counties adopting the provisions submitted to them from time to time, to appropriate whatever may be distributed to them, and others who do not wish to appropriate their proportion to have it reinvested, you will do all that our means will allow at present, and all that our constituents have a right to expect of this convention. But if you adopt the whole report of the committee, you impose necessarily the duty upon the legislature, from which they cannot escape, to put into operation this system within five years after the adoption of this constitution.

I offer no hostility to education in my amendment, for I appeal to the zeal I manifested originally in setting apart the sum of $850,000. But I am unwilling to impose the taxation which must be imposed, to put this in operation in five years.

Then the convention adjourned.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1849.

CORRECTION AND EXPLANATION.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If the convention will indulge me for a moment, I shall be glad to have an opportunity of correcting an error which has by a very easy mistake crept into the report of our proceedings. Had there been any other mode of making the correction I would certainly have adopted it; but the debates having been transferred to the volume of reports before I discovered the error, it is now too late to make the correction in any other way than by a note. When the resolution of the gentleman from Henderson was under consideration, the other day, in which it is declared that "absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen exists nowhere in a republic," I was necessarily absent, being called to other duties. I was not present when the vote was taken. The reporter has ascribed to me a remark made by my kinsman, Mr. R. N. Wickliffe. I do not disclaim the sentiment, but if any credit is due for it, I wish it to be ascribed to the right source.

While I am up I will take the liberty of saying that I should have voted against that section, had I been present, for two reasons—first, because a mob, however large it may be, has no right to take away my property, and therefore there was no necessity for declaring this principle in the constitution; and secondly, if that section means what some of the gentlemen say it means, I should have voted against it, because I do not agree with the position which they take. I hope the correction will be made.

COMMITTEE OF REVISION

Mr. MOORE said he was directed by the committee on revision and arrangement of the articles of the constitution to ask leave to sit during the session of the house.

Leave was granted accordingly.

CODIFICATION OF LAWS, PRACTICE, AND PLEADINGS.

Mr. MAYES moved a reconsideration of the vote, by which the convention adopted the reports of the committee on miscellaneous provisions, with the view of moving a reconsideration of the vote by which the convention adopted the section, offered by the gentleman from Ballard and McCracken, (Mr. Gholson,) to appoint commissioners to codify the law.

In order to act upon that subject at once he moved to dispense with the rule by which a motion to reconsider was required to lie over for one day.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT stated the question to be on the motion to reconsider the vote, adopting the report of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT then stated the question to be on the vote adopting the latter clause of the section.

Mr. MAYES. Mr. President, together with many other gentlemen, I voted for the adoption of the article offered by the gentleman from Ballard, as an additional section to the report of the committee on miscellaneous provisions. I gave this vote without having given to the subject much reflection, and I suppose others supported it, regarding it as a matter of but little consequence. I have, since the adoption of that section thought somewhat upon the subject and am satisfied that the vote by which the latter branch of the section was adopted, should be reconsidered and even should the first part of the section be retained, which I am sure should not be done, that part ought unquestionably to be rejected. I therefore move a reconsideration of that vote. The first part of the section provides that the legislature shall at its first session after the adoption of the constitution we are attempting to make, appoint not less than three nor more than five persons learned in the law, to arrange and revise all the statute laws of this state, whether of a criminal or civil character, and sir, that the revised code shall be in plain English. I do not suppose that it is intended that this revised code shall become the law of Kentucky, unless it be first submitted to the legislature for adoption, nor until it be in fact adopted as such by that body, for if these three or five persons are to enact the laws, then we would do well to do away with the legislature altogether, and appoint at once some three persons to enact all such laws as may be necessary for the good government of the state. But sir, why make a constitutional provision declaring it to be the absolute duty of the legislature to do this thing? Has not the legislature now the right to appoint persons to arrange and revise the statutes for re-adoption. It has that right, and has exercised it. That body in time to come will have the same right and will no doubt exercise it if it shall be thought prudent so to do. During the session of 1844-5, I believe it was, two eminent gentlemen, ("learned in the law") Ben. Hardin and Owen G. Cates, Esqs. were appointed by the legislature, to revise and get together the whole law of the state pertaining to its revenue—these gentlemen performed the duty assigned them, and reported the fruit of their labor to the succeeding legislature, of which I had the honor to be a member, for re-adoption.

This report, containing as it did the whole of the revenue law of the state, and having been prepared at the cost of much time and labor, was referred by the house of representatives to the appropriate committee, and was considered in committee, was reported back to the house with that committee's opinion, that the work had been well done; the result, however, was that the legislature declined to act upon it, and it lies now among the matter unacted upon by the legislature. An appropriation, however, was made—and properly too—of three hundred dollars, to pay for the revision of the revenue laws, and was drawn from the treasury. The gentlemen engaged in the work thought it too little. So, I presume, that should this section be retained, the three or five gentlemen must, under it, necessarily be appointed by the legislature, and they must go on and arrange and revise the three large volumes containing our statute laws, and there are session acts undigested since Loughborough's digest was published, sufficient to make a fourth volume perhaps as large as either of the three, and after all this has been done, they are to report the arranged and revised statutes to the legislature, that they may be re-enacted or not, as may be thought best; for I repeat that it surely cannot be intended, that these revised statutes shall constitute the law of Kentucky, unless they first have the sanction of legislative enactment. But, sir, whether this work shall be re-enacted or not, it must be paid for. We had better, I think, count the cost before we place this section permanently in the constitution. I am satisfied that no good will come of it, and the cost will be very considerable. It will no doubt be a lucrative business for the gentlemen "learned in the law" who may receive the appointment; it will certainly be a losing business for our constituents. The legislature has ever had and ever will have the power to revise and arrange the law. There are at all times, gentlemen in that body possessed of high legal attainments, and of such are the committees on the judiciary of both houses usually composed. The second branch of the section is, in my judgment, still more objectionable than the first. It proposes that three persons, learned in the law, shall be appointed to prepare a code of practice for the courts; and these gentlemen are to abridge and simplify the rules of practice, but they are to report to the legislature from time to time, the result of their labors, for its adoption or modification. We all know that the legislature now has, and ever has had the power to abridge and simplify the rules of practice in our courts.

It is here, however, made imperative on the legislature to appoint these persons, and it will become their duty to abridge and simplify the rules of practice; but the legislature may refuse to adopt such rules as they may direct to be observed, or it may modify or change them in any way it may think proper. And these gentlemen are, from time to time, to report their labors to the legislature. This looks to me as if their appointment is to be permanent, and the state is every year to pay them for suggesting to the legislature such changes as they may think should be made in the rules of practice. These suggestions, I apprehend, would cause endless discussion in the legislature, as to the propriety of the changes proposed to be made in the rules of practice—would operate as a constant drain upon the treasury, and would result in no good to our common constituency. I am decidedly in favor of the principle contained in the section, but am satisfied that it cannot, with propriety, be introduced and made part of the constitution. It should be left with the legislature, where it properly belongs. The state should not be compelled to employ, at an enormous expense, some six or seven gentlemen, "learned in the law," to do this service, and still let it be left with the legislature to approve or disapprove it. For, although it may cost the state thousands to have the work done, yet after it has been accomplished, it may, and probably will, be rejected; and the only persons who will have been benefitted by it will be such persons, "learned in the law;" as may receive from the legislature the appointment indicated in the section. I trust, sir, that the vote by which the section was adopted will be reconsidered, and that the section will be rejected, and the state save the heavy, and as I am satisfied, useless cost, which will inevitably result, if it be retained as part of the constitution. I do not know or believe, that the people, our constituents, desire that any such principle be incorporated into the constitution.

Mr. GHOLSON. I regret that the gentleman from Graves should now attempt to impose obstacles to the accomplishment of a work which is so loudly called for. What possible objection can there be to a provision like this? I appeal to the farmers of this body, who know the necessity of a codification of the laws, to sustain it. I appeal to the magnanimity of the lawyers of this house to sustain a provision which is clearly for the benefit of the commonwealth. When I charged it upon the gentleman from Nelson (Mr. Hardin) the other day, that with all his ability he could not find many of the statutes of this commonwealth, he did not deny it then, nor will he do it now. How then can the farmers and common plain citizens be expected to do that which an eminent lawyer admits his inability to do? With respect to the expense to be incurred, to which allusion has been made by the gentleman from Graves, I desire to say that I am willing to pay a proper compensation for the work that may be performed, and so I doubt not are my constituents. It cannot cost a tythe of what the gentleman supposes; but if it does cost it all sir, there is nothing that my constituents will more readily pay for than laws which they can find, and understand when found. And even if the legislature shall, as it is intimated they may, reject the digest that may be prepared, under this provision, we shall have the confidence of our fellow citizens for the attempt we may have made to make the laws plain and intelligible.

I protest against any alteration of this provision. I hope that all foreign and heathenish words will be dispensed with, and that the English language alone will be used. I wish also that every law shall relate but to one subject. Our code of laws will then be readily referred to, and easily understood, and justice may be dealt out equally to all. If it is the desire of gentlemen here that the laws shall be simplified, I trust they will sustain this section. I admit that the retention of this section may militate against the interests of lawyers, but it will enable the plain, unlettered men of the commonwealth to know what are the laws under which they live. Besides this, it will aid the administrator of justice, inasmuch as it will be the means of removing the difficulties under which justices of the peace, and even the judges on the bench, labor in consequence of the many conflicting laws and decisions which now perplex and annoy them, and render justice so uncertain.

Mr. NUTTALL. Chitty I believe is the best writer on pleadings, and if he has not been able to lay down clear, intelligible and useful rules I shall despair of obtaining them from any commission that we may appoint. Eminent as many of our lawyers are, the task will be a herculean one to whoever may undertake it. As to the use of certain Latin words, I am of opinion that they have become so common and so well understood, and are from their use so very expressive, that we had better not interfere with them, and create confusion by the change.

Mr. TRIPLETT. My principal object in rising now is, to correct an error into which the gentleman from Graves appears, unintentionally, to have fallen. I remarked, when this question was before the convention on a former occasion, that I would vote for this resolution. The question is an important one, but in consequence of the previous question being called before the discussion was fairly opened, I had not then an opportunity of saying what I intended.

I do not believe that there are many members of this house who would not agree that the object aimed at is desirable, provided it can be attained without too much expense and labor. But are gentlemen aware, when they vote for that proposition, of the expense and labor it will cost? I will state a fact which is within the knowledge of more lawyers than myself, that the legislature of Louisiana, many years ago, under a clause similar to the one now under consideration, made a contract with Mr. Livingston, one of the most distinguished jurists in the United States, requiring him to prepare a code of practice for that state. Mr. Livingston was engaged in this work for three years. The original contract between him and the commissioners appointed by the legislature, was, that he should perform this duty for the sum of $25,000; but in consequence of the immense labor, and the commissioners being satisfied that the compensation was wholly inadequate to the work which he had performed, and looking also to the probable benefit which the state would derive from that work, they agreed afterwards to give him the additional sum of $15,000; and the legislature ratified that agreement by a majority of four to one. Forty thousand dollars, then, were given for what is now, in Louisiana, called the "Livingston code." He revised, it is true, the civil code.

The gentleman has made some remarks about special pleading. If he supposes that lawyers are more in favor of special pleading than other men, he is greatly mistaken. The great object that all lawyers have in view is to come at the truth. How are you to do it? Can you do it better by the civil code? If you can, take the plan of Mr. Livingston and adopt the civil code.

I will now tell the house what can be done at a very small expense. I would suggest a modification of the clause now under consideration to do away with the difference between chancery and common law proceedings, which can easily be got through with in three or four months. Take now the simplest kind of action—that of assumpsit. For example, A files in court a claim against B for the sum of $500 for goods and merchandise. He calls upon B to say, "did you buy all the property named in that account, and at what price? If you did not buy it all, how much, and what articles did you buy? If you did not buy it at the price therein stated, then at what price did you buy it? If you did not buy it at any specified price, did you buy it with the understanding to pay what it is worth, and, if so, how much is it worth?"

Now, B acknowledges that he bought all the articles, but without a fixed price on all. Very well; take a judgment for that. He acknowledges that he bought all except a pair of boots, which are charged seven dollars, for which he only agreed to pay five. Then you take a judgment so far. Now what would be the result of such a course as this? Why, you save a vast amount of time and expense, and you narrow down the question in dispute to the mere matter of two dollars. I only give this as a sample of the method by which our pleadings might be improved. Do away with the general issue, and require a man to answer to each particular of a bill. You compel the plaintiff to file a bill of particulars, and the defendant to make a statement of how much is true, and how much is not true. Can that be attained under the resolution now suggested? That will depend upon the construction which the legislature may give to the clause. I am inclined to think that the legislature will adopt some similar plan. Surely the gentleman does not intend that we should do away with our whole system of pleadings? I am inclined to think, sir, that if we wish to attain the great ends of justice, they will be much better attained by special pleading than by general pleading.

There is a law now on the statute book called Bob Johnson's law, which was framed especially for the purpose of reaching the ends proposed by the gentleman from Ballard. You cannot frame a broader or a simpler law than this. But has it ever been acted upon? No. Why? Because when it struck out one system of pleading it did not furnish another in its place; and we lawyers are generally safe, practical men.

Now, if I understand the gentlemen correctly, he complains not that the ends of justice are not attained, but that they are attained in a manner unintelligible by the great mass of the people. But, sir, the gentleman will certainly admit that it is better they should be thus attained than not attained at all. If you strike out one plan, give us another, that will be equally as intelligible, and more simple; otherwise you gain nothing by the change. Give us a plan that will answer the purposes of justice, and be more simple than that now in use, and I will go for it, provided that while you simplify the rules of practice, you render them equally certain in their operation. Certainty is more necessary than simplicity; in point of fact, Mr. President, the special pleading of the present day, is done as much as anything for the purpose of saving expense to the litigants, and the time of courts. What do you mean by special pleading? If you take an issue upon a fact, you must set it forth so that a court and jury, and the plaintiff and defendant, may understand what fact is to be tried—how much is admitted, and how much is denied. No man will deny that that end ought to be attained; all admit that it is attained by special pleading. Let the gentleman then take a plain, straightforward course, and leave this matter in the hands of the legislature, whose proper business it is to attend to such a matter as this. I stated when I was on my feet before, that I voted against the second section, because I was afraid that, like the state of Louisiana, the legislature might go to great expense in this matter, which I think is altogether unnecessary.

Mr. TURNER. This is a matter which will never interest me much as a lawyer, as my days of practice are pretty much over; but I do regard this proposition as one of the most mischievous that has yet been brought under the consideration of this convention. The gentleman declines against latin phrases which are common to law books; but I would ask him, has not every art and profession its peculiar technicalities? Does not the doctor label his medicines in a language known only to himself? Does not the house carpenter and the ship builder each use terms peculiar to his vocation, which he alone, as a general rule at least, understands? If the gentleman will read the Bridgewater treatises, he will find in the various branches of science that he must study the technicalities peculiar to each, and he must understand them too, or he cannot understand the science to which they apply.

Something has been said, sir, about revising the code, and putting all law phrases into plain English. The people of New York undertook to do this, and how did they define a writ of ne exeat? Why sir, they said it was a writ of "no go;" (laughter,) and no man understands what "no go" means any better than he understood a "ne exeat."

Language, sir, is in a great measure arbitrary, and we may as well learn the meaning of one word as of another. But I would ask, why should we go down into this little business which the legislature have never descended to? Are we, the great constitution makers of the state of Kentucky, to spend our time here in determining how a man's boots shall be blacked, or in what manner his house should be swept? Sir, if we pass this resolution, we have not the power to carry it into effect. The legislature have all power to do this, and it appears to me that this interference is useless and unnecessary. If ever we are to finish the business of this session, it is time that we refrained from dwelling on these little matters, and set ourselves seriously to work to embody the general principles of the constitution which we are sent here to make.

Mr. STEVENSON. So far from regarding this as a matter of small importance, I think sir, it is a question demanding our serious consideration. We have met to put the ship of state upon a new tack. We have said that the legislature shall meet but once in every two years, and we have confined their duties to the passing only of general laws. We have made great alterations already in the jurisprudence of the state, and I think it is but wise that the question now before us should have the calm consideration of this body, and that with our new courts and new judges, we should have a new code and a new system of practice. One argument that has been used here in opposition to this course, is that it will involve the state in too much expense; but sir, in my opinion, it will not involve half so much expense as the present mode, besides obviating much delay and disappointment. There is a case reported in the papers to-day, which may serve to illustrate this assertion—the case of Graves v Graves. The case is something like this: The man died leaving a will by which he disposed of his property; the wife renounced the will and demanded that the executors should set apart a portion of the property for her benefit. Now, here are lawyers feed at high rates; the cost of witnesses and jury, and all for what? Simply to decide what the rule of law is in such cases. Now, how many hundreds of dollars are often spent in deciding this simple question; and how often do we find the very best judges and lawyers in the land differing most widely on the simple question as to whether one statute has the effect of repealing another.

I have no doubt, many gentlemen recollect a distinguished case from the city of Louisville, in which a suit was instituted for the recovery of a large amount of property. The case was carried to the supreme court of the United States, after having been tried in several of the courts below. The whole question was whether the mayor had the right to take the relinquishment of a feme covert, and the particular point decided by the supreme court, was whether one statute law of Kentucky had repealed another. The supreme court reversed the decisions of several courts here affirming that the law was not repealed; that so much of it only was repealed as was repugnant to the last enactment. I merely mention this to show that in the multiplication of statutes there is great difficulty in determining what the law really is, and hence the necessity of having some competent persons to arrange and classify, and digest our statutes. This is what I understand by the proposition of my friend; and I think there could not be a more appropriate time than the present to take this subject into our serious consideration, engaged as we now are in making a new constitution.

Mr. HAMILTON. A similar resolution to the one now under consideration was introduced by myself, in the early part of the session of this convention; and if I mistake not, one of like import was introduced in the legislature of 1821 or '22, but it fell in the senate, because, as some said, it was unconstitutional, and has never since been revived. Some gentlemen have spoken of what they term the great and enormous expense to be incurred by this revision, and they even go so far as to insinuate that the revisers would be clothed with the power of law-givers. It is unnecessary to combat such a notion as this. All that is asked for is, that they should revise and classify the statutes, and digest them if thought expedient, their labor to be submitted to the legislature for its approval or rejection. It is not going to cost the fearful sum which gentlemen imagine; and when we remember that Tennessee, and Louisiana, and New York (with the exception of the "no go," spoken of by the gentleman from Madison,) have adopted this course, and are enjoying the benefit of the change, surely the consideration of a little expense ought not to deter the state of Kentucky from adopting an arrangement which I do believe will contribute so much to facilitate legal business, and satisfy the community at large.

Mr. GHOLSON. When I introduced this proposition I heard no objection to it. It was so undeniably right, that I did not say a word in its support. I did not expect this stern opposition to it even now. Why the parliament of Great Britain, that country from which all our laws have come, has recently caused the laws of that country to be codified, for which purpose ten judges were appointed, and they are now practicing under their new code, while we adhere to that which is regarded as outlandish, and is discarded in the land of its birth. If it were now in order, I am prepared to remedy the defect in "Bob Johnson's law," to which allusion has been made, by another imperative provision. I am anxious to cause a reform in our present system because I am satisfied that it does obstruct the course of justice. The previous question was moved and cut off several other important provisions that I intended to offer, one of which was that every citizen of this commonwealth should have his cause tried upon its merits, and not be driven out of court, however just his claim, on a mere technicality which has nothing to do with the justice of the case. So exceedingly uncertain is our system of bringing suits and conducting pleadings, that even our best lawyers sometimes differ as to the form in which suits should be brought or pleadings conducted. This is the day of reform. Our sister states have set us a glorious example of legal reform; our constituents expect it, they demand it at our hands, and therefore I appeal to this convention to enforce a thorough reform and improvement of our laws, of our practice, and our pleadings.

Mr. PRESTON. I concur in the object which the gentleman from Ballard seeks to attain. There are only two considerations which ought to influence the house in adopting or rejecting the proposition. If it is right it should be done, and the expense of a few thousand dollars should not deter us, from adopting a plan which would render our legal proceedings more simple, and by which justice might be more cheaply and better administered. This convention should not start back from the sound of the word dollar, as if it were a spectre, to terrify and affright us from effecting a great good.

The codification, sir, of the law, is no new thing. It has been done in many parts of the world, and the advancing wealth and population of countries, and the mutations of civilization, will always render it periodically necessary. Lord Bacon tells us that when laws accumulate so as to render it necessary to revise them and collect their spirit into a new and intelligible system, that those who accomplish it are among the benefactors of mankind. In the profession of law there are two classes. One seeking to make the rules of justice exalted, and their application simple, and the other seeking to involve it in a labyrinth of perplexities. We know that when the laws of Rome became so immensely voluminous that justice was lost in its vast extent of rules, that Justinian directed the compilation of that code, which did more than any other single work, to restore Europe from the darkness of the middle ages, and shed abroad the illumination of legal science, and still forms the basis of European jurisprudence.

Napoleon, when he ruled the destinies of France, ordered that the laws should be codified and digested, and calling to his aid Tronchet, that courageous and illustrious lawyer, who intrepidly defended his monarch when all France declared his doom, and summoning Portalis and other distinguished jurists, entered upon this great undertaking. It was then, sir, that the First Consul, in the sessions held, displayed in the discussions that arose, a power and ability that astonished his associates and added new glory to his illustrious reputation. The code Napoleon was produced—a work that already constitutes the basis of the jurisprudence of more than half of Europe—a work that, as he himself said, will do more to perpetuate his name to posterity, than the ever memorable and brilliant campaigns in northern Italy, and Germany—a work that will survive, when the remembrance of all his victories, shall dwell dimly on the memory of after ages.

The progress of law-reform did not stop here. Lord Brougham, the most renowned orator, and one of the most accomplished jurists and statesmen of England, within the last ten years, undertook to procure in the House of Lords a similar reform. England has found the old and cumbrous forms of administering justice, transmitted from the darkness of the feudal ages, unsuited to the present progress of society, and within that time her code of practice and pleading has been revised, and simplified, and we in Kentucky, at this hour, cling with fondness to a system tinged with feudal barbarism after it has been exploded in the mother country. Statutory enactments and judicial decisions have done something to give it form and symmetry, and adapt it to our wants, but it still retains most of the crude features and barbarous characteristics of its origin.

Louisiana, which adopted the civil law as the basis of its jurisprudence, with great wisdom secured the services of Edward Livingston, in the arrangement of her laws, and what has been the effect? The minds of the jurists of America are gradually turning to the civil law, and they begin to give it the preference to the common law. The common law is not less enlightened than the civil, in the great principles of equity and justice, on which it is founded—is not less noble in morality; but the more simple mode in which justice is administered, the more philosophical apparatus for the application of remedies under the civil law, causes it to gain ground, day by day, upon the common law, which in the end will be destroyed and superseded by it, if it does not allow a simpler and less technical mode of procedure and practice. This has been the main reason of the increasing popularity of the civil law within the last few years, in the Mississippi valley.

In the state of New York, in the year 1846, a feature similar to the one now under consideration was engrafted on its constitution, appointing a commission to report to the legislature such reforms as were necessary in the law. Those gentlemen, who rank among the first jurists in the nation, executed that order. The result of their labors has been adopted by the legislature, and the people have derived the most solid benefits from it. They removed many of the old inconveniences, destroyed many of the old obstructions which clogged the avenues of justice, and have substituted reforms which the people of that state will never relinquish. I have looked at that report, in which the whole present code of procedure and practice does not occupy more than a fourth of the space occupied by one of our volumes of the statutes, and it contains many great and wise alterations; but those alterations are now generally approved, both by the people and the profession. One, which I will give by way of illustration, is a change effected in the law of evidence. In a common law court the plaintiff cannot require the defendant to be sworn as a witness. In a chancery court you can. In both courts the object is the ascertainment of truth. If the rule is right in one case, it should be in the other. Yet a judge in one case regards the proceeding as entirely right, and in the other as entirely wrong. Such is the effect of arbitrary precedent—such its inconsistency. This rule they have destroyed, and the chancery rule, of the right of the litigants to each other's testimony is established in its stead. The rule was an anomaly in reason, and they have abolished it. Many other great and valuable improvements have been made—improvements demanded by the spirit of the age, in accordance with the opinions of the most learned lawyers—in accordance with the wishes of the people, and in accordance with common sense and true philosophy.

In Ohio, this subject has been urged with great zeal, ability, and perseverance, by Judge Walker, an eminent jurist, through the columns of the American Law Journal. And the attention of the legal profession in the west has been urgently and eloquently invoked, for codification and reform, resulting from the necessity which day after day presses itself upon the consideration of the public; and I venture to predict that it will, at no distant day, be carried out in most of the states of the confederacy.

I have said thus much. Mr. President, to describe the progress of law reform in other countries and in the United States, and to show that by the adoption of a provision such as that under consideration, we may attain some of those benefits which other governments have secured. I do not anticipate, however, by such a provision to obtain a panacea for legal difficulties, or strip the law of those technicalities which have prevailed, and will ever prevail in a science so complex. But that is no reason why we should not do all in our power to revise, arrange and simplify it, to make it as accessible as possible to the common understandings of men, and to make the administration of justice as plain as we can. It is desirable to remove the rubbish and set the house in order, though it is scarcely to be expected that it will always remain so. It is for these reasons I advocate the commission, and believe in its utility.

But, sir, the agitation in the convention this morning seems to spring not from a belief in the inutility of the measure, but from an apprehension of its costliness. Now, in my opinion, the mode indicated is not only the best, but greatly the cheapest. We do not propose, as some seem to imagine, to delegate the powers of legislation to these commissioners; but we merely authorize them to report such reforms, in a digested and convenient form, as are proper, for the consideration of the legislature; this report will be subject to legislative sanction or disapprobation. Now, sir, what is the present mode of accomplishing this revision? The legislature is the committee, consisting of one hundred and thirty-eight members and their officers, costing the state six hundred dollars a day, in order to get the contemplated reforms into shape, when a committee such as is proposed, would do the same preliminary work far more skilfully, far more learnedly, and far more efficiently, for about twenty dollars a day. Is it better and cheaper then, for a commission of three men, or one hundred and thirty-eight, to do this preliminary work of revision? I believe that three good commissioners with a clerk, would be amply sufficient: that all the details should be left to the discretion of the legislature, and that provision should be made in this constitution for its commencement and completion.

It is my intention, Mr. President, while I concur in the object, to vote for a reconsideration of the question, but merely for the purpose of curing some objections in the details of the provision, as it at present stands, and not for the purpose of assailing the principle it asserts.

Mr. MAYES. I am not yet convinced that the section should form part of our constitution. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question of reconsideration.

The yeas and nays were taken, and were yeas 46, nays 44.

YEAS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Luther Bawner, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Benjamin Copelin, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Selucius Garfield, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, Jas. W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams—46.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, William C. Bullitt, William Chennault, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, James W. Irwin, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Albert G. Talbott, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—44.

So the latter clause of the section was reconsidered.

Mr. MAYES moved to reconsider another and kindred branch of the same provision, which was not reached by the vote just taken.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE was anxious that this clause should be reconsidered, although he had voted against the reconsideration of the other. He desired it to be reconsidered, that two or three words might be stricken from it, which, if they were retained, might embarrass the commissioners to be appointed under it. The section was designed to provide that the commissioners should strike out all technical terms from our laws and our pleadings. He was of opinion that words more intelligible could not be used. He inquired what term could be substituted for "replevin?" What would be so expressive?

Mr. GHOLSON undertook to find terms in the English language that would answer every purpose, or they might hang him as high as Haman.

The question was then taken on reconsidering the other clause, and the result was—yeas 46, nays 44.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chennault, Benjamin Copelin, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Ninian E. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, William Preston, John T. Robinson, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—46.

NAYS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Bawner, William C. Bullitt, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Howard Todd, John Wheeler, Silas Woodson—44.

So the convention agreed to reconsider the entire section.

Mr. TRIPLETT then moved to amend by striking out "three nor more than five," and inserting "not more than three persons." The object of the amendment was to limit to three the number of commissioners to be appointed.

Mr. GHOLSON said he had no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. TRIPLET then moved to strike out the words "which shall be in plain English." Many terms in common use had become the baptismal names of things. He defied the mover of this section to provide names for writs more appropriate and expressive. The gentleman from Ballard and McCracken said he could not understand the terms that were used. Well, let him go into a doctor's shop, and he would not be able to understand the labels. Why were such terms used? Because they were expressive of that which would require a long sentence to express in any other way. Writs take sometimes the two first words as their name—for instance, ne exeat and non assumpsit. You may say for the latter, "I did not assume," but that would not be sufficient. You must say, "I did not assume to pay the debt," &c., and that becomes a long sentence. It will be much better to retain these technicalities, which are well understood, than to risk greater evil in attempting to find a remedy for the existing evil, if evil it is.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. And if you dispense with the word "replevin," which is well understood, you must say, "an action to take property from the defendant and give it to the plaintiff."

Mr. TAYLOR suggested that gentlemen should prepare a glossary to accompany law books, to explain unusual terms after the fashion of the glossary that accompanied Burns' Poems. He also stated that when he resided in Indiana, a young lady called upon a judge to commence a suit for her, and she said she wished him to issue a "writ of disappointment." (Laughter.) Doubtless the word came from her heart.

Mr. GHOLSON. I regret, sir, that it is necessary for me to consume further the valuable time of this body. As to the applicability of the insinuation of the gentleman from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) that being incapable of reaching up to the law, I am therefore attempting to bring it down to me, I leave others to judge. The reference of the gentleman from Mason, (Mr. Taylor,) to Burns' glossary, reminds me sir, of a saying of that inimitable author, which I will repeat for the general benefit of all concerned, and my humble self in particular. It runs thus:

"Oh wad some Pow'r the giffie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
And foolish notion;
What airs in dress an' gait wad lea'e us,
And ev'n Devotion!"

Often, sir, have I put up this petition, and could I now see myself as others see me in this house, I doubt not it would be of great service to me, and perhaps, sir, a like of themselves might, for aught I can say, be of some small service to other honorable gentlemen on this floor. It might have cut short many speeches and saved much valuable time in debate here. Perhaps, sir, even now, I might be silent. But Mr. President, although I know I am not an interesting speaker, (and few farmers are,) yet I do not feel disposed to remain silent, whether I am the sole guardian of the farmers or not, and let this important measure be mutilated or defeated. The remarks of the gentlemen of the bar show whence this opposition in reality springs. It is not the expense alone. No sir, this is the ostensible, but not the real cause; no sir, far from it. It is the effect, (as shown by the remarks of honorable gentlemen,) which they see this is to have upon that darling pet of the profession, "special pleading." It is I fear, because it seeks the abolition of that fruitful source of profit to the lawyers, and intolerable expense to all other classes of society, that causes it to be so violently opposed here by most of that class of the delegates. I did not propose, sir, in the clause as presented and adopted, to do away all outlandish phrases in pleading, as the section itself will show, the first part of it is as follows:

"At its first session after the adoption of this constitution, the general assembly shall appoint not less than three nor more than five persons learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to revise and arrange the statute laws of this state, both civil and criminal, so as to have but one law on any one subject, all of which shall be in plain English."

The second reads thus:

"And also three other persons learned in the law, whose duty it shall be to prepare a code of practice for the courts in this commonwealth, both civil and criminal, by abridging and simplifying the rules of practice and law, in relation thereto, all of whom shall report, &c."

From this it will be seen most clearly, that the laws only, and not both laws and pleadings that are to be in "plain English." I knew full well, sir, that it would not do to ask the lawyers in this body to do their pleadings in a plain, common sense, truthful English style. I knew they would not give up their fictions, falsehoods, and to all but themselves, unintelligible lingo. Hence all that I asked for was that the laws should be in "plain English."

I ask sir, who can object to this that does not intend to keep the people in ignorance of what the laws really are? I ask, emphatically ask gentlemen who propose to strike out this provision, why they do it? Why it is that they will present to the common farmer or mechanic, a law which, as an officer he must be called upon to administer, in a language which he does not, cannot understand? The thing is unjust and unreasonable, and can have no other effect (and for this it is intended,) but to produce erroneous decisions which lawyers will get fees to reverse. It is the interest of all others but lawyers, that the laws should be plain and easily understood. That justice shall in all cases be done in the first instance. It is their interest that justice be not done, that litigation be multiplied and increased, that the laws shall be doubtful, dark, mysterious, and uncertain, this sir, is their meat and their drink; from this source it is that they amass their princely fortunes. But sir, the day of retribution is at hand, a spirit of reform is abroad in the land. Some of our sister states have wiped these foul blots from their statute books, and God speed the day when Kentucky; my glorious old mother commonwealth; shall rise in her majesty, shake off the iron shackles which were forged in the dark days of feudalism and are now imposed by lawyer craft, and take her own true, proud, and republican stand along side of New York and Missouri. Sir, I have said it elsewhere and I repeat it here, that the object and inevitable effect of the present mode of pleading, and the rules of evidence is to narrow down the case and prevent justice from being done. From the moment a case is docketed in court, the whole object of the lawyers on both sides, is to get the advantage in pleading, narrow down the case, exclude testimony, and prevent justice being done. So uncertain are the distinctive lines that mark the difference between trespass, and trespass on the case, and between common law and chancery suits, that the best lawyers in the land, are often at a loss, and bring their suits wrong. This is notorious, it is undeniably true sir, and yet honorable gentlemen, sensible men, oppose "legal reform." Again sir, a plaintiff's own witness, when showing as clear a case of wrong as words can show, often drive him out of court with all the bill of costs to pay; and for what sir, not because he has not been wronged, not because justice is not on his side, but because some old British form had not been complied with, or because an ignorant or inattentive lawyer had misapplied one of the various outlandish phrases by which suits at law are designated. And does these things need no reform sir? How long are we to bear these impositions? For one sir, in the name of the sixteen hundred freemen who sent me here, against their longer continuance I solemnly protest. These various forms of actions, these metaphysical distinctions between those forms, together with the various arbitrary and senseless rules of evidence, stand like driftwood in the channel of what should be the pure stream of justice. They pollute its limped waters. They obstruct its current. Nay, sir, they often turn it back and cause it to flow the wrong way. These things sir, destroy the confidence of the people in the courts of the country. To the common citizen, when he enters a circuit court all is as dark as the gloom of midnight; he neither does nor can comprehend what is going on before him. Ask for a reformation of these things, and what is the reply? It is, touch not the wisdom of a thousand years. Yes, sir, 'tis the wisdom of a thousand years devoted to the up-building of lawyer craft; to the manufacture of hair splitting and undefinable legal distinctions that have no common sense in them, that never was intended to, never did, never will, nor never can promote and facilitate the administration of justice.

Take for instance, the case above stated. The plaintiff, after having paid out an amount equal to the sum in controversy, he has a new suit to begin, and the same chances to run over again, in order to get justice, if perchance he ever does. And this, sir, is the glorious system of jurisprudence which honorable gentlemen on this floor advocate. This is the aggregate wisdom of a thousand years of which gentlemen boast, and which they would make us believe cannot be improved; and this, sir, is that glorious, nay, sir, venerated system upon which honorable gentlemen will admit of no innovation, and which they seek to fasten down and perpetuate upon a people, that some at least of those same legal gentlemen are wont to tell us are the most talented, patriotic, chivalrous, high-toned souls, that the sun ever shined upon in this "Land of the free and home of the brave."

Yes sir, high-toned they are, and chivalrous they be, their mettle is up, their watch-cry is reform, and they will cease not until the last vestige of these out-landish phrases, these legal forms, fictions and falsehoods are swept from our statute books, disowned by all true-hearted Kentuckians, and our courts become in reality, what they are now only in name, courts of justice.

Mr. MERIWETHER suggested that if the words proposed to be stricken out were retained, the words "as far as practicable," should be inserted.

Mr. PRESTON and Mr. TRIPLETT briefly explained.

Mr. APPERSON thought they had wasted much time on this subject. It was a matter that might have been acted upon by the legislature, and yet from 1792 to 1849 it had been passed by; and why then had it become necessary that it should now be put in the constitution? He moved the previous question.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. GHOLSON called for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out the words "which shall be in plain English," and they were yeas 45, nays 43.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, Wm. K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Wm. Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, Jno. L. Waller, Andrew S. White, C. A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—45.

NAYS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Wm. Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Thos. Rockhold, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Henry Washington, Jno. Wheeler, Wesley J. Wright—43.

So the words were stricken out.

The question then recurred on the re-adoption of the section.

A division was called for, and the first branch was adopted.

Mr. MAYES called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the second branch, and they were yeas 48, nays 40.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie) William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, William C. Bullitt, William Chenault, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Selucius Garfield, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelly, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Chas. A. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—48.

NAYS—Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, Jas. S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Cope- lin, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Ninian E. Gray, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lash- brooke, Thomas W. Lisle, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh New- ell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Johnson Price, James W. Stone, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Squire Turner, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Silas Woodson—40.

So the second branch was agreed to.

The report as amended was again adopted.

SPECIFIC AMENDMENT.

Mr. KAVANAUGH offered the following res- olution:

"Resolved, That reason and experience teach that every constitution should be subject to some mode of specific amendment: That the consti- tution, now being formed by this convention, should contain a clause providing for specific amendments on all subjects but that of slavery; and that said clause should be submitted, sepa- rately, to a vote of the people at the same time the constitution itself is voted upon."

Mr. KAVANAUGH. A single word of ex- planation. I and the constituency I have the honor to represent, are in favor of specific amendments to the constitution, and when can- vassing that subject before them, I took no dis- tinction between slave property and any other kind of property, because I believed all would be perfectly safe under that mode of amend- ment, and am still of that opinion. It is now obvious, however, that no specific clause of amendment can pass the convention which will authorize any change in the constitution, unless the subject of slavery be excluded. Seeing that a general clause for specific amendments, not even with the proper guards cannot pass, I have submitted the subject in a qualified form, being willing to take a specific clause in that form, sooner than not have it at all. If I cannot get all that I am for, I will take all that I can get.

As a number of other resolutions have been submitted on the same subject, I should have offered none myself, if any of them had con- tained one of the propositions in those I have had the honor to submit; and that is to submit a specific clause for a direct vote of the people, at the same time of submitting the constitution. I admit that the people seem to have decided against any mode of specific amendments in all matters touching the subject of slavery, but I deny that they have so decided as to that part of the constitution not concerning slavery. Hence it is, that I am for a direct vote of the people on that subject, and have submitted the resolutions for the consideration of the conven- tion with that view.

He moved that it be laid on the table for future consideration and printed.

The motion was not agreed to.

The resolution was then passed over for the present.

EDUCATION.

The convention again resumed the considera- tion of the report of the committee on edu- cation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think the proposi- tion of the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe,) is sufficiently specific. I desire that this convention shall, by the constitution, adopt such a provision as will clearly recognize the school fund which is in existence, as a fund for common school purposes; and I wish it to do that in a way that shall definitely point out what it is.

The proposition of the gentleman from Nelson does not embrace all the funds that belong to the board of education, and therefore I wish to offer a substitute, which I apprehend will meet the views of the gentleman from Nelson. My proposition will be a substitute for the whole bill of the committee; and if it should be adopt- ed, and the three sums set forth in the first sec- tion of this article shall be clearly and definite- ly recognized by this convention as a fund to be set apart for the purposes of education in Ken- tucky, I shall be willing to leave further action to the legislature.

The PRESIDENT informed the gentleman from Bourbon that his amendment was not yet in order.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE briefly explained his amendment, and vindicated the legislature from the imputations which had been cast upon it in relation to this school fund.

Mr. T. J. HOOD. I introduced the resolution requiring the appointment of a committee on the educational fund, and had the honor of being placed upon that committee, as one of the ar- dent friends of common schools; but owing to cir- cumstances beyond my control, I was prevent- ed from meeting and consulting much with that committee while making up this report, and I do not concur altogether in its details, yet its general principles meet my entire approbation. It was my good fortune, or my foible, to have taken my seat in this body, impressed with a deep, strong sense of the propriety and importance of more securely establishing and protecting the fund heretofore set apart for common school purposes —of throwing about it that constitutional secu- rity and sanctity which seemed necessary to render it effectual in accomplishing the high purposes to which it was originally dedicated. The policy of establishing free or common schools throughout the state, which should be accessible to the children of all classes of society, has taken a strong hold upon the feelings and affections of that portion of the citizens of Kentucky whom I have the honor to represent; and they testified their solicitude for the success of the enterprise by an almost unanimous vote for the two cents additional tax in aid of the school fund. So I shall feel authorized in lending my feeble assistance to every proposition which has for its object the security and protection of that fund, and the building up of an enlarged and liberal system of common schools in this state. The scheme of educating all the children of the country by means of such a system of schools is certainly a most magnificent one, and peculiarly marks the progress of the age in morals and in civilization. One, which if carried into successful operation, would contribute more, perhaps, than any other, to the advancement of the prosperity and true glory of our country. For I regard a development of the moral energies and intellectual resources of a people as conducing, far more to the purity and preservation of civil liberty than any other single enterprise, and productive of more true happiness and contentment to society at large.

In reference to education generally, as it affects the happiness of man in his individual capacity, I need not detain this house. I need not speak of the agreeable relaxation it affords from the perplexing cares and toils of business life, or fashionable dissipation. I need not speak of the consolation—the pure and elevated enjoyments to be derived from it when the dearest affections of the heart are wounded or depressed by adversity. The character of this body renders it unnecessary that I should dwell on these merits. Besides, I am persuaded that an enterprise like that shadowed forth in the report of the committee, which embraces within its comprehensive policy the social happiness—the civil and political well-being of all classes of society—will commend itself to the favorable consideration of this convention upon far more disinterested and patriotic grounds. Sir, what is this scheme, and what great ends do we propose accomplishing by it? It is one which seeks the amelioration of the condition of the rising generation—those who shall come after us to supply our places in all the varied relations of life. It seeks to enlarge their minds, to liberalize their sentiments, and to elevate them to a just appreciation of the true dignity and privileges of freemen. But there is another idea connected with this matter, which, it appears to me, must strike the mind of every delegate on this floor. Sir, we are about embarking on a system of universal elections. Those who shall hereafter fill all the various offices of government—those who shall exercise authority over the people—must be such as the virtue and intelligence of the people shall select. Is not the general diffusion of knowledge among the people then, an essential pre-requisite to the safe and discreet exercise of this high privilege? I maintain that it is. And could the curtain of the future be raised—and the veiled pages of our country's undeveloped history be revealed to our visions—the political convulsions—the conflicts and struggles of factions—the triumphs, disasters, and mutations of policy, that must, and will arise under this new order of things—we should, in my opinion, clearly see that the future prosperity and happiness of our common country must depend upon the supremacy of reason—upon the general diffusion of virtue and intelligence, not only among a chosen few—the favored sons of fortune and of birth—but among that vast multitude who will hold in their hands, all the prerogatives of power. Sir, this universal elective system which I came here prepared to support, and which a decided majority of this body have concurred in adopting, is fraught with much of good or of evil to our state; and which of these shall preponderate, will depend upon the prudence, the discretion, and the purity with which these privileges are exercised. If we would insure the success of this experiment, we must furnish every possible facility to our citizens for exercising them aright. Sir, in an arbitrary or despotic government, where the people neither make the laws, nor are permitted to select those who legislate, the general diffusion of knowledge is not essential to the preservation of peace; but in republican governments, where the people fill all the branches or offices of government, their peace, liberty, and prosperity hang upon their intelligence and virtue. Who then are interested in the dissemination of knowledge among all classes of society through some system of general education? Are they merely those whose poverty affords no other means of acquiring it? Surely not; but every citizen who would preserve the institutions of his country pure and unimpaired. So, sir, I maintain that the true policy of every republican government requires the establishment of some such system. What is the leading idea in the theory of republicanism? It is based upon the presumed equality of all its citizens. And the true policy of such a government aims at the realization of that idea in its practical operations—the exemplification of that civil and political equality among its citizens, by opening up the road to professional or political preferment, to genius and merit however humble in its origin. It invites and encourages the bantling of the hovel to consecrate the energies of his mind to the attainment of eminence and distinction no less than the pampered cion of the palace. It holds the pride of birth and the arrogance of wealth as despicable distinctions when brought in competition with true nobility of heart or virtuous elevation of character and sentiment. Without any invidious distinctions, its comprehensive policy invites all to enter the arena, it proscribes none—but encourages all by diffusing, as far as practicable, equal opportunities to all, and honor's merit, wherever displayed, according to the degree of its excellence. Such sir, is the genius of republicanism—such the perfections of its theory—and yet its golden promises will vanish phantom-like, and cheat our fondest hopes unless guided, sustained and invigorated by a sound wholesome public sentiment. How shall that healthy public sentiment be engendered and kept alive? It can only be done by the diffuson of virtue and intelligence among the people. But according to the auditor's report, a large number of our citizens have not the means of acquiring an education. Public policy then dictates the establishment of a liberal system of common schools sustained at the public expense, that shall be accessible to the children of this class of citizens.

Now, I appeal to every gentleman upon this floor, if the permanent success of the constitution we are about adopting, does not depend upon the intelligence and moderation of the people? We are about confiding, or as the more popular phrase has it, restoring to them all the powers of sovereignty. We are about entrusting to every citizen alike equal rights and privileges in the appointment of all the agents of government. These are high and responsible powers—upon the judicious and discreet exercise of which the future purity and prosperity of our institutions depend. Should we not therefore, along with this surrender of all power back into their hands, also furnish them with every possible facility for exercising it with safety to themselves and to the country?

Sir, this project of common schools has taken a much stronger hold upon popular feeling than some gentlemen seem disposed to think. And I believe, when we shall have once thoroughly embarked in the prosecution of it, public sentiment will exhibit a loftiness of tone, alike worthy of the enterprise and creditable to the state. But gentlemen pretend that we are not authorized, by any expression of the people, in incorporating any provision on the subject in the constitution. I would ask what clearer indication of popular feeling can they demand, than is to be found in the overwhelming majority who voted for the two cents additional tax in aid of the school fund? Near thirty-seven thousand majority of our citizens, by that vote, showed their willingness to progress with this work. All they ask at our hands is some guaranty that the voluntary tax which they impose upon themselves shall not be diverted to any other purpose. And I have no doubt but that an equal majority would submit to a much greater tax—ay, to five times the amount of that tax—rather than see so noble an enterprise abandoned, if they could but be assured that it would be faithfully applied, and would come back in the blessings of education to their children.

Yet we are gravely told, by the senior gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) that if we adopt any provision rendering the school fund permanent and secure, and the proceeds of the school tax inviolable, it will defeat the constitution before the people. Sir, I cannot believe it. I cannot believe that a mere act of good faith on the part of the state, towards its poor children, in securing to them the enjoyment of that fund,—not one dollar of which was ever collected from a citizen of Kentucky,—or of that school tax which their fathers have paid for their benefit, will ever drive the citizens of this magnanimous old commonwealth from the support of our constitution. I cannot believe that the incorporation of a provision, so deeply affecting the interests and happiness of the rising generation, will ever endanger our work in the hands of the fathers and relatives of those children. On the contrary, I believe that a provision of this character would recommend our constitution to the confidence and patronage of a generous constituency, and would give strength and favor to it beyond that of any other single proposition.

We are also admonished by that same gentleman, and others upon this floor, to leave the school fund, and the proceeds of the school tax, to the guardian care and tender mercies of the legislature. Sir, the experience of some eleven years has demonstrated to the people of Kentucky the necessity of placing that fund upon more elevated grounds, and of securing it against that rapacious spirit of legislation which has not hesitated to lay violent hands upon it, whenever an emergency seemed to require a prostitution of its means. Besides, a rumor has gotten out, and obtained some credence among the people, that once upon a time, certain school bonds were burned by order of that same legislature, without any sufficient reason ever having been assigned to the country for the act; and that the interest upon that fund has frequently been permitted to accumulate for years, without any provision having been made either to secure or pay it; while at the same time the whole school system has been crippled and retarded in its usefulness for the want of adequate means. So, sir, the public have lost confidence in the stability or efficiency of a system which depends for a support, from year to year, upon the pleasure of a vacillating legislature. The people have now voluntarily imposed upon themselves a tax in aid of the school fund, and demand that high constitutional guarantees shall be given for the faithful application of its proceeds. Justice requires that these should be afforded, in as much as it would be a flagrant violation of the faith of the state, and a gross fraud upon the citizens, to divert this tax to any other purpose.

But as a last argument by the learned gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) against any constitutional provision, securing and establishing the school fund heretofore set apart, we are met with the startling announcement that there is no school fund; that at most it is but a debt which the state owes to herself, and which she may at any time cancel; that the money has all been expended, and so, in truth, and in fact, there is no school fund. That is, when the argument is analyzed and translated into plain english, (about which we have heard so much to-day,) we are to be told that the dedication of $850,000, some years ago, to common school purposes, and its subsequent investment in state bonds, bearing interest, so that the fund might become productive, and the schools sustained, without trenching upon or destroying the principle, was all a splendid farce, to amuse and delude the people—while the money was being sunk in the bottoms of your rivers, and spread along your roads in various works of internal improvement; and now, sir, when the play is through, and the money all gone, the delusion is to be brushed away, and the eyes of the people to be opened to the fact that there is no school fund. This is a system of specious reasoning which, I trust, the great state of Kentucky will not subscribe to. Sir, those bonds were executed in good faith, and the honor and credit of the state were pledged to their payment, and to the payment of the interest upon them. The character of every citizen is, to some extent, identified with the honor and good faith of the state, and Kentucky will not, in my humble opinion, be true to herself and her past distinguished reputation, if she does not fully redeem the pledge given by these bonds to the poor children of her citizens. She must either pay those bonds or repudiate them. There is no other alternative. If she should choose the latter, then I confess the rising generation will be without a remedy. But what becomes of the fair fame of this good old commonwealth? Sir, Kentucky will not repudiate these bonds or any other honest debts she has ever contracted. Who in this house will rise up in his place and maintain that she should? Repudiation has ever been regarded as odious in her sight. And how infinitely more so would this appear when it is remembered that the poor children within her own borders are the ones who would most deeply suffer from the calamity? So I maintain that there is a school fund—one too secured by the highest of all pledges—the faith of a generous and chivalrous state. It is about this fund, now amounting to upwards of $1,300,000, that the committee propose, by their report, throwing a constitutional mantle, which will perpetuate and protect it against the caprice, extravagance, and incendiaryisms of the legislature: and this report, if adopted, will accomplish that purpose much more effectually than any of the substitutes that have been offered.

But some of the gentlemen who favor the measure, yet find fault with that portion of this report which refers to the tax now paid, or which may hereafter be imposed for school purposes by legislative enactment. They have construed it to prohibit the legislature from removing the present two cents tax, or from repealing any law which may ever hereafter be enacted, imposing further tax for school purposes. They fear, that under it, the present law, and all similar laws hereafter passed, once being placed on the statute book, will be, like the laws of the Medes and Persians—fixed and unalterable—however unnecessary or oppressive they may become. Such, I maintain, is not the fair construction of the report; and such, I am assured by members of that committee, was not their intention. They intended rendering the proceed of the present school tax, and of every similar law which may be passed in future, inviolable for any other purpose, so long as those laws remain in force; but by no means to interfere with the right of the legislature to alter, amend, or abrogate those laws whenever the public good might require it.

The general principles of this report, as I before remarked, meet my cordial approbation. It consecrates and forever establishes the school fund, and places its principal beyond the reach of legislative abuse, while at the same time it secures the faithful application of the interest to the education of the children of all classes of society; giving to each county its fair proportion, according to the number of its children. It likewise sanctifies the proceeds of all laws imposing tax for school purposes, and guaranties its disbursement upon the same equitable principles. These are the great principles for which I contend, and which, if established, will give efficiency and vigor, as well as stability, to the common school system. This being done, public confidence in the success of the enterprise will be restored, and we shall exhibit to the world, in the thousands of institutions of learning scattered over the country, the magnificent spectacle of a state marching on, with giant strides, in the high career of morals, civilization, and religion. Under the benign auspices of these extended means for intellectual development, we shall see loom out from city and country, from lowland and mountains, many an intellectual giant, with names gilded by no phosphoretic aureola borrowed from a distinguished ancestry, but with "minds swelling with energies," fresh, free, native, and vigorous, and owing their attractions and power alone to their own masculine proportions. Then, indeed, will Kentucky become what I would have her—as distinguished for the virtue and intelligence of her citizens as she is for the chivalry of her sons and the beauty of her daughters.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE entered into some further explanations, and then withdrew his amendment (with which Mr. Barlow's also fell), and submitted a modified amendment, as follows:

"The capital of the fund, called and known as the common school fund, consisting of $1,225,763 42, for which bonds have been executed by the state to the board of education, and $73,500 of stock in the Bank of Kentucky; also, the sum of $51,223 29, balance of interest on the school fund for 1848, unexpended; together with any sum which may hereafter be raised in the state, by taxation or otherwise, for purposes of education, shall be held inviolate, for the purpose of sustaining a system of common schools; the interest and dividends of said fund, together with any sum which may be produced by taxation, may be appropriated in aid of common schools, but for no other purpose. The general assembly shall invest said $51,223 29 in some safe and profitable manner, and any portion of the interest and dividends of said school fund, which may not be needed in sustaining common schools, shall be invested in like manner. The general assembly shall make provision, by law, for the payment of the interest of said school fund: Provided, that each county shall be entitled to their proportion of the income of said fund, and if not called for, for school purposes, it shall be reinvested for the benefit of each county, from time to time."

Mr. TURNER moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The amendment of the gentleman from Nelson was then adopted.

EVENING SESSION.

The convention resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on education.

Mr. TAYLOR, on behalf of the committee, asked leave to withdraw the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth sections, which were rendered unnecessary, by the adoption of the substitute of the gentleman from Nelson for the first section.

Leave was granted.

The seventh section was then read, as follows:

"SEC. 7. There shall be elected, by the qualified electors in this commonwealth, a superintendent of public instruction, who shall hold his office for years, and whose duties and salary shall be prescribed and fixed by law."

On the motion of Mr. TRIPLETT the blank was filled with "four."

The section, and afterwards the entire report, as amended, were then adopted.

SLAVERY.

The convention proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee on the revision of the constitution and slavery.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE moved that each member be limited to twenty minutes in the discussion of that report. It involved a subject with which they were all familiar, which had been amply discussed, both here and elsewhere, and hence a long discussion was unnecessary.

Mr. MERIWETHER intimated a wish to occupy a longer time.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE was willing to exempt the gentleman from Jefferson, he being the chairman of the committee from which the report had come.

Mr. WALLER expressed his opposition to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. DUDLEY said that subject had been discussed at very great length during the ten or eleven weeks that the convention had been in session, and it was now necessary that they should act, rather than talk, that they might adjourn at an early day. He saw no reason for indulging each gentleman in more than a few remarks.

Mr. CURD moved to amend the motion, by striking out "twenty," and inserting "ten."

Mr. BALLINGER saw no reason why the chairman of the committee should have greater latitude than the other members of the same committee, who entertained opposing views.

Mr. WALLER opposed the adoption of the resolution, because he was opposed to the application of a gag.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE withdrew his motion.

The secretary then read the first section of the report, as follows:

"SEC. 1. The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves, without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners, previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated; nor shall they exercise any other or greater power over the after-born children of slave mothers than over the slaves then in being."

Mr. MERIWETHER. Before the vote is taken on the first section, I propose to make a few remarks on the general question of slavery. Permit me to remark, that I should not have occupied the time of the convention at all upon this question, but for the fact that the arguments and doctrines which have been employed here, have been seized on by the abolitionists of the north, for the purpose of advancing their views, and but for the remarks of my friend from Knox, which will no doubt be cited for the same purpose.

My friend from Knox, contended that slavery retarded our population, without inquiring whether there might not be other causes which would produce the same effect, and which did produce it. I have been taught that like causes produce like effects, everywhere, and I ask, if slavery has retarded population in Kentucky, why has it not done it in Missouri and Alabama, and other states.

The gentleman drew a comparison between the states of Kentucky and Ohio, with reference to the increase of their population. If he will turn his attention to Missouri, and Alabama, he will find that they have increased in a greater ratio than Ohio. If slavery be the cause which has retarded the population of Kentucky, why has not that cause produced the same effect in these states? Will not the gentleman see that there are other causes which might produce it? I could refer to the condition of the land titles in Kentucky, in by gone days, and I might assure him that probably it will be found, every acre of land has been shingled over with as many as three different titles. I presume there is not a man in this body, who cannot point to some neighbor, who has lost his land, and who, fearful lest the same fate might await him again if he bought in this state, has gone to the western states. How many have thus gone, and how many emigrants have passed through Kentucky, without locating themselves, for fear of the land titles, it is hard to tell.

Here are causes enough to produce the effect claimed by the gentleman, when we recollect that in those western states, a citizen having lost land here, could get good land cheap, and have a good title. Some few years since, congress commenced holding out a bounty for immigration from the older states to the new, where the United States held nearly all the land for sale. If I recollect rightly, the price of the public land was fixed at two dollars per acre, and the purchaser was required to pay only twenty-five cents annually per acre till it was paid for, thus giving eight years to pay the whole. Congress afterwards reduced the price to one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, and as an additional stimulus to immigration they provided that the public lands, when entered, should be exempt from taxation for five years, so that the immigrant, instead of locating in Kentucky, and the citizen of Kentucky, who had lost his land, went west and acquired good land with a good title and free from taxation for five years after he had become a purchaser.

I have been asked why Louisville, did not increase as fast as Cincinnati. And I have been told it is because she is within a slave state. But if gentlemen will cast their eyes to St. Louis, they will find that she, though in a slave state, has increased faster than Cincinnati. I again ask, if slavery has been the cause, why has it not produced this effect elsewhere? But Kentucky has been no laggard in population.

In 1790, when the first census of the United States was taken, there were eight free states having a larger population than Kentucky, one, Rhode Island, having a little less. There are now but two of these old states which have so large a population as Kentucky. These are New York and Pennsylvania.

The gentleman pointed to Ohio as a wilderness sixty years ago, while Kentucky had 60,000 people, and now Ohio is in advance. In 1790 Massachusetts had a population of 370,000, and now Kentucky has more than she. Kentucky started in this race with eight free states in advance, but she has passed six of them, two only are ahead of her.

I maintain there are other causes which prevent the settlement of Kentucky. The premium offered to immigration west, and the difficulties in our land titles, have been the great causes which have retarded our population.

But it has been said, that slavery has retarded our internal improvements. Sir, if Kentucky had been as prodigal as Ohio, we should not have been behind her in internal improvements. Kentucky has a debt of between four and five millions, and Ohio has one of twenty millions. I ask those who have been opposed to internal improvements, if they can find no cause of rejoicing in that fact? Had we chosen to go into debt to that extent, we too could have had our railroads and canals. But is it better to have gone into debt as she did, or to have progressed upon a firmer foundation? What would be the situation of a farmer who would tear down an old, but comfortable house, and borrow money to pay for the erection of a more showy edifice to adorn and embellish his possessions, and in doing so deprive himself, by the payment of interest, of the means of carrying on his farm, having spent all on his dwelling? Would it not have been better to reside in the old fashioned, but comfortable dwelling until he had the means to erect a new one, than to subject himself to the payment of the interest upon the money borrowed to erect the new house?

Much has been said about taxation here. In Ohio the average tax for the last five years, has been fifty-five cents on the hundred dollars. We have got ours up to nineteen cents, which we think is an enormous sum, while Ohio is taxed nearly three times as high as Kentucky, more than half of one per cent. to maintain her system.

But my friend from Knox said slavery had prevented education, and he alluded to the numerous free schools in the free states, and their want in Kentucky. In answer to that argument, permit me to say, if Ohio was wholly indebted to her own resources for her prosperity with regard to schools, she would have been behind Kentucky. Where did she derive her means? Not from her own, but from external sources. The general government treated Ohio as its own, and Kentucky as a step-child, and we could not be expected to keep pace with her. What has the general government done for Kentucky? The gentleman will find that a portion of the prosperity of Ohio is owing to the liberality of Virginia, that mother of states, when she surrendered her title to such a domain as no other state ever surrendered. This is now thrown out as a matter of reproach to Kentucky by one of her own sons, that she has not kept pace with Ohio. Let me give the sources of the means which Ohio has enjoyed.

These are: the Virginia military school fund, the United States military school fund, the great western reserve school fund, school sections number sixteen, ministerial sections number twenty-nine, the Moravian school fund, given by the Moravian society. In addition to that, Ohio received numerous donations of land from the general government; at one time 500,000 acres of land, and $2,000,000 of the surplus revenue.

Mr. WOODSON. If the gentleman will allow me to explain, I will state that I said there was a difference between the number of children in schools in Ohio and Kentucky, but the greatest difference was between Massachusetts and Kentucky in proportion to the population. The gentleman has gone on to show that Ohio has had extraneous aid. I would be glad to have him state what extraneous aid Massachusetts has had, if any.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I have not been able to obtain documents with relation to that point. But does the gentlemen expect a new state like Kentucky, unaided, to keep pace with the older states in these respects. Why does he take an old state, densely populated, and with means and resources which a new state cannot have and compare them? I have chosen Ohio, because the comparison would be more just, as the two states are nearly of the same age and of the same size, the same climate, and similar productions; the only difference being the institution of slavery in Kentucky, and not in Ohio. As I before said, the general government has acted toward the younger states the part of a step-father; whilst prodigal toward the younger portion of the family, we have been left to struggle for ourselves. In addition to the benefits I have named as given to Ohio, look to the donations given, the colleges and academies founded, and the aid to internal improvements. Has Kentucky derived any aid from the general government, save the pittance from the surplus revenue? No, not one farthing.

I have adduced these arguments to show that there are other reasons besides slavery, which may have produced this effect. In addition to those advantages named, which Ohio has derived from the general government, there is three per cent. on the sale of public lands in Ohio, which is given for educational purposes and internal improvement. All together, as well as I can estimate it, the sum received by Ohio, amounts in land and money together, to some ten millions of dollars. Had Kentucky received one tythe of these benefits, had the difficulties of our land titles not existed, I imagine, the gentleman could have had no cause to reproach his native state with her laggard movements. But the arguments which struck me as singular, were that at the first commencement of his arguments he said slavery retarded population, and before he closed, he alluded to the time when population would be so dense that we would have to force the negroes off or give up the state to them. If slavery retards this evil day, let us keep it up.

Mr. WOODSON. The gentleman did not understand me. I said I did not think the white population would increase in Kentucky, but the black population would, and as they increase, they would force away the poor whites, and the lands would come into the possession of the rich.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I stand corrected unless I misunderstand the gentleman again. But now I will answer his present argument, and tell him that the white population has for the last ten years been increasing faster than the black, and therefore, the black population never can outnumber the white.

It has been said on more than one occasion, that slavery retards our wealth. In answer to this, permit me to make a few remarks. I recollect to have seen in the report of the commissioner of patents for 1847, and a comparison between the distributive wealth of two slave states, and two free states. The commissioner being a northern man with northern feelings instituted the comparison, and did not select from the slave states those which would have made the most favorable comparison, perhaps. He took Kentucky and Maryland. Maryland is not one of the most prosperous slave states. He took New York, and I think, Pennsylvania, certainly not the least prosperous of the free states. Taking the wealth of the two last and dividing it by the amount of the population, each individual in those states would have $269 69 per head. Taking Kentucky and Maryland and dividing the wealth by the number, as before, and each person will have over $400.

Upon this point I have gone into some calculations myself. I have taken Ohio, as certainly not the least prosperous of the free states, and I find if you take the taxable property of Ohio—and they tax as great a variety of property as we do—and divide by the population, and each person will receive $270. Take the property of Kentucky, and divide by the whole population, including slaves, and each individual will have $349, making a difference of $79 for each person, in favor of Kentucky. This is including the value of the slaves as property and enumerating them as persons. Excluding them as property at an aggregate of $60,000,000, and excluding them as persons and then each person will have $350. Then count them as property and exclude them in the distribution, and each person will receive $454, making a difference in favor of Kentucky of $180 per head.

I wish it borne in mind that every figure, and every extract I shall quote, unless otherwise stated, will be from official documents. I find some statistics in a paper published in Cincinnati, whose editor cannot be supposed to be partial to Kentucky, which show the products of different states of the Union per head. I have taken and separated the slave from the free states, and I find the actual produce of labor in the slave states, is fifty cents greater than in the free states. This is a small amount in a single case, but in the aggregate it is about four millions of dollars. I have taken for a comparison Ohio and Kentucky, similar in productions and climate, but in point of soil Ohio has the advantage. The produce of labor per head for every soul in Ohio, is set down at $42. In Kentucky it is $49, giving us an excess of $7 per head. The aggregate produce of labor in Kentucky, at this rate, is $3,000,000 more than in Ohio. I have instituted a comparison between Tennessee and Indiana, and I find the comparison is still more favorable toward the slave states. Then I have taken them jointly, Kentucky and Tennessee on one side, and Indiana and Ohio on the other; and taking the two, the difference is about eleven millions of dollars in favor of the slave states.

But let us go to the auditor's report in relation to two states. I made some remarks in the early part of the session on this subject, and I wish now to be precise. It must be borne in mind that Ohio has double the population of Kentucky. She should produce double the amount of wealth which Kentucky produces, yet I find that the increased value of taxable property within the last year has been $18,131,545 in Kentucky. Now Ohio ought, at the same ratio, to have increased her taxable property $36,000,000, in round numbers; but so far from it, the state of Ohio, with double the population, and double the hands to labor of Kentucky, has only increased $10,304,831. Kentucky has increased $9,826,714 over Ohio. Then take Indiana, having about the same population, and about the same number of hands to produce as Kentucky, how much has her wealth increased? Only $4,351,831. Kentucky with one third of the population and one third of the hands to labor that Indiana and Ohio, has increased her wealth to the amount of $5,474,883 more than both of these states together. I have been unable to get an official statement respecting Illinois, but I am informed that her increase is a little over $4,000,000. If that be correct, all three of these states, have not increased their wealth as much as Kentucky, with all the evils within her borders to which the gentleman has alluded.

It has been said that slavery has been ruinous to our morals.

Mr. WOODSON. As the argument I adduced may be misunderstood, I would ask how is it, if Kentucky increases her annual wealth faster than all these states, that Ohio, being a much younger state than Kentucky, has now more than double her wealth?

Mr. MERIWETHER. Wealth has increased in this way in Ohio. Heretofore, as congress owned and controlled land there, it was not valued at all till five years after their entry. It has since come into the estimate, and is valued. Now the whole land is valued, which was not the fact at first. I take the present time, because the land is now principally occupied in both states.

I have been at some trouble to collect some statistics on the subject of crime to show the effect of slavery on the morals. I find that Ohio has thirty seven per cent. more convicts in her penitentiary than Kentucky. Illinois has nine per cent. more; Michigan has ninety three per cent. more, and New York ninety nine per cent. more. The only free state from which I could get a return which has less than Kentucky is Indiana; and she has I think eleven per cent. less, in proportion to population, than Kentucky.

I have collected some statistics also with respect to pauperism. That has been alluded to to-day. My gleanings upon this point have been only on a small scale, for but few states keep statistics on that subject. In Kentucky we have nothing of that sort. I have taken Shelby county as an average county. She has two representatives, and not quite the ratio of population for two. I find from information, derived from the delegates from that county in this hall, that on that basis the paupers in Kentucky are about 400. I have taken the counties of Jefferson, Bullitt, and Shelby, and added them together, and on the basis derived from these, the whole number in the state will be about 1000. How is it in Massachusetts? Last year there were in Massachusetts 28,510 paupers. For these she had to erect 174 alms houses, and tax the people for their erection to the amount of $1,056,000, whilst the annual cost of their maintenance was $372,749 75, a sum nearly equal to the whole expense of the government of Kentucky.

Now, if I were to argue as my friend from Knox has done, in saying that because slavery exists in Kentucky, therefore population has been prevented, if it is prevented at all, might I not say that the absence of slavery is the cause of the pauperism in Massachusetts?

But I think I can show that where emancipation has taken place, it has not produced the good effects expected from it. I will read an extract or two from a lecture delivered in the hall of the house of representatives in Ohio, by David Christy, an agent of the American colonization society—a resident of the state of Ohio, with all his feelings in favor of emancipation, truth has forced him to acknowledge what I shall read:

"These results of emancipation in the northern states were watched with great interest by the philanthropic citizens of the slave states. The liberation of the slaves in the free states had fallen so far short of securing the amount of good anticipated, that the friends of the colored man became less urgent and zealous in their efforts to secure further legislative action."

Well he goes on and says that from

"1790 to 1800 emancipations were	37,042
1800 to 1810 emancipations were	56,414
1810 to 1820 emancipations were	14,471
1820 to 1830 emancipations were	33,772
1830 to 1840 emancipations were	—

"From 1790 to 1810 some of the most powerful minds in the nation were directed to the consideration of the enormous evils of slavery, and the effects of their labors are exhibited in the number of emancipations made during that period. The decline of emancipations after 1810, we believe to be due to the cause assigned above—the little benefit, apparently, which had resulted from the liberation of the slaves, and the consequent relaxation of effort by the friends of emancipation."

Now, I will give the remarks of the same author as to the effects in England.

"But the investigations which had led to the knowledge of the enormities of the slave trade, necessarily exhibited the evils of slavery itself. Public opinion decreed the annihilation of both, and the British government had no other alternative but to comply. The means to which she resorted for the suppression of the slave trade, and their failure hitherto, have been already noticed. The measures adopted for the emancipation of her West India slaves, have resulted still more unfavorably to her interests, than those for the extinction of the slave trade.

"It was considered absolutely necessary to the prosperity of England, that she should regain the advantageous position which she had occupied, in being the chief producer of tropical commodities. But to effect this, it was necessary that she should be able to double the exports from her own islands, and greatly diminish those of her rivals. This could be accomplished only by an increase of laborers from abroad, or by stimulating those on the islands to double activity in their work. An increase of laborers from abroad could only be secured by a resort to the slave trade, which was impossible; or to voluntary immigration, from other countries to the islands, which was improbable. The only remaining alternative was to render the labor already in the islands more productive. This could not be done by the whip, as it had already expended its force, and could not afford the relief demanded. This position of affairs made the government willing to listen to the appeals of the friends of West India emancipation. They had long argued that free labor was cheaper than slave labor—that one freeman, under the stimulus of wages, would do twice the work of a slave, compelled to industry by the whip—that the government, by immediate emancipation, could demonstrate the truth of this proposition, and thus furnish a powerful argument against slavery—that the world should be convinced that the employment of slave labor is a great economic error—and that this truth, once believed, the abolition of slavery would everywhere take place, and the demand for slaves being thus destroyed, the slave trade must cease.

"Parliament, yielding to these arguments, passed her West India emancipation act, 1833, with certain restrictions, by which the liberated slaves were to be held by their old masters as apprentices, partly until August 1, 1838, and partly until August 1, 1840. This apprenticeship system, however, being productive of greater cruelties than even slavery, the legislative councils of the islands, coerced by public sentiment in England, were forced to precipitate the final emancipation of the slaves, and on August 1, 1838, they were declared free. This act at once brought on the crisis in the experiment. The results in the following official table, taken from the Westminster Review, 1844:

SUGAR EXPORTED	Average of 1831, 1832, 1833. Three years of slavery.	Average of 1835, 1836, 1837. Three years of apprenticeship.
From St. Vincent, -	23,400,000 lbs.	22,500,000 lbs.
From Trinidad, -	18,923 tons	18,255 tons
From Jamaica, -	86,080 hhd.	62,960 hhd.
From total W. Indies, -	3,841,153 cwt.	3,477,592 cwt.

SUGAR EXPORTED.	Average of 1839, 1840, 1841. Three years of freedom.
From St. Vincent, -	14,100,000 lbs.
From Trinidad, -	14,828 tons.
From Jamaica, -	34,415 hhd.
From total West Indies, -	2,396,784 cwt.

"This immense and unexpected reduction of West India products under the system of freedom was the cause of great alarm. The experiment which was to prove the superiority of free labor over that of slave labor had failed. The hope of doubling the exports by that means was blasted. Five hundred millions dollars of British capital, invested in the islands, says McQueen, was on the brink of destruction, for want of laborers to make it available. The English government found her commerce greatly lessened, and her home supply of tropical products falling below the actual wants of her own people. This diminution rendered her unable to furnish any surplus for the markets of those of her colonies, and her countries which she formerly supplied. These results at once extended the market for slave grown products, and gave a new impulse to the slave trade.

"The government and its advisers now found themselves in the mortifying position of having blundered miserably in their emancipation scheme, and of having landed themselves in a dilemma of singular perplexity."

Here is evidence sufficient to establish the proposition with which I set out, "that emancipation has not, either in England or our northern states, produced the good results expected from it." Why need we look for better or other results here in our own state?

By a reference to the table which I have, it will be found that the products of these islands were reduced more than half, and they still remain so. I will read an extract from a paper published at Barbadoes last year. This describes their condition at this time. This island is said to be the most fruitful of all the West India Islands, so much so by way of distinction, they call it Little Britain:

"Here plenty of laborers can be employed for field labor at fifteen cents per day. They have now been free twelve years, and they find that the only way to get a living is to work. Even here the evidences of decay and coming ruin are conspicuous. One half of the estates in the island are in the hands of the provost marshal, who, as a sheriff, proceeds to sell them on judgment to pay creditors."

One half the estates in the hands of the sheriff, and, under execution, because of emancipation, and that too when laborers can be employed at fifteen cents per day. Is that the state of things you wish to see in Kentucky—labor at fifteen cents a day and one half the estates in the hands of the sheriff?

I will read an article from the London Times, further descriptive of the effects which emancipation has had upon England:

"The will of the people of England and the resources of the British nation have been applied, with absolute authority and ungrudging munificence, to the extinction of slavery in the British dominions. The northern states of America have no such power of altering the institutions, and the tenures of property in the slaveholding states of the Union: congress itself has no such power; but if it had, and, besides the power, if it had the will and the means to carry a general measure of abolition, we are constrained to admit that the experiment made by the British government, and the state in which the British West Indies are now placed by it, would be invoked by the most unanswerable argument against such a scheme."

If congress (and the same argument will apply to a state,) had the power to abolish slavery, we are constrained to admit, (says this organ of England,) that the experiment made by us would furnish the most unanswerable argument against such a scheme—that is, the scheme of emancipation.

I will read one more short extract from the address before quoted from, and then conclude. Speaking of the effects of emancipation in England, the writer says:

"While therefore the ease, comfort, and welfare of the colored man was secured, the interests of the planters were almost ruined by emancipation, and the influence and power of England put in jeopardy."

Then, if we emancipate the slaves here, will it not produce the same result? Although it may secure to the slave ease and comfort, may we not expect that, as in the British islands, the white farmer will be ruined, and the influence and power of Kentucky destroyed? If this effect was produced by this cause there, why should it not produce the same effect here? If England was by it brought to the brink of ruin, why may we not also? Sir, these are the effects of emancipation in other countries. Need I ask, are we to expect a different result here if it is resorted to? England was shaken to its foundation. The gentleman, from whose address I have quoted, says, that in the northern states they have not realized their anticipations. Shall we hope they will realize our expectations from such a procedure? Is emancipation practicable? Is there a man here who is willing to see emancipation without colonization? Is that practicable? They point to New York and some other states. But did either of those states that have emancipated their slaves colonize them? New York, with all her power and wealth, could not colonize twenty thousand. Pennsylvania had less than fifteen thousand, and could not colonize them. Why is it expected then that Kentucky can colonize two hundred thousand?

Seven states of this union have abolished slavery. These states had less than fifty thousand slaves, and they had upwards of two millions of white population. But they, with all their wealth and power, could not colonize this small number. I again repeat, how, then, is Kentucky to colonize two hundred thousand? England, with an empire on which it is said the sun never sets—so that while it is broad noon day in one portion it is pitchy midnight in another—though she may emancipate her slaves, cannot colonize them. France, a nation that could whip all Europe combined, dare not undertake it. And can we do it? I know, whatever man can do, Kentuckians can do; but he who accomplishes this, is either more or less than man. It is not within the grasp of man to do it.

My friend from Knox referred to the opinions of Mr. Madison and others. Would he have us follow the example of Mr. Madison in all things?

Mr. WOODSON. I would, so far as he is right.

Mr. MERIWETHER. Then, if he be wrong, his example or opinion is worth nothing. Do we not find that Mr. Madison and General Washington both advocated a power in the President of the United States to veto a bill passed by congress, unless passed by a majority of three-fourths of each house of congress? And Mr.

Madison advocated the right of the federal government to veto the laws passed by state legislatures. Will the gentleman travel with him thus far? These great men often committed great errors. My friend alluded to Mr. Monroe, as well as Mr. Madison. These gentlemen were members of the convention which made a constitution for Virginia, recently. Can the gentleman find one proposition which these gentlemen offered in that convention, for the emancipation of the slaves? They refrained from making such a proposition, and it is, therefore, fair to presume they entertained the idea that I do: that it is impracticable. I have as great a veneration for the memories of these great men as any gentleman can, or ought to have; yet I cannot follow them when in error, as I believe.

My friend referred to the amount of manufactures in the northern states, and inferred that all these articles were produced in those states. If he had carried his investigation a little further, he would have found that the manufacturers depended on the slave states for a large share of the raw material. Where does their cotton come from? They get it from the south, and it, when they return it, goes as so much of their manufacture. Take out the expense of the cotton, hemp, and tobacco which they get from the south, and you will then reduce the amount about three-fourths.

My friend also alludes to the exports from the city of New York, as being greater than all the exports of the southern states. Does my friend not know that about one-third of the exports from New York are sent there from other states?

Mr. WOODSON. I did not say that the exports from New York were greater than from all the southern states. I said, I believe, that all the tobacco, rice, and cotton from the south was not equal to the exports from New York.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I will not make a question with the gentleman, as to what his position was. He may be correct. But were all these articles produced in New York. One-third of the cotton raised in Louisiana is shipped to foreign ports from New York—our corn and hemp goes from New York. Then, though her exports are so great, the question is, does she produce the articles exported herself?

Mr. WOODSON. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. MERIWETHER. It will give me pleasure to receive any information.

Mr. WOODSON. It is true that many articles are exported from New York which are sent from the Mississippi valley. But all these articles are valued before they are sent. This shows that there is not an equal amount produced in the southern states.

Mr. MERIWETHER. I imagine my friend is in error. There is no value put on them till they leave the United States. Is there any valuation put on them at Louisville or New Orleans? When a vessel leaves for a foreign port, then a valuation is taken, but not when engaged in the coasting trade. There are no statistics which will give the amount of the coasting trade. But if it is otherwise, and you value these articles at New Orleans, and then again when re-shipped from New York, will not this process tend to swell the exports from the latter city?

My friend concluded his speech with a little anecdote. If he had told the whole, I would not have noticed it. He compared the slaveholders to a boy who was late at school, and on being questioned as to the reason, said that it was so slippery that he went two steps back, to one forward, and my friend concluded we were sliding back in the same way. Now, if I recollect rightly, the school-master inquired of the boy how he finally got there, and he told him that he turned round and went backwards. If my friend will just turn right around, I think he will come to the right position on this subject. When the little boy to whom he alluded found that he never would get to school if he continued to travel as he had done, he at once turned about and succeeded. Let the gentleman, and all who travel with him, follow the boy's example, retrace their steps, withdraw all which has been said in disparagement of the institutions of their own state, and laudatory of others, and then, and not till then, will they arrive at the goal of truth, and their country's welfare.

Mr. A. K. MARSAALL. I move the following as a substitute for the first section:

"The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners. They shall pass laws to permit the owners of slaves to emancipate them, saving the rights of creditors, and providing for their permanent removal from this commonwealth; they shall pass laws to prevent slaves being brought into this state as merchandise: they shall have no power to prevent immigrants to this state from bringing with them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any one of the United States, or to prevent citizens of this state from bringing in such as are obtained by marriage, gift, inheritance, or devise, so long as any person of the same age or description, shall be continued in slavery by the laws of this state; and they shall have full power to pass such laws as may be necessary to oblige the owners of slaves to treat them with humanity, to provide for them necessary clothing and provisions, to abstain from all injuries to them—extending to life or limb—and in case of their neglect or refusal to comply with the direction of such laws, to have such slave or slaves sold for the benefit of their owner or owners."

It will be observed that the substitute I have offered varies very slightly from the provision in the present constitution in relation to slavery. Gentlemen will remark that I have there stricken out the involuntary feature of it. If my proposition should be adopted, it will not permit the emancipation of slaves in Kentucky even by the payment of their value first to the owner. If we have been commanded to do any thing by our constituents—and I have understood the wants of the people in regard to the framing of a constitution—it is, that on the subject of slavery, we should so guard that property that neither in nor under the constitution there could be devised any plan of immediate or gradual emancipation. I have no disposition to argue the question of slavery even if I felt the propriety of doing so. It seems to me useless to argue it. It cannot do any good, and public sentiment has shown there is every disposition to adhere to slavery. There can be no legal mode of emancipating slaves. It is absolutely necessary that we should remove the power out of the hands of the legislature, by which they can emancipate slaves by payment. And this telling me it never will be done, amounts to nothing in my mind. We know what may be done by those who have the power. Under the first section of the old constitution, a system of emancipation can be devised and carried out, and from what we see and what we hear, it is not an idle fear to entertain that from the frenzied state of feeling in this state, they may attempt to emancipate the slaves of Kentucky. Fanaticism does not stop; it knows no stopping place. Although they say they would not be in favor of emancipation, without paying the owners of the slaves for them, I believe the great aim and object they have in view is the emancipation of the slaves, and they will obtain it by any means. Leave that clause in the constitution, and the slaves can be emancipated without seeming injustice to the owner. It is absolutely necessary in a republic, that the power of special taxation and discrimination should be left to the legislature. If the emancipation party should get in the ascendant in the legislature, taxes can be levied, and the money appropriated to pay the owners of slaves. Suppose the legislature of Kentucky were to pass a law to this effect: that all female slaves born in this state should, at the age of six years be valued, and apprenticed out until they were twenty-five. It is perfectly competent for the legislature to apprentice out these female children for their value. Last summer I was traveling in Pennsylvania with a gentleman from Ohio, who wanted to buy a negro boy. He astonished me, and I said, "why do you wish to buy one?" He replied that he would take him to Ohio and have him apprenticed to him, as he knew he would be worth as much as his price before he was twenty-one years of age. Now, if you let the emancipationists have the power they desire, they might adopt a plan of this sort to emancipate our slaves. I do not apprehend it will be done, but all I know is, it can be done unless there is some prohibition placed upon the legislature. My constituents have commanded me not to vote for any constitution unless provision was made in it against the probability of exercising such power. Hence it is, I have offered my amendment or substitute.

MR. MERIWETHER. The only difference I can detect from hearing the report and the gentleman's proposition read, is, that the latter proposes to take from the legislature the power of granting compensation to the owners of slaves. That power is contained in the old constitution, and I am in favor of it. There will be no danger of the legislature emancipating the slaves, while they are required to pay for them.

MR. GRAY. So far as I know the sentiments of the people in my section of the state on this subject, they are as much opposed to emancipation as any body can be. They were satisfied with the old constitution as it stood, with one exception, and that was that there should be a provision inserted, that if any slaves were emancipated, they should be removed from the state. I therefore move the following substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Jessamine (Mr. A. K. Marshall.)

"Sec. 1. The general assembly shall have no power to pass laws for the emancipation of slaves without the consent of their owners, or without paying their owners, previous to such emancipation, a full equivalent in money for the slaves so emancipated, and providing for their removal from the state. They shall have no power to prevent immigrants to this state from bringing with them such persons as are deemed slaves by the laws of any of the United States, so long as any person of the same age or description shall be continued in slavery by the laws of this state. They shall pass laws to permit the owners of slaves to emancipate them, saving the rights of creditors, and preventing them from remaining in this state after they are emancipated. They shall have full power to prevent slaves being brought into this state as merchandise. They shall have full power to prevent any slaves being brought into this state who have been, since the first day of January, one thousand seven hundred and eighty nine, or may hereafter be imported into any of the United States from a foreign country. And they shall have full power to pass such laws as may be necessary to oblige the owners of slaves to treat them with humanity; to provide for them necessary clothing and provision; to abstain from all injuries to them, extending to life or limb; and in case of their neglect, or refusal to comply with the directions of such laws, to have such slave, or slaves, sold for the benefit of their owner, or owners."

MR. A. K. MARSHALL. I certainly am very well satisfied with the old constitution, but I prefer the proposition I have offered. The proposition of the gentleman will permit the importation of slaves to Kentucky. I am opposed to that, except those which are obtained by inheritance, marriage, gift, or devise. It will certainly lead to the agitation of slavery. There is a legal constitutional mode pointed out by which the gentleman can attain his object. I am opposed to the gentleman's proposition.

After some conversation, in which Messrs. WICKLIFFE, MORRIS, A. K. MARSHALL, and GRAY, participated.

MR. GRAY asked for the ayes and noes on his substitute, and they were taken, and were ayes 74, nays 14.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Jesse Coffey, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Selucius Garfiede, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Geo. W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, Jas. M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thos. N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, Geo. W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan

Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—74.

NAVS—Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, Vincent S. Hay, Alfred M. Jackson, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, William D. Mitchell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Silas Woodson—14.

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. IRWIN asked for the ayes and noes on the adoption of the substitute for the first section of the report of the committee, and they were taken, and were—ayes 55, noes 36.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Selucius Garfield, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, George W. Mansfield, Martin P. Marshall, William C. Marshall, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Hugh Newell, William Preston, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—56.

NAVS—John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, Luther Brawner, William C. Bullitt, Beverly L. Clarke, Jesse Coffey, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, B. F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Richard D. Gholson, William Hendrix, George W. Johnston, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Thomas N. Lindsey, Willis B. Machen, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, W. D. Mitchell, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, H. B. Pollard, Larkin J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, Michael L. Stoner, Andrew S. White, Silas Woodson—36.

So the question was determined in the affirmative.

Mr. WALLER moved that the convention do now adjourn.

Mr. HARDIN asked for the ayes and noes, and they were taken, and were—ayes 61, noes 29. The convention then adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. G. W. BRUSH.

BASIS OF REPRESENTATION.

Mr. LACKEY submitted the following resolution, and it was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That representation shall be equal and uniform in this commonwealth, and shall be forever regulated and ascertained by the number of representative inhabitants therein. At the first session of the general assembly after the adoption of this constitution, and every four years thereafter, provision shall be made by law that in the year —, and every four years thereafter, an enumeration of all the representative inhabitants of the state shall be made. The number of representatives shall be one hundred, and apportioned among the several counties in the following manner: Counties having the ratio shall have one representative; those having three fourths of the ratio shall have one representative; those having the ratio, and a fraction less than one half the ratio over, shall have but one representative; those having the ratio, and a fraction of one half over, shall have two representatives; those having twice the ratio, shall have two representatives; those having twice the ratio, and a fraction of less than one half the ratio over, shall have but two representatives; those having twice the ratio, and a fraction of one half the ratio over, shall have three representatives; and so on. Counties having less than three fourths of the ratio, shall be joined to a similar adjacent county, for the purpose of forming a representative district: Provided, That if there be no such adjacent county, then the county having less than three fourths of the ratio, shall be united with that adjacent county having the smallest number of representative inhabitants, provided that their united numbers do not exceed the ratio, and a fraction of one half the ratio over; but if they do, the county having less than three fourth of the ratio shall have a separate representative. The remaining representatives, (if any,) shall be allotted to those counties having the largest unrepresented fractions; but in no case shall more than two counties be united for the purpose of forming a representative district; but if there shall ever be an excess of districts, they shall be reduced to the proper number, by taking from those counties having a separate representative, with the smaller number of representative inhabitants, their separate representation.

Counties that will be entitled to one representative each, with an average vote of 1,680:

Adair, - - - -	1,560	1
Allen, - - - -	1,346	1
Boyle, - - - -	1,168	1
Bracken, - - - -	1,606	1
Bullitt, - - - -	1,218	1
Bourbon, - - - -	1,914	1
Breckinridge, - - - -	1,757	1
Boone, - - - -	1,958	1
Bath, - - - -	1,886	1
Campbell, - - - -	2,182	1
Caldwell, - - - -	2,016	1
Clarke, - - - -	1,691	1
Daviess, - - - -	2,112	1
Franklin, - - - -	2,024	1
Graves, - - - -	1,665	1

Greenup, - - - -	1,936	1
Grant, - - - -	1,212	1
Garrard, - - - -	1,624	1
Green, - - - -	1,352	1
Hopkins, - - - -	1,886	1
Henderson, - - - -	1,589	1
Henry, - - - -	1,862	1
Hart, - - - -	1,436	1
Harrison, - - - -	2,150	1
Jessamine, - - - -	1,335	1
Lewis, - - - -	1,409	1
Lincoln, - - - -	1,453	1
Logan, - - - -	2,179	1
Muhlenburg, - - - -	1,625	1
Montgomery, - - - -	1,459	1
Mercer, - - - -	2,093	1
Marion, - - - -	1,762	1
Morgan, - - - -	1,261	1
Nicholas, - - - -	1,792	1
Nelson, - - - -	2,035	1
Owen, - - - -	1,796	1
Ohio, - - - -	1,576	1
Pendleton, - - - -	1,336	1
Scott, - - - -	1,891	1
Todd, - - - -	1,499	1
Trigg, - - - -	1,417	1
Union, - - - -	1,448	1
Woodford, - - - -	1,314	1
Wayne, - - - -	1,443	1
Washington, - - - -	1,847	1
	<hr/>
	75,620	45

Counties that will be necessary to join two together to form a representative district, with an average vote of 1,706:

Lawrence, - - - -	967
Carter, - - - -	1025
	<hr/>
	1992	1
Johnson, - - - -	599
Floyd, - - - -	986
	<hr/>
	1585	1
Pike, - - - -	812
Letcher, - - - -	381
	<hr/>
	1193	1
Breathitt, - - - -	612
Perry, - - - -	502
	<hr/>
	1123	1
Estill, - - - -	1018
Owsley, - - - -	671
	<hr/>
	1689	1
Clay, - - - -	866
Harlan, - - - -	648
	<hr/>
	1514	1
Rockcastle, - - - -	842
Lanrel, - - - -	865
	<hr/>
	1707	1
Hickman, - - - -	758
Fulton, - - - -	705
	<hr/>
	1463	1
Ballard, - - - -	825
McCracken, - - - -	986
	<hr/>
	1811	1
Livingston, - - - -	952
Crittenden, - - - -	1059
	<hr/>
	2011	1
Grayson, - - - -	1108
Hancock, - - - -	555
	<hr/>
	1662	1
Butler, - - - -	948
Edmonson, - - - -	681
	<hr/>
	1629	1

Taylor, - - - -	1097
Casey, - - - -	1051
	<hr/>
	2148	1
Russell, - - - -	940
Clinton, - - - -	812
	<hr/>
	1752	1
Anderson, - - - -	1119
Spencer, - - - -	1022
	<hr/>
	2141	1
Carroll, - - - -	993
Gallatin, - - - -	883
	<hr/>
	1876	1
	<hr/>
	27,296	16

Counties with less than three fourths of the ratio, which will be entitled to a separate representative, with an average vote of 1,048:

Simpson, - - - -	1,017	1
Larue, - - - -	1,013	1
Meade, - - - -	1,114	1
	<hr/>
	3,144	3

Counties that would be entitled to two representatives, with an average vote of 1,392:

Barren, - - - -	2,959	2
Fayette, - - - -	2,649	2
Fleming, - - - -	2,316	2
Hardin, - - - -	2,419	2
Kenton, - - - -	3,406	2
Madison, - - - -	2,563	2
Mason, - - - -	3,114	2
Pulaski, - - - -	2,392	2
Shelby, - - - -	2,321	2
Jefferson and Louisville, - - - -	9,283	6
	<hr/>
	33,422	24

Counties that would be entitled to two representatives, by the provision in favor of counties having the largest unrepresented fraction, with an average vote of 1,115:

Christian, - - - -	2,248	2
Warren, - - - -	2,215	2
	<hr/>
	4,463	4

Counties having less than three fourths of the ratio, that would be entitled to one member each, by the provision in favor of counties having the largest unrepresented fraction, with an average vote of 1,098:

Calloway, - - - -	1,323	1
Marshall, - - - -	870	1
Cumberland, - - - -	973	1
Monroe, - - - -	1,247	1
Oldham, - - - -	1,104	1
Trimble, - - - -	1,084	1
Knox, - - - -	1,130	1
Whitley, - - - -	1,058	1
	<hr/>
	8,789	8

The foregoing tables are based upon the number of free white males over twenty one years old, which will not vary far from the legal voters.

SPECIAL COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE from the committee on the court of appeals, in obedience to a resolution of the convention, reported the following section, which was adopted:

"SEC. —. Whenever an appeal or writ of error may be pending in the court of appeals, on the trial of which a majority of the judges thereof cannot sit; or on account of interest in the event of the cause; or on account of their relation to either party; or where the judge may have decided the cause in the inferior court, the general assembly shall provide, by law, for the organization of a temporary and special court, for the trial of such cause or causes."

SLAVERY.

Mr. CLARKE offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the general assembly shall have no power to pass laws prohibiting the citizens of this state from importing slaves for their own use, but may pass laws requiring the importer of a slave or slaves to take an oath that said slave or slaves are for his or her own use, and not for merchandise; and that he or she will not sell said slave or slaves, within this commonwealth, within        years after such slave or slaves are imported, under such penalties as may, from time to time, be provided by law: Provided, That the slaves thus imported shall not be such as have been charged with crime in other States."

This, Mr. President, is a resolution of compromise between those who are of opinion that slaves ought not to be imported, and those who think that the citizens of Kentucky ought to introduce them for their own use. It requires an oath to be taken by the importer that he imports them for his own use, and that he will not dispose of them for        years. It goes further, and provides that they are not to be imported from the prisons of other states, or from under the gallows. I offer it to test the sense of the convention, whether the citizens of Kentucky are to be allowed to import slaves for their own use. Before the passage of that resolution—which I will assume—it may be possible that I may make some remarks. So much has been said, so many speeches have been made, the subject has been so thoroughly examined, that I may not be inclined to make a speech, unless it may become necessary in my judgment. But as I have heretofore stated, I am convinced that the institution of slavery, both here and elsewhere, is a blessing to both races—the whites and the African race. I am satisfied, so far as property in slaves is concerned, that there is no distinction between property in slaves and property in lands or in horses. And while a citizen of Kentucky has the right to go to Virginia and to Tennessee and purchase horses or any merchandise for his own use, I can see no reason why he should not go there to purchase slaves, unless we are bordering on a spirit of emancipation, which seems to me to animate the bosoms of some gentlemen on this floor. I repeat, that I see not, while we are establishing in our bill of rights the elements of freedom, why a citizen of Kentucky should not go wherever he pleases to purchase slaves and merchandise for his own use and his own enjoyment.

The motion to lay on the table and print was then agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL offered the following resolution, and on his motion it was laid on the table and ordered to be printed:

"Resolved, That the general assembly shall have no power to prohibit the introduction of slaves into this state, by the citizens thereof, from other states, for their own use; but their introduction for traffic or merchandise, whether openly or covertly, by the citizens of this or any other state, shall be prohibited by the passage of such laws as the legislature may deem most conducive to secure that end."

The convention then resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on the revision of the constitution and slavery.

Mr. BULLITT. Whilst I am disposed to yield to the master the power of emancipation, the public good demands that this right should not be exercised to the injury of the community, of which he is a member. It is a cardinal principle of the common law, that no man shall so use his property as to injure another. This principle is peculiarly applicable to property in slaves. By the action of the master, they are capable of being rendered more detrimental to the community than any other description of property known to the law. Hence arises the necessity of a peculiar constitutional provision on this subject. For constitutional and legislative action, slaves are to be viewed in a double aspect—as persons, and as property. The master should not be permitted, whilst exercising his rights over the slave, as property, to enable him, as a person, to become a nuisance to society. From this peculiarity of slave property, also arises the necessity of, in some slight degree, deviating from what is clearly a correct general principle, that no law should be interpolated into the constitution.

This convention have, (save those of justice and humanity,) no restrictions to their action over free negroes, except such as are imposed by the constitution of the United States. This is not only the constitution of the United States, but that of each state; and Kentucky, when she entered the union as a sovereign state, adopted the constitution of the United States, as the paramount constitution of the State of Kentucky; and if there be any provision in that instrument, which confers citizenship on the free negro, it is binding on us.

The only provision which has the slightest bearing on the subject is contained in the fourth article, section the second, declaring, "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states."

The only inquiry is, what constitutes citizenship, or, in other words, what is the true constitutional meaning of the word citizen? If the free negro be not a citizen, although he may be a subject, he is not embraced within this provision. The term citizen, is derived from the Roman civil law. In the proconsular governments of the Roman commonwealth, the provincial subjects were governed by the arbitrary edicts of the governors. A Roman citizen who was entitled to the privileges of the city, carried with him, into all the provinces of the republic, his peculiar privileges of the protection of the Roman laws. In accordance with this principle, a citizen of the United States, going into any state of this union, carries with him the same right of protection, under the laws of the state, to which its own citizens are entitled.

In the progress of ages, after the downfall of the republic, Roman citizenship was gradually imparted to the provinces, and finally extended to the Barbarians, who had made lodgments in her territories. These, in their turn, inviting in others of their friends and relations, gradually acquired the ascendant, and finally overturned the empire. And to this abuse of citizenship is mainly attributable the destruction of the greatest power of ancient times.

In the dark ages succeeding the fall of the Roman Empire, the population consisted of the Feudal Barons, with their vassals and villiens, of slaves residing in the country, and the free artizans and merchants of the towns. The rural population were under the uncontrolled and absolute sway of the Barons, who maintained an almost uninterrupted warfare with the Princes. The latter found it to their interest to rear up a power of the middle classes in the towns, in opposition to the power of the nobility. To effect this object, the citizens of the towns were incorporated, with extensive privileges, exempting them from the arbitrary exaction of the Barons; and the term citizen, or citizenship, carried with it not only the right of exemption from oppression, but the right of sovereignty, in the town of which he was a member, in controlling its municipal regulations. From that class arose the British house of commons. Hence, in England, sovereignty has always been attached to the term "citizen," as contradistinguished from inhabitant or subject. An alien is a subject, but not a citizen.

At the time of the adoption of the constitution of the United States, free negroes were not citizens of any state in the Union. A large portion of the population was composed of African slaves and Indians. The broad and comprehensive terms used in the constitution of the United States, "we the people &c." must be construed to embrace whites alone, otherwise it would embrace all the slaves, free negroes, and Indians, within the then limits of the United States; thus making citizens of all the slaves of the southern states, in whom the right of property is guaranteed by that instrument itself, and who, as property are made the basis of taxation and representation.

At the period of the adoption of the constitution of United States, free negroes were not citizens of any state. The constitution was made by whites for their own benefit, and that of their own race. Some of the states then contained more Indians than whites; none of the Indians were citizens; and from a view of the entire context of the constitution, the conclusion is irresistible, that no power was intended to be granted to congress to make citizens of any others than white persons.

Congress, in carrying into effect that clause which provides that "congress shall have power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization" apply the power to white persons alone, excluding all others; thus giving a clear indication of their opinion—that to them alone it was applicable, according to the true meaning of the constitution.

The states have most of them given the same construction; for very soon after the adoption of the federal constitution, they began to pass laws restrictive of the free migration from one state to another of the free blacks, showing that they were not then considered citizens. This practice has been continued to the present time. The executive of the United States has given the same construction, by a uniform refusal of passports to free negroes.

Congress alone have power of naturalization, and a state cannot manufacture a citizen of the United States.

It is a universal principle of construction adopted by our courts—that whenever the word "person" is used in the constitution or laws, it must be considered as applicable to white persons alone, and cannot be applied to blacks unless specially named.

Females and minors follow the condition of their husbands and parents, and are entitled to all the civil rights of the latter. The rights secured to the citizen, are wholly civil rights and not political.

The congress of the United States alone, have the power of making a citizen of the United States, and, although a state may grant every state right, civil and political, to an African, she cannot thereby make him a citizen of the United States, so as to entitle him to the privileges secured by that instrument to the citizen.

The reason why the state cannot exclude white foreigners from their borders, is, that the right of naturalization necessarily carries with it, the right of residence and protection, during the term of their probation.

The free negroes of other states having, under the constitution of the United States no right of citizenship, are left to the discretionary action of this convention, without restriction, except such as are imposed by humanity; he may be a subject; he cannot be a citizen.

It has been decided that free negroes are not citizens, within the provision of the constitution of the United States before alluded to. For free negroes are not, in any of the states entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens, and a state may constitutionally prohibit free persons of color from removing into the state to reside. State of Tennessee vs. Claybourne, 1 Meigs. 332—1 Litt. 327. Judge Bullock's printed opinions—also 2 Kent 70-71, Hobbs vs. Fogg 6 Watts. 556.

Mr. WALLER. Laboring under serious indisposition, nothing, sir, but a deep sense of duty to my constituents and myself could induce me to encounter the manifest impatience of the convention to hear any more speeches upon this subject. My constituents are content to abide by the old provisions of the constitution with an additional clause providing that no slave shall be emancipated to remain in the state. They have as deep an interest in this matter as any county in the commonwealth; and they are satisfied with the protection which their slave property has hitherto received. This is all they ask—it is all that is necessary.

But I am actuated by a personal reason for asking your attention. My position is more peculiar than that of any delegate here. Some have expressed a surprise that one of my profession should entertain the sentiments I do on this, emphatically the great question of the age. That the reasons for the votes I have given and which I may give on this subject may appear, I now, under all the disadvantages which surround me, arise to speak. I trust, then, my offence, if it is so esteemed, in trespassing upon time which I know to be precious, will be considered in charity and forgiven. I do not speak because I love to speak. I would rather hear the voice of any gentleman here than my own. My conduct heretofore is my witness to justify this statement.

I am not prepared, sir, to go the full lengths which the language of some gentlemen would seem to imply. Indeed I feel confident they have not themselves critically considered the full force of their expressions. I cannot persuade myself that when gentlemen call slavery a blessing, that they intend to convey the impression that they consider it a blessing in the abstract—a blessing per se. If this were true, the necessary deduction would be, that freedom was a curse:—that the condition of all men would be better in a state of menial servitude! For it must be manifest to every mind, that if slavery is a blessing per se, that its opposite, freedom, must be a curse. And if we confine this remark exclusively to the negro race—if it be a blessing in the abstract to them, then every dictate of religion and philanthropy would urge us to use all possible means for the enslavement of the entire black population of the earth! A position so monstrous, I am persuaded, no member of this convention is prepared to assert, much less maintain.

But while I do not believe that slavery in the abstract is a blessing, I do affirm that slavery in the south, and in Kentucky especially, has been a great blessing to the negro—that the negroes now in slavery in the United States are in far better condition—more elevated in the scale of intellectual and moral being—than the same number of negroes, to be found any where upon earth, or that ever had a habitation or home in any other clime or country, in this or any other age. And if wrong has been done to the negro by bringing him from his African home, that wrong does not lie at the door of the south. The south did not bring him from his native land. We found him on the slave ship of the European or the New Englander. He was in chains, in the hole of the vessel, emaciated by disease and hunger. We protested against his being brought amongst us: but the cupidity of the mother country forced us to receive him. From the condition mentioned, we bought him. We clothed and we fed him as he had never been clothed and fed before. He was treated with a kindness and a consideration which he never supposed that persons wearing the complexion of those who had brought him across the ocean, could manifest. He felt indeed in a new world. His new bondage, contrasted with the heartless tyranny from which he had just escaped, was almost like the fruition of perfect liberty.

This is no fancy sketch. It is said, that when the poor negroes would be brought ashore from the vessels of the slave traders, they would often run and kneel to the planters, and with streaming eyes and imploring gestures—in the most meaning and eloquent language by which suffering and agonized humanity could give utterance to its wishes—would beseech them to buy them and thus save them from returning to the chains and prisons and sufferings from which they had just been delivered.

Yes, sir, I repeat it: the abused and slandered south have been the great benefactors of the negro race. Compare the condition of that race here with their condition in Africa. And what was their condition in their native country? In every respect, they were the most degraded or all the human family. Dwarfish in stature, ungainly in person, in intellect but a remove above the ourang-outang, without law, without social comforts, cannibals, and sunk below idolatry into absolute feticism. In this country, they have been improved, physically and intellectually; all of them have been taught the true religion, and many of them are among the most pious christians in the land.

And as a general thing—if indeed it is not universally true of all brought into the United States—they were not taken from a state of freedom. A strange ignorance prevails on this point. The white slave trader obtained his slaves in Africa, from the black slave trader there. By the law of war every where recognized among the African tribes, the captive taken in battle was doomed to perpetual slavery. It was, then, in accordance with one of their own immemorial customs—by a law to which they had given their consent—that they were brought into bondage. Many of them were born in slavery. These were the persons usually purchased and brought into the south for sale, by the European and New England slave dealers. But scarcely had a stop been put to the importation of slaves to this country—scarcely had the last New England slaver disgorged its contents on the shores of the south, ere New England moralists began to discourse most sagely about the enormities of southern slavery. And I understood the distinguished gentleman from Fleming (Mr. M. P. Marshall,) to say, in his speech a few evenings since, that he esteemed slavery, as he supposed almost every delegate here did, to be a moral and social wrong!

Mr. M. P. MARSHALL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will correct him. I did not say that slavery was a moral and a social wrong; but a social and a political evil.

Mr. WALLER. I stand corrected; and am most happy to be thus corrected. At all events, the eloquent gentleman from Knox (Mr. Woodson,) quoted—I do not know that he endorsed—some Doctor of Divinity who maintained that slavery was contrary to the teachings of Holy Writ, and was a sinful relation. I do not intend, and in this perhaps I shall disappoint the expectations of some, to enter into any elaborate argument in relation to the Bible doctrine on this subject. It is certain, that many abolitionists of the north have discarded the Bible, because they could find in it nothing to sustain their wild extravagance on the subject of slavery. Besides, the Bible is in every body's hands, and the most ordinary capacity may readily comprehend what it teaches respecting this relation. I am not prepared, like my friend from Boyle, (Mr. Talbott,) to establish the connection between the slavery originating in the curse of Noah, just this side of the flood, and the slavery existing in this country. Nor do I feel it at all necessary that I should do so. I meet the charge that the relation between master and slave is a sinful relation, on broader grounds. Taking the Bible as a standard of morals, and I affirm it inculcates no such sentiment. It tells us that many of the holy men of old were slaveholders; and it does not intimate that their being so involved them in peculiar guilt. Abraham, the father of the faithful and the friend of God, was a larger slaveholder, by far, than any in our country. When the Almighty descended upon Mount Sinai, attended by the flash of the lightning and the roar of the thunder, he did not esteem slavery a sinful relation; for then how could he have said, in the only document he ever wrote for man with his own hand—in the decalogue—that it was wrong to covet your neighbor's man-servant or his maid-servant? In the constitution which He gave to the children of Israel, if the relation was sinful, would He whose name is Holiness, have allowed them, as he did by express grant, to obtain bond-men and bond-maids of the heathen round about, which were to remain as the possession of themselves and their children forever? Aye, and when the Son of God, in the fullness of time came into the world, he found slavery existing throughout the then known world. He met it wherever he went. In his every day associations, it was before him. Did he denounce it as sinful? Did he at any time make an abolition, or even an emancipation speech? Did he tell the master that he was living in sin? Did he denounce it as a social and a moral wrong? Never, sir, never. Nor did his holy apostles. They were commissioned of him to set up his kingdom in the earth—a kingdom into which nothing impure or unholy was to enter. From that kingdom, by express statute, the drunkard, the liar, the swearer, the debauchee, and all that were unrighteous were excluded; and yet into it were admitted the slaveholder and his slaves. In view of these facts, whatever Doctors of Divinity may say, is it not most monstrous to suppose that slaveholding is a sinful relation? If so, why did not the Redeemer abolish it? If a moral and a social wrong, why did not He who is head over all things to the church, in banishing the idolater, the liar, the drunkard, &c., from the church, not also banish the slaveholder?

But, sir, it falls in "horrible discord" upon my ears, to hear gentlemen here or elsewhere insinuate, that slavery is sinful, and yet remain slaveholders. If I believed it a sin, I would not retain the relation one hour, for all the glittering ore of earth. What! persist in a known and admitted sin—to sin wilfully after that we have attained to a knowledge of the truth—with a life evanescent as the morning vapor and as the early dew—liable in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, to be summoned before the judgment seat of God! What madness to remain an hour wittingly in a sin from which we might so easily disburden ourselves! If it be a sin, it is one we have no excuse to remain in. We may easily rid ourselves of it. We should prove our faith by our works. God abhors those who merely draw nigh him with their mouths, and honor him with their lips. This is a sin in which no one need remain. If his conscience is oppressed by it, he can and he ought to relieve himself of the burden under which he groans. He should not think to excuse himself by urging the example of others. They are not so enlightened as he professes to be. Besides, he must give an account for himself, and not for another.

Nor does the charge of the sinfulness of slavery come with any better grace from the other side of Mason and Dixon's line. The worthy denizens of "the land of steady habits," with more than wonted nasal twang in the utterance, are accustomed to call the slaveholders of the south "man-stealers," and to quote as applicable to their circumstances, the denunciations of scriptures applied to that class of evil doers. If negroes were stolen from Africa, sir, the people of the north were the thieves, so far as this country ever furnished any such persons. True, as the present New Englanders say, it was their fathers and not themselves who were engaged in the African slave trade. Admit the excuse and allow it all its force, and what then? Why like those of old who lamented the sins of their ancestors, and built the tombs of the prophets and garnished the sepulchres of the righteous, our northern friends bear testimony that they are the children of men-stealers! It is like the admission of those who confess, that "———their ancient but ignoble blood,

Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood."

And as their fathers did, so do they unto this day. They prove themselves worthy sons of such sires. For the citizens of the north even to this present speaking, will steal negroes, as all the south can testify.

But it is not only thus that the charge recoils upon them. Much of the wealth of New England was obtained in the negro trade. This "price of blood," to use one of their own patent expressions, has entered into all the business and institutions of the north. It has aided in building their cities, their colleges, and their churches. Their whole land is tainted with it, and its impurity adheres to the very garments of the abolition lecturers themselves. They have sold us the sin, and now want to force us to give it up while they retain the price! Whilst they are luxuriating in the profits of their iniquities, we hurl back their charges into their teeth, and tell them to learn that great lesson of christianity, to first cast the beams out of their own eyes, that they may see clearly how to cast the motes out of their brethren's eyes.

The gentleman from Knox (Mr. Woodson) indulges in comparisons between Kentucky and certain of the so called free states, showing their superiority in education, population and wealth. The gentleman from Jefferson, (Mr. Meriwether) so successfully and triumphantly met and exposed that argument, as to render it wholly unnecessary further to allude to it. It is a trite saying, that "comparisons are odious." For one, however, I am bold to say, that I know nothing in her present condition or in her past history, that would call a blush to my cheek in contrasting this my native state with any state of the west or with any state in this Union. She occupies a proud eminence in this glorious confederacy of states. The halo of her glory is as bright and as beautiful as that which encircles the brow of the first and the noblest of her sisters.

Look at Kentucky. Where are those eviden-ees of decay and desolation, in morals, intelligence, or wealth, which some imagine to exist? Where is that moral, or social, or political blight which it is intimated prevails in our borders? Where upon the face of the whole earth can you find a people more prosperous, enjoying more of the comforts of life—more hospitable, generous and brave—more virtuous and intelligent, than in Kentucky?

True, we have not increased in population so fast as our neighbors. Many of our citizens have emigrated to other states; but it was not slavery that drove them away. This my friend from Jefferson (Mr. Meriwether) has incontestably shown. Kentucky is now the mother of states, but her children did not leave her because they abhorred this "peculiar institution." For if so, why did they not go to the states where it did not exist? Why did nine-tenths of them go to slave states? This meets and refutes the charge that slavery has driven many from our borders.

But population and prosperity are not always synonymous terms. If some of our neighbors are outstripping us in population, so they are in pauperism and crime. In several of the free states, pauperism is increasing in a ratio appallingly in advance of that of population. But sir, what sort of population does slavery keep out of Kentucky? Why, I suppose the abolitionists, who are so superlatively pure that they fear contamination if brought in contact with the slaveholder. And perhaps, too, we are deprived of those hordes of European paupers, vagabonds, and criminals, who constitute so large a portion of the boasted population of the free states. If so, I am content. I prefer that Kentucky soil should be owned by Kentucky's sons. At least, I am content with the character of the population which we now have.

We have been told that in almost every thing, the north is superior to the south. Sir, I love and honor the north. I envy not her greatness. I would detract nothing from the excellency of her institutions. The men of the north are our brethren—our fellow-countrymen; and we should all rejoice in the prosperity of any portion of our country. But a necessity is placed upon us to defend the south, especially when her own children assail and misrepresent her. I deny southern inferiority, as some have asserted it here. The north and the south have each their excellencies and their deficiencies. I need not now pause to point these out, and to present them in contrast. It is enough for all present purposes that we attempt to show from the history of our country, that the south is not that insignificant and unimportant portion of this confederacy, which northern fanatics and their sympathisers have asserted. What part of this country has contributed more than the south, to fashion and form this great republic, and to elevate her to that exalted eminence which she now occupies? The eloquent statesman who moved, and he who penned the Declaration of Independence, were southern men and slaveholders. The commander-in-chief of the armies of the revolution—"first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen,"—was a southern man and a slaveholder. All the great presidents, those whom the people delighted to honor, were southern men and slaveholders. For fifty years, the reins of government of this great nation have been held by southern men and slaveholders. Only twelve years were they held by northern men, and in every instance the people snatched them from their hands at the first opportunity. The most illustrious generals of the last war with Great Britain, as well as of the war with Mexico, were men born and nurtured in the south. No man acquainted with our history, but must be constrained to confess that the slave states, more than any other states, have contributed to render our country great at home, and illustrious abroad, both upon the battle-field and in the halls of legislation—that southern men have done most to make us the great and the renowned nation that we are. In what, then, consists that southern inferiority, of which so much has been said? Sir, the history of our country teaches no such inferiority. It has no foundation in truth—it is but the vision of a dream.

I do not profess to be blessed with a Seer's vision. I cannot tell, therefore, by what inspiration gentlemen speak, who so oracularly predict the certain downfall of slavery. I suspect, however, that the "wish is father to the thought"—that they are but giving utterance to the warm desires of their hearts. But I am wholly unmoved by those spectres of danger so terrible in the eyes of some. Kentuckians never take counsel of their fears. It is in vain then to tell them, that their state lies upon the border of the slave states; and that if a disruption of this Union should occur, (which God forbid!) that here would be the battle field, and that this would become again the dark and bloody ground. Suppose Kentucky were to become a free state, would she not still be a border state? Would she not be surrounded on three sides by slave states, and be separated from them in the main, by only imaginary lines; while now she has free states only one side, and they divided from her by the Ohio river? Her position would not be at all changed then, by this change of her institutions. She still would be on the borders. She would still have to mingle in the conflict supposed. And would she then more than now seek the sympathy and alliance of the north, and especially to subdue and destroy her sisters of the south? Would she ever enlist under the fanatical banner of abolitionism to wage war upon southern institutions? No, sir, she will not desert in the hour of danger the warm and generous south, bound to her by so many ties and dear to her by so many fond recollections. If that terrible conflict must come, and the south must fall, Kentucky will perish with her. The blood of the last of her sons will moisten the soil beneath which sleeps the bones of Washington, Jefferson, Marion and Jackson. Who that knows the character of our state can indulge a doubt respecting this prediction? Dead must be her heart to all its past impulses, to beat in unison with any other sentiment.

Even granting slavery to be an evil to the extent contended for by certain delegates, it is an evil into which the citizen has been involved by the action of the state. And I hold it to be a correct political maxim, that the state has no right to remove an evil of her own creation, at the expense and to the injury of individual citizens. Inasmuch then, as by express grant of law, private property to the amount of more than $60,000,000 has been suffered to vest in slaves, it would be unjust, it would be iniquitous to deprive those citizens of that property, without their consent or without compensation. It would be legalized robbery. By the laws of our state and of our nation, the citizen's title to slave property, is as perfect as that to any other description of property whatever. The right of property in slaves has been too long and too well settled to be called in question now. As before shown, it is recognized in the sacred scriptures. Great Britain acknowledged it, in providing compensation to the owners when she emancipated the slaves in the West Indies. The same doctrine has been recently asserted in the French Assembly, respecting the slaves liberated in the French colonies. It was admitted by the states that enacted emancipation laws; for in all of them the citizen was permitted to sell or else to remove with his slaves to another state. Very few negroes have ever been emancipated by northern philanthropy. They rid themselves of slavery by selling into the south. While more than two hundred thousand negroes have been voluntarily emancipated by the south, a far greater number have been enslaved by the north, and few, very few, if any at all, have ever been emancipated there.

Without multiplying examples, let these suffice to show that the right to slave property is unquestionable—it is guaranteed by all the sanctions of law. Thus far I feel safe in going. I am not prepared to lend my approval to certain sublimated abstractions which have been so warmly and eloquently advocated here. They are new to me. I can see very little benefit to accrue to the individual, before a court of justice who has no other title to his property than that which he claims to be above, and anterior to all law. It is enough for all practical purposes, to prove that the owner has a legal right to his slaves, to furnish this convention with a justification in saying, that he shall not be deprived of that property without his consent—that he shall be protected in it; and that it shall not be forced from him, either suddenly or gradually. Such I have hitherto supposed to be the true doctrine on this subject.

Sir, if emancipation ever occurs in this state it must, if righteously done, be by the operation of moral causes. The voluntary principle is the only just and safe principle. Moral power is the mighty engine which moves America on to greatness. It is that which gives stability to our government without standing armies. It is that which has raised and beautified our social, civil, religious and political institutions. It is the power which is fast marching to the empire of the world. It will regulate slavery in the way it ought to be regulated, and nothing else will or ought.

We have very few emancipationists in Kentucky. The world has been greatly imposed upon in this respect. It has fallen to my lot to meet with very few Kentucky emancipationists or even to hear of them. To emancipate the negro, is to make the negro a freeman. Now, who among all our prominent emancipationists, so called, recommended any such measure? Not one of them, sir. Nothing of the kind was suggested by the emancipation convention, assembled in this hall last spring. On the contrary, their project of "gradual prospective emancipation coupled with colonization," was a most magnificent scheme of wholesale negro trading to the south. Besides, sir, nearly all of the redoubtable emancipation champions in Kentucky are slaveholders—some of them very large slaveholders. Have any of them emancipated their slaves? Do you suppose that any of them will? Judging of the fountain by the stream, who can possibly discern any appearance of emancipation in this very extraordinary gushing forth of purpose? They might ere this have set their negroes free. Nothing but their own will has hindered them. They are left without excuse. With most remarkable complacency, they have asked you to become emancipationists, while they have carefully abstained from becoming so themselves! They wished to force you into the system, while they would not take a step towards it. They would lay burdens upon your shoulders, and would not touch with the tips of their fingers! Never in the whole history of the language has a word been so perverted and abused, as this word emancipation, by the self-styled emancipationists.

It was no love of the negro which prompted this movement in Kentucky. No philanthropy or religion entered into its conception, or was to control its operations. It was a mere matter of political economy—a cold and heartless calculation of profit and loss. It is to redound to the benefit of the few at the expense of the many. The rich champion of emancipation would convert his slaves into cash. The operations of his system would for a time at least, so it was granted, reduce the value of land. He would vest the price of his negroes in land—enlarge his domains—surround himself with a dependent and cringing tenantry—and then what a man of consequence he would become!—what a number of votes he could control at an election! His poor negroes in the meantime, over whom he had shed so many tears of sympathy, would be laboring as slaves upon the cotton fields and sugar plantations of the far south!

I appeal to you if these are not legitimate inferences from the facts in the case. The whole plan was cruelty to the negro and injustice to his owner:—cruel to the former, because it would result in his being torn away from those with whom he had been brought up and with whom he had many sympathies, and sent off to be a slave among strangers; and unjust to the latter, because it robbed him of property to which he was as rightfully entitled as to any he possessed.

The colonization feature was all a mere pretence—calculated merely to mislead and bewilder. It was ridiculously visionary. To colonize in Africa some five thousand persons annually, for fifty or a hundred years, would exhaust the revenues of the nation. Besides to send that number there to encounter a wilderness and an unfamiliar climate—without any reference to character or constitution—would be but to send them to inevitable destruction. I am the friend of African colonization. The success which thus far has attended that enterprise, to me furnishes unmistakable evidence of its future prosperity. Already the printing press is there. The forrest has been felled, and farms opened. Towns and villages have been erected. Common schools and churches abound there; and the high road to wealth and greatness lies open before them. I hope the time may come when all the liberated slaves of America will find a home in the land of their fathers—that they will return freemen and christians to those shores from which, in days gone by, their fathers were brought in slavery and heathenism—and thus become pioneers in the redemption and regeneration of that long lost and benighted continent. But the colonization enterprise is still in its infancy. We cannot yet foresee its exact future destiny. I believe, however, it is pregnant with good to the negroes of this country, many of whom are rapidly becoming qualified for citizenship there.

It is certain the negro can never be free in this country, and I trust that this constitution will forbid the mockery of his being called so again in this state. It is better for the negroes and for the whites, that while they stay amongst us they should remain in slavery. Their welfare and our own imperiously demand this. Let fanatics talk as they may about the natural rights of man, they cannot make the negro free in the United States. They may read to him the Declaration of Independence until they become hoarse, and still they cannot change the Ethiopian's skin. He is no where free in this country. In the north, he scarcely enjoys any other liberty but that of starving and dying. He is not admitted into the social circle of the whites. He cannot eat at the same table, or ride in the same coach with them. He is assigned a separate seat in the church and worships at a different altar; and when he dies, his body is placed in a graveyard at a distance from that in which repose the ashes of the whites. He is in a far worse condition in every respect than his brother in slavery at the south. No state wants the free negroes. Most of them have stringent laws against their admission. Every where they are spurned and trodden under foot. They are an unmitigated curse, as a general thing, in our state. There are honorable exceptions it is true; but even those exceptions do not furnish instances where they are free in any correct acceptance of that term. Policy and humanity then combine in urging that if the negro be emancipated, he should be sent beyond our borders.

I wish now to say a few words to the advocates of the law '33 and to those who are opposed to it. If I understood the views of my distinguished friend from Madison, (Mr. Turner,) he wishes to prohibit the importation of slaves, by declaring all free who may be imported. This is not the law of '33—it is more like the "Wilmot proviso." It might prevent the importation of slaves, but it would certainly favor the importation of free negroes. For instance, a man in a neighboring state, having a negro he wished to emancipate, all he need do would be to send him to Kentucky, and he would be free! *Now I am opposed to all this. And I am equally opposed to a constitutional prohibition of the passage of such a law. Let the constitution remain unchanged on this point. Leave it to be regulated by the people through their representatives. I hope, therefore, that my friend from Simpson, (Mr. Clarke,) will not press his motion to grant liberty in the constitution to any citizen to import slaves for his own use. It is important that Kentucky should not be distracted and divided now upon the slave question. It is important that our state should stand firm upon her old platform. The slavery question is now shaking our national government to its foundation. Hitherto Kentucky has acted as a mediator between the contending parties of the north and the south. Her voice has more than once been potent in staying the agitation of the waters of strife, discord and disunion. If she would maintain her position as peace maker, she must stand firm where she has ever stood in relation to this question—avoiding alike northern and southern extremes.

We are particularly interested in maintaining the integrity of our national government, as handed to us by our fathers. Let us unite our voices with that of the hero of New Orleans, in vindication of the sentiment: "the Union—it must be preserved." The states of this, no longer western, but central valley, are united together by the indissoluble bonds of nature. The "father of waters" flowing through its midst, stretches his arms from the Rocky mountains to the Alleghennies, and encircles in one fond embrace all the states of this great valley. Our disseverance then cannot be accomplished without political suicide. The slave question and no other question can separate the western states. It seems then a sacred duty of ours not to let this question divide other states.

All the recollections of our history ought to endear this Union to every American heart. Look at the declaration of our independence; and to that document are signed promiscuously the names of northern and southern men. Go to the battle fields of the revolution, and in the same grave mingles the dust of northern men with the dust of southern men, and there let them rest in quietude until aroused at the resurrection. The same historic page which records the deeds of Washington, Sumpter and Marion, of the south, in the war of the revolution, also records those of Putnam, Warren and Greene, their illustrious compatriots of the north. Let him who would destroy this confederacy first obliterate the evidences of the union which existed among those who gave us our liberties and founded this government. Let him tear the declaration of independence so as to separate its northern from its southern signers. Let him violate the graves of the illustrious dead, and permit no longer the soldiers who died for our liberties to sleep in the same grave. Let him read the page of history on which are the recorded deeds of Warren and Washington—of northern and southern heroes—so that the one shall not stand connected with the other; and then let him demolish the work of their hands! Who would

*I think it due to Mr. Turner to state, that there was a provision in his plan which had escaped my memory at the time of speaking. It is as follows: "But any slave who shall become free by being brought to Kentucky shall be sold into slavery, and the proceeds paid into the public treasury."

have torn asunder the "star spangled banner" which has waved so long over "the land of the free and the home of the brave?" No sir, if that proud eagle, the emblem of our country's union and liberty, which has soared so high and so gloriously, the wonder and admiration of the world, is ever to be struck down, God forbid, that a Kentuckian's arm should wing the shaft which is to arrest the noble bird in his etherial flight.

I beseech gentlemen to yield their preferences on the law of '33 and its opposite; that we may, as in times past, speak peace to the troubled elements of the country. Let us say to the north, we occupy now on this subject, the ground which we did when our fathers on the battle field fought and bled for northern rights; and let us make the same appeal to the south, and it may be, our voice will be heard. For one, I am content that this subject shall remain as it has ever been in the organic law of our state. Let who else may, I am not ashamed of my state, no matter with what other state compared.—Twice I have stood upon other soil than that over which floated the stars and the stripes of my native land; and I trod the ground of the stranger, feeling prouder than ever, that I was an American. I have been in nearly all the free states of this union; I have scanned inquiringly, their moral, social, and political condition—I have walked the streets of their greatest cities, and examined the elements of their wealth and prosperity, and never yet did I feel the least disposed to shrink from the declaration, that I was a Kentuckian. Kentucky is no mean state in the estimation of her neighbors. The chivalry of her heroes and the eloquence of her statesmen have carried her fame to the utmost bounds of civilization. There is nothing in her present condition, nothing, I am sure, in her past history, which should make her sons ashamed to call her mother. I would not disturb her social relations. I want her still to remain the land of hospitality, and of noble and generous impulses. In behalf of my constituents then, I beseech you let this institution stand wholly undisturbed, without any change.

Mr. CLARKE. I should not at this time detain the convention with any remarks, were it not that the gentleman last up, (Mr. Waller,) and others who have recently spoken, gentlemen who claim to be pro-slavery men, say—and they look over in this direction when they do say it—that upon the subject of slavery they cannot go so far as some other gentlemen go, but that they are still pro-slavery men, and profess to argue for the perpetuation of the institution in the state of Kentucky.

The gentleman from Fleming, (Mr. M. P. Marshall,) a few days ago, stated that he regarded the institution of slavery as a moral and a social evil. That gentleman, Mr. President, declined voting for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Henderson; he also declined voting for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Bourbon; in both of which the principle was asserted that property existed anterior to governments or the formation of constitutions; that "arbitrary and absolute power over the lives, property, and liberty of freemen, existed nowhere in a republic, not even in the largest majority." That gentleman declined voting for either of these propositions, both embracing the same principle; and having declined voting for either of these propositions, it seems that that gentleman believes that the power does exist in a republican government to take away, by a majority, the life, liberty, and property of the citizen, against his consent, and without making him compensation. Now, if the gentleman from Fleming entertains opinions of that sort, and does believe that the institution of slavery, as it exists in Kentucky, is a moral and a social evil, then, if I were he, I would stand up in this convention, and before the world proclaim that there was power in this convention to get rid of that evil, and that it ought to be exercised. I would go for emancipation, direct and immediate, if I entertained such principles. The gentleman last up, (Mr. Waller,) declares that he cannot go so far as other gentlemen go; that he does not believe that the institution of slavery, in the abstract, is a blessing to both races. Now, sir, I have never attempted in this house to advance any opinion on the subject of slavery in the abstract. I, for one, have expressed no opinion on that subject. "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof." When it becomes necessary for me to express an opinion upon that subject, I will do so; but I will say, as I have said time and again, that the institution of slavery, as it exists in Kentucky and the other slave states of the union, is a blessing to both the white and the African race. I will not, sir, after so much has been said upon the subject of slavery, and at a time when the opinion of every gentleman has become a "fixed fact," detain this convention with an argument to prove that the institution of slavery, as it exists in Kentucky and in every slave state in the union, is a blessing to both races. I will content myself by referring the gentleman from Woodford, (Mr. Waller,) to the able lecture of Mr. Elwood Fisher, of Ohio, "on the north and south," a lecture to which, if I understood his speech aright, he is indebted for most of the facts, arguments, and figures, which compose the very lengthy speech just delivered by him.

If the historical facts and statistics embraced in that able lecture, are not sufficient to convince one who professes to be a pro-slavery man, that the African slave in Kentucky is happier and better than in any other condition in which the same race has ever been placed or can be placed—if the same admirable address does not uncontestedly show the superiority of the Kentuckian, in self-sacrificing patriotism, in morals, in chivalry, and in wealth, over the white race in any free state in the union, then, sir, I will not tax myself, or this convention, by "casting pearl" before such pro-slavery men.

Mr. DUNAVAN moved the previous question and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was taken on the adoption of the section, and it was rejected.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE offered the following, to supply the place of the section just stricken out.

"The general assembly shall have power to pass laws to punish free negroes, for crime or misdemeanors, in such mode as is now prescribed by law. Or, may substitute as punishment for crime or misdemeanors, banishment and transportation out of the state, or a sale into involuntary servitude."

Mr. HARDIN. There is a difficulty in this, Mr. President, which I do not see how we can overcome. How can we send these negroes out of the state? We have no jurisdiction in this matter. We know that if a man commits murder in Virginia or Tennessee, by a requisition from the governor of either of these states upon the governor of Kentucky, the criminal would have to be surrendered; but I do not see that we have any power to banish a man, and if we had we have no place to which to send him.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. I should suppose Mr. President, that although we have not exercised the same power which some of the states of this Union have by the purchase of, and the maintaining a colony upon the coasts of Africa, it is not because we do not possess that power, but because no emergency has hitherto arisen rendering it expedient that such a power should be exercised by Kentucky. It may have been thought by some, that under the existing constitution of the state, this power is not vested in the legislative department. We know that Maryland, as a sovereign state of this Union has owned and governed a colony upon the coast of Africa, which for a series of years, was called the "Maryland colony." I am not prepared to say, and I will not go into a discussion on the point at this moment, that the state of Kentucky cannot, in her sovereign capacity, own and control such a colony, if she chooses to do so. I cannot admit that she is not able, as a sovereign state, to own property, real and personal, within any territory but her own state. She may acquire and own real estate on the Rocky mountains if she pleases; she may own real estate in any of the governments of Europe, if there is no law in such government against it, subject to the eminent domain of the foreign government. There is no inhibition in the nature and structure of our government against such a power; but what my amendment contemplates is this: without undertaking to decide whether there can or cannot be exercised, a power, by any legislative enactment, of holding a territory beyond our own state, is to give the general assembly power to adopt some means of transporting beyond the jurisdiction of this commonwealth, a free negro convicted of crime. I want to leave the field open to future legislative action upon this subject. If the legislature does not, and cannot possess such power, then it only remains for them to make such regulations for the punishment of crime, as may come within the limit of their power—such as have heretofore been exercised. Sir, we deny to this portion of the population of Kentucky—free negroes—the enjoyment of any political or social rights, nevertheless they are human beings, they have civil rights; and it is the duty of government not to invade those rights, or to treat them with cruelty. But if, when the evil of crime has grown so intolerable as to render it necessary for us to take some steps towards effecting a remedy; if, under these circumstances, we cannot exercise the power of banishment as a punishment, let us at least give to the law-making power the choice of determining whether this class, when guilty of crime, shall, upon the second, third or fourth conviction, either be punished by banishment or sale into involuntary servitude, or whether by imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. Confinement in the penitentiary, of a free negro, presents but little terror to a dishonest free negro; and we all know, that with him at least, it is not considered any degradation of character. Let it be understood that if a free negro should be convicted of any crime he will be liable to be seized and sold into involuntary servitude, or be banished to some other country, beyond the United States. Let that be understood as the law of Kentucky, and instead of being annoyed with free negroes coming into the state, they will be very apt to keep away, and all the vicious ones we may now have, will leave the state as fast as they can. That is my amendment. I leave it with the convention to adopt or reject it as it may deem best.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL. I move to amend the amendment, by striking out the words "banishment and transportation out of the state."

The objection urged against this proposition by the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) that Kentucky has no power to banish her felons to another state, is met by the mover of the section with the suggestion that Kentucky might establish a colony upon the coast of Africa, or use some of those already in existence as a place of banishment; and seems to indicate that the colony of Liberia would be a fit receptacle and an appropriate place of punishment for the negro felons of Kentucky.

The colony of Liberia, sir, was established by the philanthropist and the christian to afford to the free blacks of the United States an asylum from that state of degradation, inevitable, so long as they remain in this country, and to furnish a home in the land of their fathers where, while we are relieved from the course of their presence among us, they can enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. It would not be possible to induce the free blacks to go to that country—a thing, in my opinion, much to be desired, and that which would be of infinite advantage to both white and black, to bond and free—if we convert it into a place of punishment instead of a place of refuge, a country, and a home.

The christian looks to this colony as tending to the fulfillment of that promise, "that I will give thee the heathen for an inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession." And it is true, that to shed the light of religion and civilization upon the dark sons of Africa, has been the most difficult task of the christian minister. They have ever known the white man as the enemies of their race, and cannot, and will not, receive them as ministers of mercy. From those of their own color who even in their degraded condition—the condition of slaves—have been elevated in intellect and morals far, very far, above them, they must receive their first lessons in civilization and christianity.

And when we see the sons of the desert, cannibals, whose fathers were forced from their home—if home it could be called—returning to their father land, fitted by their masters for the work, carrying the "glad tidings" to their benighted brethren, well may we exclaim, "just and true are all thy ways thou King of saints."

I cannot, for one, agree to do that which would have a tendency to defeat the objects for which this colony was instituted; and it cannot be questioned, that to send the worst of our black population—men destitute of all moral restraint—criminals—to force these upon the colony, would subvert the great ends of its institution; and I desire to see the free blacks remove from this country; I wish them to be willing to go; and I cannot say to them in our laws, that the home to which we invite them is worse than a penitentiary. Sir, it is not so. I look upon these colonies as the only bright spots on that benighted coast—Oases, from which the streams moral and intellectual may flow, to make the “desert bloom and blossom as the rose”—a home for the black man in that climate congenial to his nature, where alone he can enjoy those social, civil, and religious blessings, which here he has loved and wishes for, though not fully enjoyed. I cannot cast a shade, a suspicion upon these colonies, by pointing to them in our laws as fit only for criminal stations.

I hope that the gentleman from Nelson, who is both a statesman and a christian, will agree to strike out of the section the words I have proposed to strike out.

Mr. HARDIN. I want to strike out those words because I do not think we have the power to expel a free negro from this state. The free negro, sir, has a vested right to his freedom, and a vested right to his residence here. You may pass laws prohibiting a man from setting the slaves he may now own, or their increase, free; you may pass laws providing that if he does, that they shall not remain in Kentucky; you may pass laws prohibiting free negroes, from other states, from coming in here; but you cannot pass a law, according to my understanding, to compel a free negro who is here to leave; and, to convict him for refusing to do that, is, in my opinion, to convict him for what is no offence. He has, it is true, no political rights in Kentucky; and we know that he is excluded by public sentiment from many social rights; but he owes us allegiance, and we owe him the corresponding right of protection. He is bound to obey our laws; he is bound to contribute towards the support of our government according to his property, and we owe him, in return, what is called local protection.

Sir, the Spanish government once put in jail a man of the name of Richard Meade: they had no right to do this, because he had been a long time a resident of Spain, and Spain owed him protection. He had not become a subject of Spain, but she owed him local protection because he owed to that government, while there, local allegiance; and upon that state of the case being represented to Spain, they released him. If you look into the decisions of the supreme courts of the United States, and those of the admiralty of Great Britain, you will find that an American citizen, domiciled in Great Britain when war is declared, is entitled to protection, and their vessels then in British ports cannot be captured, because Great Britain owed them local protection; and the same rule applies to British subjects and British vessels in this country under similar circumstances.

Now we owe to the free negro, local protection, and he owes us local allegiance. That allegiance is to submit to our laws, to obey our laws, and to pay taxes according to the property he may possess. I would submit to this honorable convention that these negroes are poor human beings, and upon the score of humanity, I would ask, would you treat them thus? Prevent, if you choose, the owner from setting his negro free; but every precept of humanity, every law of christianity forbids that we should treat them worse than we would treat dogs. They have a right to enjoy their freedom, when free, as we have to enjoy ours. They have no political rights, but they have every civil right that we have; and what is more, their skin will not be black when they go to heaven, and stand before the judgment seat of Christ; there sir, they will be robed as white as we are, and we are to answer for our treatment to them here. I hope my colleague will not press that amendment; it is at war with every feeling of my heart. They have the same inheritance in the blood of Christ that we have, and we are bound to treat them with humanity.

Sir, what does the amendment propose? That you have a right to send them into banishment, or involuntary servitude for crime. Then sir, if you carry that amendment we have a right to define crime. Now, I deny the policy of that, and I deny the right of it. And you are to sell them out of the state, not as a punishment to keep them from crime hereafter, but you are to subject them to slavery upon what we, the whites, call crime. Sir, I object to this.

But it is said we may transport them. I deny it. Can you send your officers with a human being beyond the limits of this state? Have you jurisdiction to send a gang of negroes to any place in the United States? No sir. But the gentleman says we may send them to some country which we may acquire. But we cannot acquire any country. If we acquire any country from foreign nations, it is forbid by the constitution of the United States, which provides that “no state shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation, grant letters of marque and reprisal, coin money, omit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility.”

Now sir, no state can make any treaty with any foreign nation. There is no reservation of power. Can we make any negotiations with any lawful prince or king of Africa to which we may banish negroes and make it a kind of Botany Bay? No sir, we cannot do it at all. This is a matter which congress itself cannot do. Congress cannot appropriate money for the purpose of colonizing negroes; it is not within the power of congress to do it; and that is the reason why the federal government has never taken up the subject. It is provided in the federal constitution that “congress shall have power to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises,” to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States, but it has no power to appropriate money for the purposes of colonization at all; and that sir, has been decided over and over again. She can pay debts and provide for the general welfare of the nation. By the "general welfare of the nation" is meant an implied power given to the general government for the purpose of carrying the expressed powers into effect. That is the whole of it; and whenever you go beyond that, congress is as omnipotent as the British Parliament consisting of king lords and commons.

But, sir, congress has no power to appropriate money to send negroes to Liberia. I again repeat, I beg, I beseech, I conjure my colleague not to press this amendment. He may have the power, and the house may agree with him, but I do think it would be a reproach to this convention in the eyes of posterity for hundreds of years to come. Suppose, sir, a negro gets drunk; you call it a crime, and you sell him into servitude. Suppose he steals a chicken; you call it a crime, and you sell him into servitude for life. Suppose he goes a fishing on the sabbath; you call it a crime, and you sell him into servitude. Why, sir, you may make anything a crime if you please. Let the free negroes take the same laws that we have. If they commit murder let them be hung; if they commit other crimes let them go to jail or the penitentiary. Debar them of any political rights—I am against that; debar them of social rights—I am against their intermixing with the white population at all. When you have done that, you have done all. They have no political rights or power; and when we have the power we are bound to protect them. In the language of Ulysses, when he bowed in his rags,

"A suppliant bends, Oh! pity human woe, 'Tis what the happy to the unhappy owe,"

Mr. TURNER. I would go for striking out the word "misdemeanor" in that resolution, and also part of what the gentleman from Jessamine has gone for—the selling into perpetual servitude. Now, sir, it is known that we hang negroes for a great many crimes for which a white man is only sent to the penitentiary. I would chose the least of the two evils. If a man commits a crime, send him into banishment; get clear of him in this way instead of hanging him. Now it is true, that the state of Kentucky has no jurisdiction beyond her limits; but as there is a colony organized by a society in the United States, a man has a right to transfer his negro to that society, and they have power to transport him. The younger gentleman from Nelson maintains nothing more than this. The court of appeals has decided that an individual wishing to emancipate his slaves has a right to do so; and the government has power to see that that will is executed, and that the slaves are sent off. If the government has power to do that, certainly it has power to avert a greater evil by giving a negro to this society instead of hanging him.

The elder gentlemen from Nelson has taken a position which I deny. How does the government of the United States get the power to purchase, and man, and sustain vessels to catch those engaged in the slave trade? Would not the same power which authorizes them to do this, authorize them to take away slaves from every state of the Union if they were willing to go? This would comport with the good of the whole states if congress would exercise the power, of sending all free negroes to the coast of Africa.

How would the government get the power to appropriate half a million of dollars to relieve the distress of Ireland; and yet it passed one branch of congress. Much might be said of this provision if we had time to discuss it; but I will ask, sir, what are we to do with free negroes here? I do not wish to act unkindly towards them, but they are not entitled to the protection of the constitution against their crimes. I am opposed to their being sold into slavery for a mere misdemeanor, but I am in favor of using the banishing power by framing laws to suit the state of the case, and to deliver them over to a society recognized by the federal government. I have no doubt that such a course would be productive of good, and I sincerely hope we shall have some such provision adopted in the constitution.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the legislature have not already the power to banish free negroes guilty of crime, it occurs to me that we cannot confer that power. I understand that under our government the legislature have all power where they are not restricted. If we could confer this power, I, as one of the delegates to this convention, would be willing to do so; but it is my opinion that this is a subject which we ought not to interfere with. I am sure if the delegates to this convention ever intend to go home they will see the propriety of confining themselves to legitimate business. We have been adopting measures not unfrequently, and then in a day or two, having seen their impropriety, have rejected them. This does not appear to me to be a matter of that crying importance which renders it necessary to make a provision for it in the constitution. I do not think the country demands it; and I would say that my feelings of justice corresponds with those of the elder gentleman from Nelson. They are, as he has said, a poor degraded race in our country; but they are here, and it is our duty to protect them. I would not, therefore, put such a clause into the constitution. There is no necessity for it. We would not make a provision in the constitution that a man should be hanged for any particular crime; this is distinctly the province of the legislature. That body has ample power to pass all necessary laws; and therefore, I hold it to be wholly unnecessary for us to make any such provision as this resolution appears to contemplate.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. From the remarks that have been made, it might be supposed that I was anxious to hang or transport every free negro in Kentucky, honest or dishonest; and that I have attempted to deny free negroes the blessings of the christian religion. No sir; I mean no such thing. What is the proposition I have offered? I do not propose to create crime or define it; I leave that with the legislative department of this government, acting under the influence of the high obligations which rest upon them as men and as christians. They will not deal with the subject of crime in the manner indicated by the opponents of this amendment; they will not declare that fishing on the Sabbath day by any one, bond or free, is an offence for which a man should be subject to expatriation or hanging, as my colleague apprehends. Our legislatures have not heretofore so legislated; and if we could imagine such a spirit of legislation to spring up in this commonwealth under the unlimited power of that body—limited only in this respect by a general clause which says that cruel punishments shall not be inflicted—they might apply the same wild definition of the word cruel, as applicable to the white man, if unrestricted by this clause in the constitution? Now sir, as to the free negro population, no man has more firmly and uniformly denounced it, than my colleague, as thievish, dishonest and corrupting. I do not propose to lay violent hands upon them by the powers of the law, and without crime thrust them into prison, the good and the bad; or drive them from the commonwealth, and deprive them of institutions of the state under which they have acquired their freedom and their property. No sir; I propose merely to give to the legislative power of this commonwealth, the power of providing for the punishment of crime, and the constitutional privilege of discriminating between theft or felony committed by the free white man, and the same committed by the free black man. You now punish a free black man under the same law by which you punish a white man; and you do so because he is free. He is hanged for no other offences than those for which you would hang a white man. Not so with the slave.

Now I propose to leave to the legislature the power, under our constitution, of discriminating between the punishments to be inflicted in such cases, and instead of sending a free negro to the penitentiary for a term of years, or for life, to send him into banishment. If the word "misdemeanor" is in the proposition which I have made, I desire it may be stricken out, as it was not my intention to use it.

Mr. President, I had supposed that at this time of day, there was no necessity for a discussion on the high political question that a sovereign state of this union had no power to make treaties, or enter into alliances with any foreign power or state. I had supposed that American jurists understood the difference between a contract and a treaty and an alliance. The article of the federal constitution, read by my colleague, denies the power of the state to make a political treaty or alliance. It never has been, and never could be considered by any jurist, that a state cannot make a contract with an individual or a sovereign, either in or out of the commonwealth, in reference to a subject matter of contracts. My friend before me, (Mr. Nuttall,) has just suggested that if the construction of my colleague on this section of the constitution is right, we cannot sell a bond to an individual out of this commonwealth. If so how can this commonwealth enter into a contract to pay these bonds after she has sold them? How can she transact the various business of this commonwealth under our institutions? I will not waste the time of this convention in discussing this matter, because I know there is too much intelligence in this body to believe that the power is denied to a state to make a contract with a foreign nation or power upon a matter which can be the subject matter of contract; and it is under that power—under that incidental sovereign power which belongs to any sovereign—that the state of Maryland has had her colony before Liberia was in existence.

Nor do I propose, as the gentleman supposes, that we should make a sort of Botany Bay colony of Liberia. I have not said they should be banished to Liberia, or to any particular spot, or state, or territory; I leave all that within legislative discretion, if they should deem it necessary to exercise the power, when the crisis in our history has arrived that shall make it a matter of self-defence to protect our slaves from the corrupting influences of free negroes. Is there any thing in this so monstrous as to call forth so much eloquence, and to bring down even the tears from the eyes of my colleague in this house? I propose to banish free negroes for crimes for which your legislature may in mercy hang them. I would send them out of the country, if I could, instead of confining them in penitentiaries for life, or for a term of years. I would give the legislature the power, if they can find the means to do so, to transport them—to send them off somewhere. If it cannot be done then comes up the question, to be presented to the legislature, whether we will continue the present mode of punishment of free negroes for such offences as burglary and arson, or whether you will not permit the legislature to see what effect it will have on the morals of the free negro population, to sell an offender into involuntary servitude. I will not detain the convention longer.

Mr. TRIPLETT. I hope gentlemen will vote against this amendment. Are we here, I would ask, for the purpose of giving more enlarged powers to the legislature of Kentucky, or of restricting and confining them? I deny that the legislature either can be or ought to be trammelled, by powers of this sort. Will the gentleman deny that the legislature have now the power to do what this section permits? He is too good a lawyer to deny it. The legislature have all power, except that of which it is deprived by the constitution of the United States, or the state of Kentucky. I ask that gentleman to point out any provision in either of these constitutions prohibiting the legislature from the exercise of the power he seeks to confer upon them; and if they have all power except wherein they are restricted, and if in this respect they are unrestricted, where the necessity of engrafting upon the constitution such a provision as this? Was not this power used under the laws of England? Was it ever prohibited in Virginia; and when Kentucky was separated from Virginia, was there any provision prohibiting the legislature from punishing crime by transportation? The very name of Botany Bay ought to have recalled to his mind the fact that transportation for crime was a noted punishment in England, and the well known fact, that up to the present day, the legislature has never been deprived of that power, should have satisfied him they have it, without our conferring it on them by this section. I am opposed to this proposition, because I regard it as an entering wedge to open an interminable field of discussion. If you go on this way, where will you end? If you give the legislature power to transport a free negro, why not at the same time give them power to hang a white man? We are here not for the purpose of extending, but of curtailing their powers—of fixing the barrier beyond which they shall not go, but not to define to them the extent and limits of those powers, within their legitimate sphere of action.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE. If that is the principle by which we are to be governed in this instance, why did not the gentleman apply his own principle yesterday, when he spoke so eloquently in reference to the codification of the laws?

Mr. TRIPLET. If I answer that question to the gentleman's satisfaction, will he withdraw his amendment, and promise not again to pester the convention with abstract propositions? I will proceed to answer him. I proposed to put that provision in the constitution for the purpose of compelling the legislature to perform a duty which they have hitherto neglected; not because they had not the power, but as a compulsory provision, to compel the legislature to discharge a duty which they ought to have discharged twenty years ago. That is a sufficient reason; and the gentleman must now resort to some ulterior reason for inserting such a provision as this. Leave to the legislature some discretion, for God's sake, in the exercise of the almost unlimited power you give them. There is one other idea I would suggest. If you go into detail here, you must go into detail on this question, you must go into detail on every other subject. Why go into this subject? Why waste the time of the convention in such unprofitable discussion? Are free negroes of more importance than your white population, or your slaves, that you must thus legislate so specially for them? I say again, for God's sake, leave to the legislature some discretion, and let us proceed with the legitimate business for which the country has sent us here.

Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE modified his amendment, by striking out the word "misdemeanors."

Mr. DESHA moved the previous question, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. A. K. MARSHALL called for the yeas and nays, on his amendment to the amendment, and they were taken, and were—yeas 57, nays 33.

YEAS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Johnston, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—57.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, Luther Brawner, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, Beverly L. Clarke, William Cowper, Chasteen T. Dunavan, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, George W. Kavanaugh, Martin P. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Elijah F. Nuttall, Larkin, J. Proctor, Thomas Rockhold, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, Squire Turner, John Wheeler, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Silas Woodson—33.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken on adopting Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE'S proposed section, as amended, by yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 34, nays 56.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, William C. Bullitt, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, C. T. Dunavan, J. H. Garrard, Andrew Hood, T. J. Hood, J. W. Irwin, G. W. Johnston, Thomas N. Lindsey, Alexander K. Marshall, Martin P. Marshall, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Thomas Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, William R. Thompson, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—34.

NAYS—John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, William Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Richard D. Gholson, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, John Hargis, Vincent S. Hay, William Hendrix, Thomas James, Wm. Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Silas Woodson, Wesley J. Wright—56.

So the proposed section was rejected.

EVENING SESSION.

The sections from the second to the ninth having been withdrawn by the chairman of the committee, (Mr. Meriwether,) the ninth section now became the second, and it was read, as follows:

"SEC. 2. They shall pass laws providing that any free negro or mulatto hereafter immigrating to, or being emancipated in, and refusing to leave this state, or having left, shall return and settle within this state, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and punished by confinement in the penitentiary thereof."

Mr. MERIWETHER called for the yeas and nays on the adoption of that section, and they were—yeas 72, nays 8.

YEAS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John S. Barlow, Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, Garrett Davis, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, James P. Hamilton, William Hendrix, Andrew Hood, Thomas J. Hood, James W. Irwin, Alfred M. Jackson, Thomas James, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, John H. McHenry, David Meriwether, William D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Robert N. Wickliffe, George W. Williams, Wesley J. Wright—72.

YAYS—William K. Bowling, Francis M. Bristow, Thos. J. Gough, Ninian G. Gray, Ben. Hardin, Alexander K. Marshall, Ira Root, James Rudd—8.

So the section was adopted.

The third section (the tenth in the report,) was read and adopted, as follows:

"SEC. 3. In the prosecution of slaves for felony, no inquest by a grand jury shall be necessary; but the proceedings in such prosecutions shall be regulated by law, except that the general assembly shall have no power to deprive them of the privilege of an impartial trial by a petit jury."

Mr. GAITHER moved the following as an additional section:

"The general assembly shall not have power to prohibit the introduction of slaves into the state by the citizens thereof, from other states for their own use, but their introduction by the citizens of this or any other state, whether openly or covertly for traffic, or merchandize, may be prohibited by the passage of such laws as the legislature shall deem most conducive to secure that end."

Mr. CLARKE called for the yeas and nays, and they were, yeas 32, nays 53.

YAYS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, William Cowper, Edward Curd, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, William Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Thomas James, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Thos. Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe Wesley J. Wright—32.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, Wm. K. Bowling, Luther Bawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, J. H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thomas P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, James Rudd, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, William R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—53.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARKE offered the following as an additional section:

"SEC. —. That the general assembly shall have no power to pass laws prohibiting the citizens of this state from importing slaves for their own use, but may pass laws requiring the importer of a slave or slaves to take an oath that said slave or slaves are for his or her own use, and not for merchandise; and that he or she will not sell said slave or slaves, within this Commonwealth, within — years after such slave or slaves are imported, under such penalties as may, from time to time, be provided by law: Provided, That the slaves thus imported shall not be such as have been charged with crime in other states.

Mr. BARLOW. I profess to be a pro-slavery man. The contest in my county turned on that question, and I came here with a majority of three hundred and fifteen votes. I came here opposed to the act of 1833 or any thing like it, and to oppose a principle, such as is contended for by my friend from Simpson. I am gratified to see the zeal with which he insists on his proposition, and I have no doubt he is authorized to take the stand he does, and that he takes it because he has been instructed to do it. I have been differently instructed; and for one, although I have received the disapprobation of a portion of my fellow citizens, and perhaps a portion of this body. I took it on myself last winter, when it was said this act was not just to different sections of the state, to vote for its repeal, so that persons might bring in negroes for their own use, and that alone. I take pleasure in voting with the pro-slavery portion of this body, but I cannot vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS offered the following as a substitute for the proposed section:

"No persons shall be slaves in this state except those who are now slaves and their descendants: Provided, That persons removing to the state, and citizens inheriting slaves out of the state, may import them into the state."

The previous question was called for, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. NUTTALL called for the yeas and nays, and they were—yeas 9, nays 79:

YAYS—Francis M. Bristow, Garrett Davis, Selucius Garfield, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, James W. Irwin, Ira Root, Squire Turner, George W. Williams—9.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Ap-

person, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Alfred Boyd, Wm. Bradley, Luther Brawner, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, James S. Chrisman, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Benjamin Copelin, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, Lucius Desha, James Dudley, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Wm. Hendrix, Thos. J. Hood, Thos. James, Wm. Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Charles C. Kelly, James M. Lackey, Peter Lashbrooke, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, Alexander K. Marshall, William C. Marshall, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, David Meriwether, Wm. D. Mitchell, Thomas P. Moore, John D. Morris, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, William Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, Thomas Rockhold, John T. Rogers, James Rudd, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, James W. Stone, Michael L. Stoner, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Philip Triplett, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, John Wheeler, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—79.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAITHER called for the yeas and nays on Mr. CLARKE'S amendment, and they were—yeas 32, nays 55:

YEAS—Alfred Boyd, William Bradley, Beverly L. Clarke, Henry R. D. Coleman, Wm. Cowper, Edward Curd, James Dudley, Green Forrest, Nathan Gaither, Wm. Hendrix, Thomas J. Hood, Thos. James, Charles C. Kelly, Jams. M. Lackey, Peter Lashbooke, Willis B. Machen, George W. Mansfield, William N. Marshall, Richard L. Mayes, Nathan McClure, William D. Mitchell, John D. Morris, Elijah F. Nuttall, Henry B. Pollard, Thomas Rockhold, Ignatius A. Spalding, John W. Stevenson, Michael L. Stoner, Philip Triplett, John Wheeler, Robert N. Wickliffe, Wesley J. Wright—32.

NAYS—Mr. President, (Guthrie,) Richard Apperson, John L. Ballinger, John S. Barlow, William K. Bowling, Luther Brawner, Francis M. Bristow, Thomas D. Brown, William C. Bullitt, Charles Chambers, William Chenault, Jas. S. Chrisman, Benjamin Copelin, Garrett Davis, Lucius Desha, Chasteen T. Dunavan, Benjamin F. Edwards, Milford Elliott, Selucius Garfelde, James H. Garrard, Thomas J. Gough, Ninian E. Gray, James P. Hamilton, Ben. Hardin, Vincent S. Hay, Andrew Hood, William Johnson, George W. Kavanaugh, Thomas N. Lindsey, Thomas W. Lisle, Alexander K. Marshall, Wm. C. Marshall, David Meriwether, Thos. P. Moore, Jonathan Newcum, Hugh Newell, Wm. Preston, Johnson Price, Larkin J. Proctor, John T. Robinson, John T. Rogers, Ira Root, Jas. Rudd, James W. Stone, Albert G. Talbott, John D. Taylor, Wm. R. Thompson, John J. Thurman, Howard Todd, Squire Turner, John L. Waller, Henry Washington, Andrew S. White, Charles A. Wickliffe, George W. Williams—55.

So the amendment was rejected.

ORGANIZATION OF NEW COUNTIES.

On the motion of Mr. C. A. WICKLIFFE, the committee of the whole was discharged from the further consideration of the report of the committee on the organization of new counties.

THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

The convention next proceeded to the consideration of the unfinished report of the committee on the legislative department.

The pending section was the sixth, as follows:

"SEC. 6. Representation shall be equal and uniform in this commonwealth, and shall be forever regulated and ascertained by the number of qualified voters therein. At the first session of the general assembly, after the adoption of this constitution, and every eighth year thereafter, provision shall be made by law, that in the year —, and every eighth year thereafter, an enumeration of all the qualified voters of the state shall be made. The number of representatives shall, in the several years of making these enumerations, be so fixed as not to be less than seventy-five nor more than one hundred; and they shall be apportioned for eight years next following, thus: counties, cities, and towns, having more than two thirds and less than the full ratio, shall have one representative; those having the full ratio and a fraction less than two thirds over, shall have but one representative; those having the full ratio and a fraction of more than two thirds over, shall have two representatives, and increase their number in the same proportion; counties having less than two thirds of the ratio, shall be joined to similar adjacent counties for the purpose of sending a representative: Provided, That if there be no such adjacent county, then such county having less than two thirds of the ratio, shall be united to that contiguous county having the smallest number of qualified voters, and the remaining representatives, if any, shall be allotted to those counties, cities, or towns, having the largest unrepresented fractions."

When last before the convention, this section Mr. Hardin moved to amend, by striking out the words, "number of qualified voters therein," and inserting the following: "the number of free white inhabitants of such county, town, or city, and who shall be citizens of the United States, and residents of the state two years, or of the county, town, or city, one year next preceding the enumeration, or children born within one year, of mothers who are entitled to be enumerated."

Mr. PRESTON moved to amend the amendment, by striking out all after the words, "the number of free white inhabitants of such county, town, or city."

Mr. President, I am willing to take the question as it now stands. There are only three bases of representation that I know of. We might have a fourth possibly. I was willing, at first, to stand by the old rule of qualified electors, but some seemed to think it better to have a larger basis. I desired to have one of those three basis acted upon in the United States. The federal basis is property and numbers, including three-fifths of the negroes. The second may be called the federal white basis. There is a third basis, which is that of the free white citizens of the country. The objection I had to the amendment of the gentleman from Nelson was, as I stated several days since, that it was of an heterogeneous character. We all know we have taken white males above twenty-one years of age, from the impossibility of ascertaining what was the qualification of citizenship. Now, if we adopt this plan, a plan I am unwilling to vote for, you invest the censor with unwarranted powers. We know the census taker has difficulties enough without this. And we all know that many a censor gets his head broken for being too inquisitive whilst in the performance of his duties.

A friend of mine says he once took the census, and had much difficulty. Another gentleman from another county says there is an old lady there who has broken the officers head three times, on account of the inquiry about the number of her children for she is unfortunate enough not to have any children; and when asked how many children she has, she turns the question into an assault and battery. We cannot make the census taker a judge of the qualifications of our citizens. The term qualified electors is sufficiently plain. I therefore, shall come down to one of the three bases. First, if you are willing to go the whole length, let us have free white inhabitants. Secondly, if we cannot have that, let us have free white citizens. If, not, let us stay where we are upon the basis of qualified electors. I probably have as much interest as any man in this house in this question, and I wanted a more extended basis, but so far as the welfare of this constitution is concerned, and its subsequent adoption, I feared we might have great difficulty in some of the interior counties. If we think it will give dissatisfaction on account of its taking some strength from them, we had better take the section as the committee have reported it. I want the yeas and nays on "white inhabitants," for by a parity of reasoning alone you cannot say that Paddy and Larry shall not be counted; the men who make your railroads, or labor on the public highways, and who may not be entitled to a vote, are to be counted as well as women and children. There are fourteen states of the Union, whose representative basis is on population, and the rest are arbitrary plans. I want the free white people of the commonwealth to form the basis of representation, if we vary from the old plan of enumeration which we have been accustomed to, and with which the people of the state have found no fault.

Mr. HARDIN. I offered an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Simpson on this subject, because he wished me to draw the attention of the convention to it. That is the way I came to offer the amendment. To be sure some gentleman was kind enough to say that I had suggested the thing to him. I had no communication with him. He was the first gentleman that suggested it to me, and asked me if I would vote for it, and I said I would. I would much rather have the basis as it was proposed by the committee than as my friend from Jefferson (Mr. Meriwether) proposes, that is, the qualified voters, instead of the white population. If the white population is to be the basis, it certainly should be that white population that are called citizens in the estimation of our laws. It is the voting population, if you take the voters as a basis; and if you take the white population, it should be those who are citizens. The gentleman from Louisville (Mr. Preston) has always at hand the acts and doings of other states. It is the readiest change in this house.

Yesterday, when there was something said about appointing some of the commissioners, he alluded to the code-Napoleon. And now he says the practice of this state is so and so, and the practice of that state is so and so. I care not what the practice of any state is, the question comes up to this; if you take as a basis, voters, they must be citizens, or naturalized citizens. If you take white population, give it the same basis. The reason why the gentleman from Simpson, offered the amendment was, that on the river, and in towns and cities upon the river bank, there was a very large disproportion of foreigners from what there were in the interior of the state, because if it were not for that, you might as well have taken the basis of voters once. There is a greater proportion of men at the river, that is, the number of voters comes nearer to the number of white people than in any other part of the state.

But the gentleman's argument is based upon two objections, one being the insuperable difficulty of taking the number. Where is the difficulty? The assessor has to ascertain who are qualified voters and who are not. Last year, in Jefferson county there was a difference of five hundred and twenty.

There is no difficulty in the commissioners asking how many white children there are about this house. How long will it take to ask, what is your white family. He would have to go into an investigation as to the ages of the children. If you inquire as to the men, whether they are natural born citizens or not, have you not to do it now? You have to take a man's word now whether he is naturalized or not. The only other difficulty is that of the old lady, and the last account I had of her she was dead. However, I do not know whether it will make a serious difference whether you take qualified voters or citizens. I am very anxious to be done with this subject. I have been charged with too much speaking; and I think I have talked too much. If I have troubled the house too frequently, I beg pardon.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President: Before the final vote is taken on this section, I propose to submit some remarks.

The basis of representation, which I had the honor to submit in this convention, has been denounced by many as novel in its character, and hence I suppose wrong.

For the purpose of furnishing the convention and the country with the policy which has been pursued by other states in establishing a basis, I have examined the constitution of every state in the union upon this point, and the following is the result of my investigations.

There are but three slave states in this union which have adopted "qualified voters" as the basis of representation, and those are Kentucky (by her old constitution,) Tennessee and Louisiana.

The states of Mississippi, Alabama and Texas have adopted "free white inhabitants" as their basis of representation.

The states of Maryland, Florida, Georgia, and North Carolina, have adopted federal numbers as the basis of representation.

The states of Arkansas and Missouri make "free white male inhabitants" the basis of representation, without regard to age.

The states of South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware make "territory and property" the principal basis of representation.

Thus, it will be seen, though the basis furnished by my resolution is declared a departure from a great principle, twelve of the fifteen slave states have adopted a basis different from the one I propose to change; and whilst many of them have adopted the liberal basis which I have suggested, a number have gone further, and planted themselves upon the basis of "federal numbers."

Now let us see how this great principle, a departure from which is to ruin the country and endanger the new constitution, (according to the opinions of some gentlemen,) has been estimated in the fifteen states.

And first: The states of Maine, Rhode Island, New York, with some restrictions, and New Jersey, have made population, or the inhabitants, the basis of representation.

The states of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Vermont, make territory and those who pay taxes on property, the basis of representation.

The state of Connecticut, which seems to be laid off into towns, gives to each town a representative without much regard to numbers or property, thus seeming to make municipalities or territory the basis.

The state of Pennsylvania makes taxable inhabitants the basis.

The states of Illinois, Michigan, and Iowa, make "white inhabitants" the basis.

Whilst the states of Ohio and Indiana alone, make "white male inhabitants, above the age of twenty one years," the basis of representation.

Showing but five states out of the thirty, that have made "qualified voters" or "male inhabitants above the age of twenty one years," the basis of representation, whilst a number of the very best states in the union have gone far beyond that which I propose, by making federal numbers the basis.

So far, then, as precedents go, I am quite as well, yea infinitely better sustained than gentlemen who cling with so much tenacity to the old basis.

Mr. President: immediately upon the passage of the resolution by the legislature at its session of 1847-8, submitting the question of a convention or no convention to the people, a number of persons, particularly in the southern part of the state, who were sensible of the many manifest defects in our present organic law, entertained fears that the tenure by which slave property was holden, would be weakened, if the constitution were submitted to a convention. There were those, nevertheless, who had an abiding confidence in the justice and moral honesty of the great mass of the people, and who believe that it was impossible that a majority of the states could so far forget the rights of a Kentucky citizen, and the ties which infancy have bound us to our sister states of the south, as to countenance, for one moment, any system of emancipation, or other act, by which property in slaves could, in any manner, be rendered insecure.

This latter class stepped forward, and, by public addresses, and through the press, exerted themselves to allay every apprehension of danger. Their efforts were crowned with unparalleled success. A more complete and overwhelming victory over the friends of a radically defective constitution, never was achieved by any body of men in any age.

At two successive elections, by unprecedented majorities, the people declared in favor of the call of a convention; and in confirmation of the judgment of those who had confided so much to the public justice, the very legislature which declared that a convention was demanded, measurably wiped away the last foul stain of emancipation from your statute book. I allude, sir, to the modification of the law of 1833, by the last legislature of Kentucky.

No sooner had the act of 1833 been modified, than the emancipation party in the state seemed to have received a new impetus. In some parts of the state they declared in favor of engrafting upon the new constitution the provisions of that law; in other parts they declared in favor of leaving the constitution open upon that subject, and for perpetual agitation until the law was restored or some policy of emancipation adopted. Backed by many powerful minds in the state, occupying high places in the public confidence, during the last summer that party came to the charge with an apparent well-founded hope of success. They held a convention at this capital, displayed their colors, and in some sections of the state inscribed upon it this execrable motto: "If we can't force the strong to bow at our feet, we will throw our weight in favor of the weak," and thus disgrace the state by securing an imbecile constitutional convention.

Under circumstances like these I was nominated—without distinction of party, in a national point of view—as a candidate for the seat I now have the honor to hold on this floor. In accepting that nomination, I avowed my unalterable hostility to the principles of the law of 1833, either in the new constitution or in our statutes, together with every species or description of emancipation whatever. Thus going forth, as I believed armed with truth, and fired with the love of equal justice, I was placed in my present position.

When I examined the returns, after the August election, I felt satisfied, from the political complexion of the delegates returned, that the confidence of the pro-slavery party had not been misplaced, and that the relation that existed between master and slave would in no wise be disturbed. I had supposed, Mr. President, that there would not be twenty dissenting voices in the convention to securing to the citizen, by constitutional guaranty, the right to bring into this state, for his own use, property from another state. Under this conviction, I consented to that part of the report from the committee on the legislative department which so changed the present constitution as to allow to cities a representation in the senate of the state upon the basis of "qualified voters." When that section came up for action in convention, I made a few remarks in its favor; but, sir, when upon further examination I ascertained that the law of 1833 had invariably received its warmest support from the existing cities, and such points upon the Ohio river as will, in the course of a short period, grow up into cities, I deemed it but just to my constituents, and to the whole pro-slavery party in the state to pause, and give no further assistance to such an increase of power in the law-making department of the government, until the rights of property were secured against invasion. Influenced by considerations of this sort—believing that in no other way could I redeem my solemn pledges to my confiding constituents, and carry out my own convictions of propriety and justice, I offered a substitute for the section which conferred this additional power upon cities. By my substitute I allowed a city as many as two senators, when her voting population would justify it; whereas under the present constitution she is entitled to none. At the same time, I provided that the citizens of the state should be secured in the right of importing slaves for their own use, under certain regulations and restrictions. I did this with a view, that whilst a power hostile to slave importation was strengthened, it would be impotent to do mischief to my constituents. Before the final vote was taken upon the section to which I have referred, I saw indications of disapprobation of the substitute I had proposed, and in some instances, from quarters where I had least expected it.

I could never get a vote on my substitute. By some strange fatality it was never in order, and it slept the sleep of death upon your table. Its spirit was resurrected this morning, but was again folded in the cold embrace of defeat. The vote was ultimately taken upon the original section without amendment, and it passed. I voted against it. I saw at a glance that you had strengthened that party in the state who had always favored the law of 1833, and I believed that unless the rights for which I had contended were secured by constitutional provision, that law would again disgrace the state in less than three years. It was then, Mr. President, that I cast about for some plan to avert the impending calamity. I availed myself of the thought and investigation of my esteemed friend from Caldwell, (Mr. Machen.) I examined the most accredited authorities, upon the laws which govern population, its increase and diminution, and I found it to be the concurrent testimony of all countries, in all ages, that a people spread over a large territory of country, and engaged in agricultural pursuits, increase their population in a much greater ratio, than those confined to cities, and pent up in narrow circles. From these high authorities, and the very nature of things, I knew that there must be more qualified voters (in proportion to the white population) in cities than in the rural districts. I knew it, for the reasons, among many others, which I assigned a few days since in this convention. No one can shut his eyes to the fact, that hundreds, yea thousands flock to our cities and engage in day labor, whose income will not justify them in bringing, or in accumulating a family, nor do the morals of cities generally impose restraints so rigid as to encourage marriage.

In the country the case is different. Both sexes, as soon as they arrive at sufficient age, enter into the matrimonial state and soon become tax payers and the heads of families. Not more than one in ten, fifteen, or twenty, who are engaged in labor upon your streets, your wharves, and in your heavy manufacturing establishments in cities, have families at all; whilst if "qualified voters" be retained as the basis of representation, they in a short time are enumerated, not only in ascertaining the number of representatives to which a county, city, or town may be entitled, to the exclusion of the wives, daughters, and sons of our sturdy farmers, but they actually control the election of those representatives at the ballot box. To be added to these, sir, all the young men, men without families, engaged in mercantile pursuits, and laborers employed upon your public works.

I but assert a fact known to all, that a country life is more conducive to the connubial state than a city life; that with a given number, population will increase more rapidly where the institution of marriage is encouraged, than where it is not. The experience of past ages comes down to us pregnant with incontestible evidences of the truth of this declaration. Then, with a knowledge of the further fact, that the immigration to cities was composed principally of male adults, I offered the resolution which recognizes white inhabitants as the true basis, believing that to be the only means by which the rural districts, or agricultural portions of the state, and particularly their peculiar institutions, could be shielded from the overshadowing power of the cities, and many of the Ohio river counties in the legislature. The number of slaves at those points is already greatly disproportioned to the number in most other parts of Kentucky, and with few exceptions, the number of women and children is much below the number of male adults, the latter of whom flock thither from the neighboring free states to engage in the labors of exportation and importation, in building ships, steamboats, flatboats, and other craft; in wood chopping, and in making actual or temporary improvements in navigation.

I think I cannot be mistaken, when I state, here in my place, that the basis of white population, as I have proposed, will accomplish the end at which I aim, and meet the approbation of ninety-nine hundredths of the true pro slavery party in this glorious commonwealth.

Mr. President, I am aware that what is called the "blue grass" section of the state has been called upon to resist the proposed basis of representation. It has been argued that upon the basis of white population, they lose a part of their political influence and power in the law-making branch of the government. To some extent this is true; but it is equally, if not more certainly true, that they must lose as much, if not a greater amount of their power, if the basis of "qualified voters" shall be established; and what is still worse for them, if the latter basis shall be adopted, the power which leaves the blue grass region will be transferred to that very portion of the state, in which their slave property (upon the security of which depends their pecuniary salvation,) will be rendered less secure.

There is no basis except the basis of "federal numbers," which can enable that part of the state to retain its present power, and in all candor, I submit to their sense of justice, and their sense of self-preservation, if it be not best to leave the permanent security of their slave property in the hands of the rural districts, than in the hands of the cities and such counties bordering upon the free states, as may in a short period be supplied in population by those states, and who are now, many of them, leaning to emancipation. Sir, it is for the representatives of that portion of the state, to make their own choice. That they will make a judicious choice—one consistent with the preservation of their rights, and their best interests, I will not allow myself to doubt for one moment.

Mr. President, there is yet another great principle that enters into this question of fixing the basis of representation. The fact does exist, that you have so changed the old constitution as to give to cities and towns an increased power in the state legislature. I have assumed the fact that the basis proposed by me, will operate as a check upon that increased power. Now, sir, suppose you refuse this restraint upon the increased and growing power of cities and towns in the law-making body. Have gentlemen weighed the effect, the consequences of this power, unrestrained in legislation? Why, sir, all know, the fact is incontrovertible, that cities subsist principally upon the product or interest of capital; whereas the agricultural districts of the state subsist by labor. Labor and capital have in all ages, and in all countries, been antagonistic the one to the other. Whenever capital gains the ascendancy over labor, in the power to create laws, then it is that you see the avarice of capital; and its demands upon labor become so great in cities, under municipal or police regulations, where capital, by its concentration, wields all power, that the operatives, the laborers, are often constrained to strike for higher wages, abandon the city, suffer indescribable want, or revolutionize. Even here, in our own America, where the demands of capital have not been gratified by legal plunder, as in the old world, reducing thousands, and tens of thousands, to a degree of destitution, want, and starvation, at the very contemplation of which humanity sickens, and from which the most savage heart would turn, if not with pity, with loathing and disgust—even here, within the circle of this glorious Union, we have melancholy instances of mobs springing up in your large cities to resist the oppressions of a monied power, erected into an engine of tyranny by operation of law. This is not at all strange, sir. Capital and monopolies have no souls. Capital sympathizes not with human want, nor feels for human misery, if that want or that misery can but increase its power.

Agricultural labor asks no protection at the hands of law-makers, except to be secured in the enjoyment of the fruits of its honest industry; nor can they render any. No law can stay the hand of a blighting frost, prevent the destructive ravages of the fly, furnish reviving showers to a famishing earth, or preserve the herds of cattle from the effects of disease. Such is not capital. Capital, sir, is always asking, yea, and when it has power, demanding the prostitution of labor to its iron will.

This principle was illustrated by the resolution of the senior gentleman from the city of Louisville, (Mr. Rudd,) offered in this convention some days since. Whilst upon one occasion he contended with his accustomed ability that cities should be entitled to an equal representation in the senate of the state, he declared by his resolution that laborers who had but little means in the city, should not be allowed to vote upon any question involving city taxation under her corporation laws.

This is no new feature in the history of capital. It only shows its object and design, where it has the legal license to oppress labor by a restriction upon its privileges. I was struck by a remark made by another gentleman from the city of Louisville, a few days ago—I allude to the remarks of my esteemed friend, the younger delegate, (Mr. Preston.) He stated that cities had always taken the lead in struggles for liberty, and instanced several cases. Now, sir, this is true, to a great extent, but this fact does not grow out of any exclusive intrinsic love that the oppressed in cities have for liberty. Not at all. That gentleman would not for one moment maintain that those who inhabit your mountains and your valleys, would be less willing to offer up life, and all that is dear and sacred in existence upon the altar of their country's freedom. No, sir; upon the first sound of the war tocsin, the plow is left in the furrow, and the hardy planter followed by his patriotic offspring rushes to the scene of conflict, there to maintain the honor and glory of his country, or perish with them. Mr. President, if ever the freedom of this people shall be lost, which God in his mercy forbid, the last clang of arms in the deadly conflict will resound from your rural plains, and the last shriek of expiring liberty will reverberate from your mountain tops.

These revolutionary outbreaks in cities may be referred to another and a different cause altogether. They spring from the concentrated power of capital in cities, which by its perpetual oppressions upon, and exactions of labor, reduces the latter to want and misery, and in the despair of destitution the unfortunate sufferers are driven to madness, to insurrection, to rebellion. In many instances, those who engage in those tumultuous outbreaks have no conception of regulated liberty; and hence it is that in a short time you see them blindly following the blazing star of some military genius, who in the end conducts them into a state of despotism and oppression, perhaps almost equal to that from which they had just emerged. Sir, such calamities never mark the cool and deliberate action of a people spread over an agricultural region, secured as they are from the never ceasing, never satisfied requisitions of an accumulated monied influence. When they strike, they move with a matured but determined step, with a thorough knowledge of the end to be attained, and that end is regulated liberty with all its blessings, with all its glories.

Mr. President: in the remarks which I have had the honor to submit to the convention, I have attempted to show that the basis of representation for which I contend is not a novel one in this country.

To "Malthus on population," to which invaluable work I invite the special attention of gentlemen, I am indebted in part for the laws which govern population, and the causes which in all ages and countries either restrain or encourage its increase. I have attempted to show that whilst the basis of qualified voters will increase legislative power in the cities and counties bordering upon the free states, the basis of white population would hold in check that power which in another part of this constitution we have augmented, by strengthening the arm of the rural districts.

I have undertaken to show that the institution of slavery, and the right of the citizen to import that species of property for his own use, would be more secure upon my proposed basis of representation than that contended for by other gentlemen. I have attempted to show that capital is continually striving to enslave labor, and that the means to accomplish this end is increased just in proportion as you shall concentrate it, and give it a preponderance of power in the law-making department of the government.

That cities are reared upon and sustained by capital—that you have increased city representation already in the legislature, and that with the present basis, the day is not far distant when the labor of the state will be brought trembling and in rags at the feet of a monied aristocracy, pampered into power and consequence by those very laws itself shall enact. To avert this calamity to public liberty, to the best interests and dearest rights of a generous constituency, whose kindness has bourn me to every position to which I have aspired, I have offered the basis of white population. If adopted I believe it will avert the evil I apprehend. I trust in God it may do so. Having now said all that I intend to say I leave to the good sense and better judgment of the convention its adoption or rejection as in their wisdom they shall determine.

Mr. MITCHELL. I had hoped when the debate on this question was resumed, as I esteemed it one of great importance, there would have been some discussion of the principles, some answer to the arguments which were advanced by several gentlemen, when the subject was heretofore under consideration, in support of the existing basis. So far, I do not regard the remarks which have been made by either of the delegates who have addressed the convention as tending to that point. It seems to me that this effort to change the basis of representation has resolved itself into a mere struggle for political power; and indeed the gentleman from Simpson who has just resumed his seat, says he was induced, from the fact that the territory along the river was increasing in population, to cast about for some means of enabling the interior rural districts to sustain their influence irrespective, as I understood him, of their political power, regarding the existing basis.

If that be true, if that be the motive which actuates him and others to sustain the principles contained in the resolution which was adopted by this convention, and which I must still esteem to be a novelty—if that be their object, I say, we should look well into the matter. If sir, it has not been shown that injustice will spring out of the continuance of the present basis, if it has not been proved that it is predicated upon false principles, if it has not been demonstrated that the true basis of representation is generated by other influences than the political power of the country, if it has not been disproved that the political power resides in the voting population, then, before we adopt what I still call a novelty, we should look well into it and examine its consequences; we should look around and see whether it is sanctioned by the experience of other countries. Something is due to the existing state of things.

According to the showing of the gentleman himself, his proposition is a novelty. He says twelve states have adopted population as a basis of representation, but that is not the rule prescribed in the resolution offered by the gentleman. His is a complicated proposition. He does not propose population as a basis. You are to abstract, first the aliens. It does not stop there. You are to take out of the free white population those who having been citizens of other states, have not acquired a residence by living one year in Kentucky. Has the gentleman found, among the thirty states of this Union, a proposition tallying with his? He says there are three states which have adopted the principle upon which Kentucky is represented. Has he shown that one state has adopted his plan? If not, his proposition is a novelty.

To exclude aliens, to exclude a portion of the white inhabitants, nay, to exclude a portion of those who are born within the limits of the United States, and who have come into the state with an avowed purpose of making their residence in it, but have not been living here long enough to entitle them to vote—when you exclude them, and permit a child just born, to be represented—to do that, is, in my judgment to present to this convention, a novelty. But, like the elder gentleman from Nelson, I am disposed to look at a proposition when it comes up, and see what are its intrinsic merits. If I believe it correct, if I regard it as founded on correct principles, and for the good of the country, it receives my support.

One great difficulty growing out of the proposition of the gentleman from Simpson, is, that it places too much power in the hands of a few individuals—those whose business it would be to enumerate the population. They would have in their hands, to some extent, the political destiny of the country. How could frauds, in the enumeration made under such a rule be detected. A hundred, five hundred, nay, a thousand of representative population in some counties might be put down, or abstracted by way of increase or diminution as might suit the purposes of the officer, and yet the fraud could not be detected. There is no check, no means by which this thing could be detected.

But under the simple plan which now exists, if the vote at the polls does not correspond with the voting population reported by the officer, the fraud would be immediately detected, as in the nature of things, the one must nearly approximate to the other. Not alone because opportunity is afforded to practice frauds without detection; not alone because a door is opened wide for the foulest abuses and corruptions to intrude themselves and destroy the purity of our representative system, so essential to popular liberty; not alone because it might change the complexion of political parties irrespective of their strength, and thus defeat the popular will; not alone for these reasons, but for many others, is it objectionable.

I think there are difficulties on all hands which would beset the individuals employed in their efforts to carry out this enumeration. The elder gentleman from Nelson, in speaking of this matter, says there would be no difficulty. All the enumerator would have to do would be to inquire how many children the man or the woman might have. Would it be proper that irresponsible statements, made as these would be, should be assumed to possess statistical accuracy and become the basis on which we should predicate the representation of the state? Are we to place the political power of the state upon so uncertain a foundation?

But the amendment of the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) goes further. The enumerating officer is to investigate and ascertain who are aliens and who are citizens. Is he to take the word of every man he meets as to his citizenship? Must he not examine, in order to exclude aliens, documentary evidence as to whether foreigners are naturalized? Must he not institute enquiries in order to ascertain the identity of the individual holding them, with the one described in the naturalization papers? Must he not be erected into a judge to be able to determine whether these papers are properly authenticated or not, for they are obtained and brought from every section of the Union? Nay, he must go on and inquire as to the residence of every individual; he must know whether that individual has had such a residence as by law may entitle him to vote. Upon this subject he must take testimony—must be empowered to investigate facts, or else he and the country will be left to the vague and frequently untruthful statements of irresponsible persons. These are objections which ought to constitute an insuperable difficulty to this new plan when contrasted with the simple one which now exists.

But the gentleman from Simpson says, that by the laws of population, as derived from the history of nations for ages past, it can be demonstrated that the population of the rural districts is greater in proportion to the voting population than is the population of the cities; and this he assigns as a leading reason for proposing this new basis. Other gentlemen entertain the same opinions. Statistical arguments and tabular statements have been introduced here to prove that the population of the interior comprises rateably a greater number of children; or that the representative population upon the plan proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. Hardin,) is greater in proportion to the number of voters in the interior and rural districts than in the cities and along the river border.

I have made some examination into this subject, the result of which is a decided opinion that no certain and reliable conclusions can be drawn as to the amount of the representative population from the number of children. I believe that it is altogether uncertain what effect would be produced on the distribution of political power by the adoption of the amendment. I believe that it might vary that distribution from year to year as the uncertain tide of population ebbed or flowed, and that there is no fixedness about it. As a proof of this position, I will read from some lists which I have prepared, showing a comparison between the increase and diminution of the voting population in 1847 and 1848, and the like changes in the juvenile population for these years. These lists demonstrate that the children do not increase in the same ratio as the voting population does, and that there is no certain relation between them. Sometimes the voting population falls off, and the number of children increases, and sometimes the number of children falls off, and the voting population increases.

From this list, it will be seen that the counties of Bourbon, Boone, Bath, Caldwell, Casey, Cumberland, Edmonson, Fayette, Fleming, Greenup, Logan, Livingston, Pendleton, Spencer and Union, while they lose in their voting population, increase—and some of them very greatly—in the number of their children. On the other hand, it will be discovered that the counties of Crittenden, Franklin, Floyd, Grant, Hardin, Hancock, Letcher, Lewis, Marion, Marshall, Monroe, Morgan, Rockcastle, Todd, Trimble, Woodford, and Washington show an increase of voters and a decrease of children. It will also be observed, from an examination of the whole table, that it presents so much irregularity, as to forbid the construction of any rule by which the whole population could, with any approximation to accuracy, be estimated from a knowledge of the numbers comprising any particular class or description, or by which the whole could be resolved into its parts, so as to exhibit to us the effect of the new basis proposed, on the distribution of political power.

Table exhibiting a comparison between the increase and diminution of voting population, and the increase and diminution of juvenile population, in the years 1847 and 1848, in each county of Kentucky:

		Voters.		Children.
		Increase.	Decrease.	Increase.	Decrease.
Adair,	1507	55		307
Allen,	1413	185		108
Anderson,	1086	88		72
Boyle,	1136	24		79
Bracken,	1586	76		14
Bullitt,	1160	30		71
Bourbon,	1769		50	118
Barren,	2939	68		228
Breckinridge,	1738	49		245
Boone,	1861		2	295
Breathitt,	588	41		242
Ballard,	726	27		202
Bath,	1823		38	112
Campbell,	1447	165		47
Caldwell,	1859		27	45
Christian,	2132	46		83
Clarke,	1715	50		41

Casey,	937		23	16
Clinton,	807	47		86
Cumberland,	971		14	33
Carter,	908	80		215
Crittenden,	945	40
Calloway,	1206	even		543
Clay,	750	53		136
Edmonson,	646		27	88
Estill,	1011	51		130
Franklin,	1713	120
Fayette,	2584		19	240
Floyd,	961	41
Fleming,	2310		11	167
Fulton,	631	29		163
Gallatin,	818	27		11
Graves,	1576	53		3
Greenup,	1551		1	183
Grant,	1098	47
Grayson,	1127	52		113
Garrard,			13
Green,	2357	44		7
Henderson,	1453		23
Hardin,	2376	45
Hancock,	557	34
Henry,	1849	9		13
Harlan,	661	30		21
Harrison,	2056	55		142
Hickman,	656	23		88
Jessamine,	1323	43		123
Jefferson,	6774	37		41
Johnson,	569	20		66
Kenton,	2559	479		443
Knox,	1091	55		84
Larue,	981	62		74
Letcher,	365	26
Laurel,	777	61		144
Lincoln,	1436	121		111
Lewis,	1324	96
Lawrence,	956	79		76
Logan,	2016		31	161
Livingston,	822		14	77
Muhlenburg,	1529	52		74
Madison,	2549	32		249
Montgomery,	1391	39		155
Mercer,	2093		25
Marion,	1755	45
Marshall,	824	31
McCracken,	735	132		176
Meade,	1022	16		116
Monroe,	1230	78
Morgan,	1225	58
Mason,	2845	116		338
Nicholas,	1713	126		70
Nelson,	2007	40		115
Owen,	1774	47		152
Oldham,	1073	35		99
Owsley,	566	40		339
Perry,	463	6		54
Pulaski,	2305	149		490
Pike,	807	26		7
Pendleton,	1207		7	23
Rockcastle,	798	8
Russell,	916	48		129
Simpson,	919		33
Shelby,	2317	18		41
Scott,	1839	32		497
Spencer,	1003		8	126
Todd,	1382	60
Trigg,	1375	48		45
Trimble,	994	73
Union,	1264		36	759

Woodford,	1255	11		54
Wayne,	1423		13	264
Warren,	2121	21		49
Washington,	1750	78		22
Whitley,	1021	36		241

These statements go to show that there is no certainty from the number of children, as to the entire population, or as to any of its parts. Sometimes we see them falling off while the voters increase, and sometime they increase while the votes fall off; sometimes we find the increase of the one altogether out of proportion with the other description of population, and vice versa; so no inference can be drawn from the data in our possession by which to determine what might be the representative population under the system proposed here. You have no certain basis upon which to predicate a calculation by which you can approximate to anything like accuracy as to the result of this system.

The gentleman from Caldwell presented an array of specious tables with which he attempted to show by a comparison between Louisville and various counties, how Louisville would gain and the counties embraced in his tables would lose under the present system; and how, if the present system were changed, and that embraced in the amendment adopted, Louisville would lose and these counties would gain. I have taken the gentleman's own figures and based my calculations upon them, producing very different results. According to that gentleman's showing, the representative population of Louisville in 1840, when the last census was taken, was 17,161.

By reference to the auditor's report for that year, we find the voting population of Louisville 3,086.

Now take the first block of counties contained in the table comprising Adair, Allen and Barren. The representative population, according to the table, is 26,292, their voting population for the same year is put down in the auditor's report at 4,548. Now institute a proportion as 26,292, the representative population of these counties is to 4,548, their voting population, so is 17,161, the representative population of Louisville to 2,968, the voting population to which Louisville would be entitled. But as Louisville, at that time, had 3,086 voters, she loses by this comparison 118 votes, or not quite four per cent.

Take the second block of counties and institute the same proportion assuming the figures of the gentleman from Caldwell, (Mr. Machen,) and its result as shown in my table, is 145 votes in favor of Louisville, as she would be entitled to 3,231 votes, or nearly five per cent. increase.

In the third block, Henderson, Daviess, Ohio, and Union, pursuing the same course of calculation, Louisville would be entitled to 3,037, or 49 less than her number, about 1½ per cent.

The fourth block, Washington, Marion, Franklin and Anderson, gives Louisville 3,165 votes—a gain of 79, or more than 2½ per cent.

The fifth block, Calloway, Graves, Hickman, McCracken, gives Louisville 2,916, which is a loss of 170, or a little over 5 per cent.

The sixth block, Bourbon, Clarke, Jessamine, and Woodford gives Louisville 3,429, an excess over her actual vote of 455, being upwards of 14 per cent.

The seventh block, Nelson, Shelby, and Spencer, gives Louisville 3,386 voters which is a gain of 300, or about ten per cent.

The eighth, Caldwell, Hopkins, Livingston, and Trigg, give Louisville 2,933, which is a loss of 153, or about five per cent.

The ninth, Wayne, Clinton, Cumberland and Pulaski, give Louisville 2,717, a loss of 369, or about 12 per cent.

The tenth, Christian Todd, and Logan, give Louisville 3,172, a gain of 66, or about  $2\frac{1}{4}$  per cent.

The eleventh block, Madison, Garrard, and Lincoln, give Louisville 3,334, a gain of 248, or about 8 per cent.

The whole table shows an excess of gain over loss of 434 votes in favor of Louisville.

Statement, showing the relative difference between the voting population and the representative population, under the resolution of the gentleman from Simpson, and the effect of this change of basis as applied to the table of the gentleman from Caldwell, calculated from the census of 1840:

Counties.	Voters.	Representative population.
Adair,	1,138	26,292
Allen,	1,033
Barren,	2,377
	4,548
Louisville,	3,086	17,161
	26,292 : 4,548 :: 17,161 : 2,968.
Bracken,	1,134	25,870
Pendleton,	733
Harrison,	1,696
Nicholas,	1,309
	4,872
	25,870 : 4,872 :: 17,161 : 3,231.
Henderson,	1,111	23,374
Daviess,	1,112
Ohio,	1,019
Union,	896
	4,138
	23,374 : 4,138 :: 17,161 : 3,037.
Washington,	1,371	25,812
Marion,	1,369
Franklin,	1,233
Anderson,	789
	4,762
	25,812 : 4,762 :: 17,161 : 3,165.
Calloway,	1,544	26,893
Graves,	1,072
Hickman,	1,225
McCracken,	729
	4,570
	26,893 : 4,570 :: 17,161 : 2,916.
Bourbon,	1,630	26,233
Clarke,	1,461
Jessamine,	1,198
Woodford,	1,153
	5,442
	26,233 : 5,442 :: 17,161 : 3,429.

Nelson,	1,761	24,784
Shelby,	2,199
Spencer,	931
	4,891
	24,784 : 4,891 :: 17,161 : 3,386.
Caldwell,	1,380	28,500
Hopkins,	1,267
Livingston,	1,235
Trigg,	990
	4,872
	28,500 : 4,872 :: 17,161 : 2,933.
Wayne,	1,171	27,405
Clinton,	632
Cumberland,	795
Pulaski,	1,741
	4,339
	27,405 : 4,339 :: 17,161 : 2,717.
Christian,	1,682	24,040
Todd,	1,058
Logan,	1,703
	4,443
	24,040 : 4,443 :: 17,161 : 3,172.
Madison,	2,143	24,730
Garrard,	1,403
Lincoln,	1,294
	4,840
	24,730 : 4,840 :: 17,161 : 3,334.

In this colocation, Louisville, by the new proposition, assuming the census of 1840 as the basis of the calculation, gains aggregately 1,293 votes, Loses aggregately, 859 "

Excess of gain over loss, 434 "

In 1840, as I have before stated, the voting population of Louisville was 3,086, and that of the whole state 108,539, a little over one thirty-fifth of which belonged to Louisville. Her free white population was 17,161, and that of the whole state 590,253—one thirty-fourth part and a fraction less than a half over, belonged to Louisville. So that population would have given her more power than political numbers.

In addition to the foregoing, I have a statement showing that twenty three counties, having a slave population of only 5,191, would be entitled to fourteen representatives, making the qualified voters the basis, but assuming the juvenile population as the basis, and fixing the ratio at 1,834, these same counties would be entitled to sixteen representatives.

	Slaves.	Voters.	Children.
Breathitt,	146	588	966
Clinton,	230	807	1,320
Campbell,	205	1,447	1,974
Carter,	256	908	1,480
Floyd,	167	961	1,599
Harlan,	88	661	1,030
Johnson,	21	569	922
Letcher,	49	365	550

Laurel,	161	777	1,266
Lawrence,	91	956	1,590
Marshall,	221	824	1,344
Morgan,	157	1,225	1,815
Owsley,	99	566	878
Perry,	125	463	762
Pike,	91	807	1,308
Whitley,	155	1,021	1,692
Clay,	448	750	1,340
Estill,	492	1,011	1,583
Grant,	475	1,098	1,395
Grayson,	293	1,172	1,730
Pendleton,	469	1,207	1,072
Rockcastle,	395	798	1,066
Russell,	377	916	1,493
	5,191	19,852(14	30,195(16

This table is exhibited not from any belief that these counties are more inclined to emancipation than other counties of the state, but to meet the assertion that the present basis has an anti-slavery aspect.

These tabular statements which I have prepared with care and accuracy, show that no reliance can be placed upon the number of children, as given in the auditor's report, in digesting a plan for the distribution of political power, and that in stepping off the ground we now occupy, we take a leap in the dark.

The laws of population, as they have been deduced from observation and study of the progress of nations in the old world, or even from the condition of that portion of our own country which lies along the Atlantic slope, and was therefore the earliest peopled, afford no certain criteria by which to estimate the popular growth and increase of a country, so recently settled as Kentucky. Any attempt at analysis, of the component parts of population conducted in accordance with these rules, and predicated upon a knowledge of the numerical whole, would exhibit results, in all probability, at war with the truth. On the other hand, an effort to calculate the entire population from an enumeration of one particular description, or to ascertain the strength of the remaining parts by collation or comparison with such as are known, would be equally futile. The social elements are thrown together too loosely, social combination is too much the result of extraneous agencies to admit of the application of theories eliminated from popular phenomena exhibiting themselves under circumstances altogether different.

This country has increased in population beyond the previous experience of mankind, and is, in this respect, without a parallel among the nations of the earth. Agencies have been at work to bring about these results, which do not exist, and which never did exist, in any other country. It has been the grand rallying point on which immigration from all parts of Europe has centered. Kentucky is even now in the transition state so far as population is concerned. Where is the pioneer race which wrested this country, when it was a wilderness, from the stern grasp of the savage? Where are the strong hands and bold hearts, who, planting the standard of civilization in a virgin soil, clothed in the habiliments of its primeval grandeur, amid the wild war whoop of the merciless Indian and the death groans of his murdered victim, laid the foundations of Kentucky emulvalry? They are gone, sir; they have passed away with the heroic circumstances which generated and developed their noble peculiarities. Their dauntless courage, their peerless daring, their self-sacrificing spirit consecrated in blood, are the proud memories which survive them, and the rich heritage which has descended to their posterity. These are the leaves—the green, the unfading leaves which compose that glorious chaplet that encircles the brow of Kentucky.

They are gone—the race which won this fair land from the savage dominion of nature—a land now teeming with population, now studded with proud cities, whose christian spires pierce the heavens—where is heard the welcome sound of the church-going bell, and where industry and commerce are achieving their wonderful results. They are gone, sir, I say—swept away by the mighty tide of population which has been rolling onward to the far west, and whose waves will continue to roll till they break on the shores of the great Pacific. Here, nothing is stationary. Every swell of the flood brings—not a new generation—but a race as different from the one which preceded it, as one generation is different from another. And now, months and years are accomplishing results in social transformation, which generations and centuries scarcely achieved in the old world. The surging torrent, bearing race after race, and class after class on its heaving breast, rushes onward, and under its resistless influence countless thousands are swept away, to be succeeded by other thousands, who in turn give place to others, and “the cry is, still they come!” Verily, sir, it may be said of us, that the places which now know us, will shortly know us no more, forever.

What though a few may linger on the green islets that gem this sea of population; they stand in a changed and changing scene, themselves unchanged—monuments of the past, strange and curious specimens of an extinct race in the antiquity of progress—Salathiel, who, with the visage of youth bear the impress of age—of age not counted by time, but by the lapse of progress and change.

Our country is unlike any other on the face of the globe. It is, emphatically, a moral, and political, and a social anomaly. Leaping as it were into existence, like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter, fully grown and fully armed, at a period when all Europe was shrouded in political darkness, was down-trodden under the iron heel of conscript patricianism, she dared, in the face of all the adverse circumstances by which she was surrounded, to proclaim the rights of man. A new star arose above the horizon of nations, and flocking myriads, guided by its light, came from the east, as did the wise men of old, to worship at the shrine of this new political divinity, which had been indicated by the rising light. Her onward progress has outstripped the wildest dream of enthusiasm, and no rule has yet been elaborated by which the problem of her destiny can be solved. Her popular increase is not restricted to her own self-creating energies. She draws her resources from the whole area of civilization. Her population is not divided into castes. Hereditary serfdom and hereditary degradation, from which no energy, no ability can escape, are unknown. Men here do not come into the world with the stamp of their destiny upon them. We have not among us those who are born peasants, and therefore must die peasants; nor is it the case here, as in Europe, that men, born in the crowded precincts of a city, must almost necessarily breathe its fetid atmosphere during their whole lives. The scope for enterprise is so great, and the means of living so easily attained, that men may vary their locations or their pursuits at the prompting of inclination, or even caprice. Hence mobility is a striking characteristic of our population, and hence our cities, unlike the cities of the old world, resemble those straits hard-by the pillars of Hercules, where there are two currents, the one setting to the sea and the other to the ocean. The country is continually pouring into the city and the city pouring out its population upon the country. These changes are going on so constantly as to defy all effort at calculation, based on the statistics of other countries, or even those of our own.

Why, then, should gentlemen talk about Malthus, and about the laws of population? Why should they attempt to establish a rule, the effect of which cannot be anticipated? Why take this leap in the dark? Why depart from the known and simple, to adopt the complicated, the difficult, the untried, and the unknown? Shall we abandon the firm ground on which our fathers stood—upon which they reared their representative system, that powerful element in popular liberty? a system so simple, and so beautifully appropriate—simple, because easily ascertained and promptly acted upon—beautifully appropriate, as exhibiting at one view, not only the measure of political power, but the just scope of representation. Until something can be shown as a reason for abandoning the high ground which our fathers took when they framed the present constitution—a ground which placed them far in advance of the other states—when they declared the great truth, that political power, which resides in political numbers, should be the measure of representation—I say, unless it can be shown that that ground is false, I shall protest, by my vote, against the change.

And then the convention adjourned.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1849.

Prayer by the Rev. STUART ROBINSON.

APPORTIONMENT.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. President: I desire this morning to present a minority report from the committee, raised by a resolution presented some days since, by the honorable gentleman from Nelson, (Mr. C. A. Wickliffe.) The report of that committee is so objectionable, so unequal in its operations, that I cannot find it in my heart to sustain it. I feel satisfied that if the report which I now offer, and which I intend at the proper time to offer as a substitute for the report of the majority, could be adopted, the question as to "basis of representation," would be at once settled. I voted for a resolution some days since, which by some is called the "baby basis;" and so far as I can see, there seems to be great difficulty in the house coming to any definite action on the subject. I would be willing to compromise upon this subject, and if my report shall be adopted, I think it would be perhaps the most satisfactory arrangement that at present can be secured. I wish it to lie on the table. There is no use in its being printed, as it can be had by any gentleman in the old constitution.

The report was as follows:

Sec. — Representation shall be equal and uniform in this commonwealth, and shall be forever regulated by the number of qualified electors therein. In the year eighteen hundred and , and every fourth year thereafter, an enumeration of all the free male inhabitants of the state above twenty-one years of age, shall be made in such manner as shall be directed by law. The number of representatives shall, in the several years of making these enumerations, be so fixed as not to be less than seventy-five, nor more than one hundred; and they shall be apportioned for the four years next following, as near as may be, among the several counties and towns in proportion to the number of qualified electors; but where a county may not have a sufficient number of qualified electors, to entitle it to one representative, and when the adjacent county, or counties, may not have a residuum, or residuums, which when added to the small county, would entitle it to a separate representation, it shall be in the power of the legislature to join two or more together for the purpose of sending a representative: Provided, That where there are two or more counties adjoining, which have residuums, over and above the ratio then fixed by law, if said residuums, when added together, will amount to such ratio, in that case, one representative shall be added to that county having the largest residuum: And provided further, That the general assembly, in making said apportionment, shall commence either at the county of Fulton, or the county of Greenup.

The minority report was laid upon the table.

MODE OF REVISING THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. TALBOTT offered the following resolution, and moved that it be laid on the table and printed:

Resolved, That whenever two-thirds of both branches of the general assembly shall deem it necessary to call a convention to revise this constitution, or agree in the necessity of making a specific change, alteration, or amendment, such proposed call for a convention, or specific change, alteration, or amendment, shall be read and passed by a majority of two-thirds of each house respectively, on each day, for three several days, and for two successive sessions. Public notice shall then be given thereof by the secretary of state, at least six months preceding the next general election, at which the qualified electors shall vote directly for or against such call of a convention, or specific change, alteration, or amendment; and if it shall appear that a majority of all the qualified electors in the state, shall have voted for such proposed call of a convention, or specific change, alteration, or amendment, then, but not otherwise, the general assembly, at its next session, shall insert the specific change, alteration, or amendment, so approved, as part of this constitution, or call a convention, so voted for, to consist of as many members as there shall be in the house of representatives, and no more; to be chosen in the same manner, at the same places, and at the same time that representatives are to be voted for, by citizens entitled to vote for representatives, who shall meet within three months after said election, for the purpose of revising, changing, or amending this constitution: Provided, however, That no specific change, alteration, or amendment, shall ever be made to any article, section, or part of a section in this constitution, involving the right of the citizen in his life, liberty, or property, without the call of a convention.

Mr. TALBOTT. I have never been in the habit of public speaking, Mr. President, and it is always embarrassing to me to attempt it. But it is peculiarly so on the present occasion, as I am conscious of my inability to do that justice to this great subject, which I feel its importance demands. I would not attempt to say a word at this time, in favor of the proposition presented in the resolution just submitted, but for the fact that I know there exists, in the minds of delegates, a prejudice against this mode of amendment which is wholly unfounded and erroneous. I have the honor to represent a district here where the two great parties—the emancipation and the pro-slavery party—have as much zeal, energy, and discrimination, as any other; and wherever position and proposition has been, throughout the late canvass for seats on this floor, as cautiously and as thoroughly investigated and scrutinized, as in any section of the State. After I had been a candidate for about five months, and after many warm and enthusiastic speeches had been made on both sides, party spirit aroused to the highest pitch, victory desired by all, every mind upon the alert, I was called on to give my positions in writing. I did so. I assumed the position set forth in this resolution. I was immediately assailed by my opponents, and by the whole emancipation party, as drawing invidious distinctions, and granting exclusive privileges. But, sir, before the subject had been investigated a week, there seemed to be a unanimous concurrence of opinion among pro-slavery men, that the ground was not only just and fair to all parties, but that it was the strongest pro-slavery ground in the world; and I was elected, beating my emancipation competitor upwards of four hundred votes, with other pro-slavery candidates upon the track. This much, sir, I have thought it necessary to premise, before I proceeded to the full investigation of the subjects embraced in the resolution, in order to show that the same objections do not lie everywhere to this mode of amendment, as seems to rest in the minds of some gentlemen in this house. I desire, Mr. President, to embrace, in the remarks I am about to make, the whole ground occupied, and the plan contemplated by the emancipationists, for the abolition of slavery in Kentucky without compensation; and show, if I can, as briefly as possible, how, by incorporating any portion of that plan in the constitution we are about to frame, the institution of slavery, as I believe, will be placed in their hands and subject to their disposal. Their plan is, first to get inserted in the new constitution the law of '33; then specific amendments upon all subjects, or the old mode of calling a convention. I know, sir, there will be in some of my remarks a slight digression from the point immediately before the mind, as presented in this resolution; but as I will not be able to show its full force and effect without, I hope the house will indulge me for a very short time, while I attempt to examine their whole ground.

Before I proceed, sir, to show the great advantages, as I think, to be derived to the pro-slavery interest, by adopting the mode of amendment indicated in the resolution I have had the honor to present, I will endeavor to show, very briefly, some of the very great disadvantages that will, in my judgment, necessarily grow out of the adoption of any other mode, hitherto presented. Take then, first, specific amendments upon all subjects. Say that your constitution may be amended at any time specifically upon any and every subject. Say it shall require a majority, and if you please, say the largest majority; say two-thirds of the legislature and a majority of all the qualified voters in the state; and what, sir, would be the practical result? Put, then, a clause in your constitution, that slaves shall not be taken from their owners, except upon any condition you please—put it upon the hardest terms. Then, sir, make it amendable specifically upon all subjects, and what would your prohibitory clause avail? What protection would it extend to the slave property, or how would it tend, in the slightest degree, to the suppression of agitation upon that subject? Put any condition you please in the constitution in regard to slavery. Throw around it such guards as you deem best; protect it in any way you think proper; say they shall not be taken for one hundred or one thousand years; require emancipation upon the hardest possible terms. The very moment you admit the constitution may be amended specifically upon all subjects, by even the largest majority, you have opened the field for and invited the agitation of the very question we came here to settle, and if possible, to place beyond the reach of controversy.

Say what you please sir, in the constitution about slavery, but the very moment you agree and insert in it, this mode of amendment, you have done all the emancipationists now wish or ask, and you yield for ever, the question, the great question, the question I never intend to yield, that they may take our slaves without our consent, or without compensation. Sir, the most ultra emancipationist in Kentucky, has never asked, has never dared to ask, to set the negroes free, upon any plan, or at any time whatever, unless a majority of the whole people of the commonwealth were in favor of it. And I ask you sir, if it would make any difference with them, or if it would protect the slaveholder for a moment, no matter what was said about it in the constitution, if they had the privilege to change that clause, as soon as they could procure the majority required by the constitution. Not a moment sir. It is all they ask. They have never asked more than to say, they might free the slaves, if they could get a majority in favor of it, and a clause of this sort would certainly give them that privilege. Sir, what is the difference in effect, between saying to a gentleman, "I will not invite you into my house," and saying "the door is open, you can do as you please about going in." What is the difference I ask, between saying to the north, we will not put it in the constitution, that you shall set our negroes free, but here is the constitution with a clause, that you may change it as you please. What I ask you sir, would be the difference in effect, between the two propositions, in their practical results? No difference whatever. Then sir, the mode of specific amendment upon all subjects is objectionable on another account. It would invite discussion, agitation, and eternal contention, on this most dangerous and exciting subject, the subject of slavery. All officers, now, are to be elected by the people, directly. The emancipation party throughout the state would therefore have their candidates in the field for every office in the commonwealth. Their plan would be, to keep up agitation, for organization, and organization for effect and ultimate success. Hence they would keep a candidate in the field everywhere, in order to circulate their abolition and inflammatory documents throughout the state, and thus excite discontent and insubordination on the part of the slave, and insecurity and uncertainty upon the part of the master. This sir, would be their plan under this clause. I ask you sir, if it would not be so? If it would, how long I ask you Mr. President, could we live under such a state of things? Let us suppose a state of case, sir. Let us suppose for a moment that ministers of the gospel, of the best talents and first respectability in the country, to be constantly preaching, in private and from the pulpit, to the master and to the slave, to one and to all, that slavery is a sin in the sight of God, a great moral and social evil, a corroding cancer, and ruinous to the best interests of the state? Then sir, in addition to that, suppose the abolitionist to be thus licensed, going forth and sowing broadcast, throughout the length and breadth of the land, the seeds of dissension, insurrection, rebellion and revolution, into the ignorant minds and corrupt hearts of our slaves. Teaching them that they were born as free as their masters—that they were held in bondage improperly, and by no other law than the law of tyranny and oppression—that God, religion and the abolitionists, were all for them—to strike, and strike now for their liberty—that heaven would smile upon, and crown them with success, and that the whole civilized world would justify their effort at freedom upon any terms and at all hazards? Sir, I ask you how long we could live under such a state of case? Where would be the guaranty for human life? Where the security and protection of property? There would be no security, no protection. The slave who is now in many instances your best friend, might then and thus be induced and stimulated to become your deadliest enemy. Insurrection, rebellion and revolution would ensue, and the whole affair would wind up in a tragedy too horrible even to contemplate—one that would cause even the stoutest heart to shrink and weep over the bloody scene. I ask you sir, and I ask this house, if they will, when they have come up here to settle this great question, and have it in their power to do so, thus afford to the emancipationist, the men and money to prosecute a war of extermination against an institution, involving an interest of sixty millions of dollars, and the lives and destiny of two hundred thousand slaves. I urge you sir, and I urge this house to think seriously upon this subject before you act. There is much to be gained, or much to be lost by our decision upon this mode of amendment.

Now sir, I will consider but for a moment another mode of amendment. The mode adopted in our present constitution.

The objection I have to the mode there prescribed is, that combinations will be formed between the fragments of all parties, similar to those that have called this convention, and thus emancipationists will be able to form new and strong alliances, by running candidates for every office in the country, and keep up the same ceaseless agitation, as under the mode of specific amendments upon all subjects or the open clause—and by coalescing and fraternising with all the fragments of all the different minority parties in the country, they would soon be able to call a new convention, with the full determination and for the express purpose upon their part, of destroying the very interest we came here to secure. Is there any way, do you ask sir, to prevent this? There is a way to settle this question in my judgment, and settle it forever without doing injustice to any, while we distribute equal justice to all parties; and that is by inserting, in the new constitution the specific mode of amendment which I have had the honor to present. By incorporating in the constitution a clause to amend its specifically upon all subjects, not involving the right of life, liberty, or property, upon the recommendation of at least two thirds of both branches of the legislature for two successive sessions, and then a direct vote of all the qualified electors in the state, a majority of all voting for it, you would give sufficient strength and stability to the constitution, upon all other subjects, and put to rest forever, the great question of slavery. The emancipationist could then free the negroes, at any time, with compensation, without a convention, and they never should, and they never shall, by my consent or my vote, free them without compensation, with a convention. I ask you, sir, and I ask the house if this is not the time to settle this question? How, then sir, do you ask me, will this mode accomplish that great and so much desired end. Why sir, if you have the constitution amendable in the manner indicated, the politician would never want a convention, he could accomplish his object by specific amendment. The anti-elective party would want no convention, they could accomplish their end in the same way. No minority party or fragment of a party, would wish a convention, for they could not hope to gain anything by a convention, which could not be obtained without. The pro-slavery man would not wish a convention, for he could not possibly gain by it; he would have everything to lose and nothing to gain. For slavery would thus be settled, and settled forever, without a convention. Who then sir, would want a convention? There certainly would be no necessity for any. The emancipationist would not and could not complain, unless he wanted our slaves for nothing. They could reach them at any time, when they could get a majority in favor of paying a fair and full compensation for them. Surely, sir, there is no one here who wishes them freed without. Sir, while I might be willing to give them up at any time with compensation, I would not be willing to say that they might call a convention in two thousand or two hundred thousand years, to take them for nothing without the consent of the owner. Where then the necessity of a convention? Where the objection to this mode of amendment? How could a convention be called? There could be no improper combinations, for none would be necessary. All could reach their ends, except the emancipator, by specific amendment. And so could the emancipator if he would only pay—he never should without. Will it not then, I ask, settle this question forever, and settle it justly.

But, sir, I have been told that this mode of amendment is objectionable—that it draws an invidious distinction between the different interests in the country. Sir, I deny that it makes any such invidious distinction. It places every man of every party, and every principle of every party, and every species of property of every party, upon an equal footing in the new constitution. Is that wrong, sir; is that drawing invidious distinction? Is it drawing invidious distinctions, to say to the people of this commonwealth, that if they do not like electing judges by the people, you may change that mode to some other you think better, and to the emancipationist, you shall not have the negroes, bought and paid for by the toil and sweat of the owner, unless you compensate him for them? Is that drawing invidious distinctions? I think not, sir. I think the man who comes to me and demands all the property I have, without money and without price, and at the same time declares that the constitution should and does protect all his; I think, sir, that is the man who is drawing invidious distinctions, and drawing them with a vengeance. I ask you if it is right to take a man's property of any kind for nothing? Is it doing unto others as you would have others do unto you? Is it loving your neighbor as yourself? Is it doing good for evil, or evil for good? Is it not, sir, a total perversion and subversion of all God's holy law? Is it not, sir, after men have formed a social, religious, and political compact, and pledged themselves to each other to protect every man, in life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness, a violation of, and an outrage to every principle of moral, religious, and political justice, under such circumstances, to deprive the citizen of his property of any kind without his consent, or without compensation? I ask you, sir, if it would not be an outrage of all a man's natural and legal rights, thus to strip him of the fruit of the toil and sweat of many years. It may chance to be, sir, that a father dies and leaves two sons; to the one he gives ten thousand dollars in money, to the other ten thousand dollars in lands. The one who gets the money vests it all in slaves, the other retains his in lands, all acquired and held under the same government and laws, and paying tax for the same guarantee of protection. Now, sir, suppose the majority, under a wild and fanatical delusion, start up, and in a freak, impelled by the spirit of revolution, declare that it is wrong for any man to hold the right, title, or possession to any particular tract or parcel of land whatever, and that as far as land is concerned, it shall all be in common, and actually rob this man of his land without his consent, or without compensation, and leave his brother in the full enjoyment of all his slaves. I ask you, sir, if this would be right? Suppose then, sir, we reverse it. Suppose the same majority under the influence of the same mad delusion, rise up in a similar freak, impelled by the same spirit of revolution, and declare that slavery is a sin, a great moral and social evil, a blight and mildew on the body politic, and ruinous to the best interests of the state; then swear that every slaveholder should surrender up his slaves without money and without price, immediately or prospectively, and actually take the slaves from the other man, and leave his brother in the full enjoyment of all his lands. I ask you, sir, if this would not be wrong? Would it not be a violation of every thing that is pure in religion, correct in morals, and just in government. If so, then I ask sir, where is the injustice done, where the invidious distinction drawn by my mode of amending the constitution we are about to frame? It draws no such invidious distinction. It puts all lives in the same category, all liberty in the same category, all property in the same category, all parties upon an equality, and settles forever the much vexed and all absorbing question of slavery. It will put it forever beyond the reach of the emancipation party unless they change their position, and go for emancipation with compensation. If they do this, sir, then I say yea and amen. We live in a republican government, where, if there is no violation of right, no violation of justice, no compromise of truth and principle, no outrage of morality and religion, no sacrifice of human life or human liberty, majorities should rule, and all should submit without a murmur.

I do hope Mr. President, the house will sustain the proposition I have had the honor to present. But while I am up, I will say a few words upon another branch of this subject—the law of '33. I am opposed to its insertion into the constitution. I hope it will not be done. I do not believe sir, that public sentiment demands it. The people, so far as I know anything about public sentiment, desire to see in the constitution, neither the law of '33, nor the proposition of the gentleman from Simpson, (Mr. Clarke.) I think, so far as both propositions are concerned, they desire to see the constitution left as it is. There has been much said here Mr. President, in the course of debate, about parties and party ties—about the whig, and about the democratic party—the convention and the anti-convention party—the elective and anti-elective party. There has been sir, some crimination and recrimination, all of which I have been pained to witness; but sir, I hope, before this convention adjourns, to see all the belligerents convert their spears into pruning hooks, their swords into plowshares, and study war no more. I hope to see the lion lie down with the lamb and the leopard with kid, so that when we adjourn and submit our work to the people, we may come up, as one man with one voice and one hand, against the common enemy, to the labor of our hands. I trust Mr. President, that while we all know there are parties existing in the country at war upon the great principles that separate them, I hope sir, there is but one party and one feeling here—a party and a feeling for the country—a party determined to secure to every citizen in the commonwealth, protection in his life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness. So far as it concerns myself Mr. President, I came here untrammelled by party ties, and unbiased by party prejudices. I have no spleen to vent, no political ambition to gratify; no interest to secure but the rights of our citizens, no end in view but the happiness of our people, and nothing to serve but our common country. I stand here sir, pledged to no party but the people, to no being but God, to no principle but truth and justice. I stand pledged to do that which I think is right in itself, and I intend to discharge that pledge firmly and fearlessly, regardless of all party ties. I intend to do nothing for which I do not expect, and am not willing to be held responsible here and hereafter. Sir, I feel, as I trust every delegate here feels, ready and willing to lay my hand upon my heart and ratify and confirm the just judgment of our blessed redeemer when he said, "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." These sir, are the motives by which I hope to be actuated—these the principles by which I intend to be governed. We have a great task to perform, important interests to secure. We are here, not as school-fellows, to decide upon some favorite amusement—not as lawyers to wrangle and dispute about silly and absurd technicalities—nor yet as politicians to divide and devour the spoils. We are heresir, as men, I trust as patriotic christian men, with the fear of God before our eyes and the love of our common country in our hearts, to decide questions at once great and grave, exciting and absorbing, and fraught with the most important consequences to ourselves and our posterity. Questions, which in their bearings and effects, not only involve the interest and future destiny of our own state, and of this great republic; but sir, questions which involve also, the future destiny, for weal or for woe, now and forever, of two whole, distinct and separate races of men. Surely then sir, we should not talk about party spirit or party ties; but should come up to the charge in this peaceful struggle for truth and justice, regardless of party, coolly and calmly, with none other than the spirit of kindness, moderation, and forbearance. I know sir, the great questions of man's natural and legal rights of civil and religious liberty, of slavery and emancipation, or the abolition of slavery, are questions at all times fraught with the deepest and most intense interest; and when discussed by persons, and in a community interested on both sides, are calculated to produce the deepest and most dangerous excitement.

But, sir, if ever there were men who should, if ever there was a subject upon which they should, and if ever there was a time when they should be cool and calm, upright and honest, we are the men, this is the subject, and now is the time. By our decisions here, we may fix the fate and seal forever the destiny of both the Anglo-Saxon and the African race. Kentucky is the great key-stone southern slave state. It is here, sir, sooner or later, the great battle is to be fought between abolitionists, emancipationists, and pro-slavery men. The banner has been unfurled already, and although the passing breeze has, for the present, rolled it out of sight, it still rustles in the distance. We should let no syren song of peace on the one hand, or note of policy on the other lull us to sleep on our post. We should come up to the charge like men. If the proposition I have submitted draws an invidious distinction, it is to meet an invidious distinction. There can, therefore, be nothing improper or impolitic in it in any aspect of the case. Emancipate the slaves of Kentucky, and you ruin and shake hands with the south forever. Incorporate the law of 1833, or the resolutions of the gentleman from Madison, which were offered some weeks since, and you have taken the first step towards it. Insert then specific amendments upon all subjects, and the work is complete. It is all that is asked now. If they want more, give them these and they will soon get all they want. I know honorable delegates protest and say it is not so; but they are mistaken, and the emancipationists know it. They know, if you wish to dry up the stream, you must first cut off the fountain. If you wish to abolish slavery in Kentucky, you must first stop the importation which the honorable delegate's resolution proposed to do. Get it a fixed fact in the constitution that no more slaves at any time, or under any circumstances, are to be purchased and brought here, and you have unlocked the door of the ante-chamber. Then, sir, insert specific amendments on all subjects, and you have completed the entrance, and thrown open the halls. This is all the emancipationists now want—this is all they are now contending for. Give them these, and what then would be their policy. Why, sir, give these, and, as I have said before, you yield the principle, and settle forever the question that they may take the slave without the pay or consent of the owners, provided they can only get the majority required to change the constitution. Give these and what then would be the policy. They would at once go to work to secure the desired majority, and get it they would. And how? Why sir, the first step would be agitation—agitation at home and agitation abroad—agitation in the north—agitation in the south—agitation in the east—and agitation in the west. Why sir, all this agitation—this constant, ceaseless, eternal agitation? To produce first disobedience and insubordination on the part of the slaves, and then to let the envying abolition world know that Kentucky was in the market, and could, in this respect, be purchased for nothing—yes sir, for nothing. The two clauses referred to would give the money. All then they would want would be the men. Yes sir, Kentucky with the law of 1833 and the open clause in her constitution, with all her slaves, though allied to the south by both interest and institutions, would thus be offered to the north, without money and without price. What sir, do you suppose would be their decision? They would come here not by scores, not by thousands, but by scores of thousands, and in ten years, in my judgment, Kentucky would be, at least, on the very verge of a free state, and that, sir, without any sort of compensation for the slave. Who, sir, I ask, could or would be willing to live under such excitement for ten years. You may say there will be no excitement, you may cry peace, peace, but, sir, there will be no peace under the circumstances I have named. Gentlemen may think so, but they are mistaken. Sir, as I said a few days since, there is a party in this country—a formidable party—a party weak in numbers it is true—but powerful in intellect. A party organized, skilful, enthusiastic, and determined on the abolition of slavery in Kentucky. Give them the law of 1833, as a fixed fact, and then specific amendments on all subjects in the new constitution, and my word for it, sir, the days of slavery would be numbered in our state. If so the whole south might clothe herself in mourning and sound the knell of slavery. Adopt these measures, and we will soon get rid of our slaves, willing or unwilling, pay or no pay. Sir, to borrow a term from my honorable friend from Madison, a homely term—a term in which there is very little music—and under the head of agitation, they would “bedevil” us so, that we would soon be willing to give up our slaves, and be glad to get rid of them. This is their object, and these their measures for attaining it. I will, therefore, sir, vote against them both.

